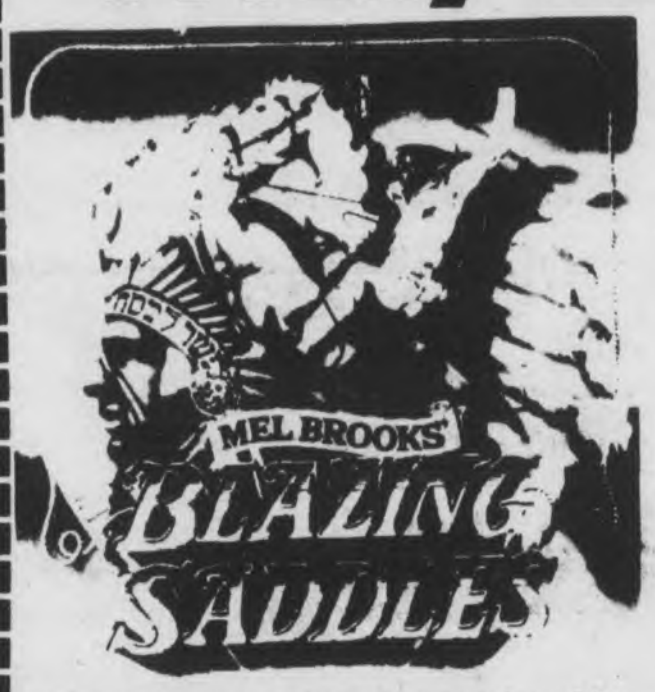
About 250 college students from 30 colleges in Kansas and Oklahoma are expected to compete in the event, which is sponsored by the K-State Rodeo Club. Competition will begin at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday and then again at 2 p.m. Sunday.

Saddles will be awarded to the all-around cowboy and cowgirl, said Bob Clore, assistant professor of art and regional NIRA representative. Silver belt buckles will be presented to the individual event winners and a sculptured plaque to the top university team.



One main event of the rodeo will be the "Battle of the Sexes," on Saturday night. Don Paustian and Mark Eaton, disc jockeys at KJCK radio in Junction City will be challenging Jackey Jeffery, senior in art, and Karol Leggett, sophomore in elementary education, in a bull and bronc riding contest.

OTHER events include the crowning of the rodeo queen and fraternity and sorority students competing in calf dressing.

This year's rodeo is dedicated to the memory of Marvin Smith, owner of Smith's Stables in Manhattan, Clore said. Smith, who died this month, supported the rodeo club by allowing it to board horses in his stables. He also allowed practices in his arena, Clore said.

Mizlou—Dinky's stinky network

Extra points

Television has succeeded again.

The Mizlou Network (a clever acronym for Missouri-Louisiana, according to high-placed sources), covered the finals of the National Invitational Tournament on Channel 41.

The Mizlou people succeeded in turning a potentially exciting game between Big Ten and in-state rivals Purdue and Indiana into a yawn festival. The network can be commended for one thing—it tried, and at least the game was on some TV station.

However, they didn't try hard enough. Even though the game was won by Indiana on a last-second shot, I found myself more interested in trying to extract a popcorn hull from between my first and second molars (upper right).

In the first place, the announcers made the game at least as exciting as listening to a police scanner in Wamego.

THEY ADDED insights into the strategy and background that could only be matched by commentary from Purdue's Joe Barry Carroll—and he wasn't talking to the press (presses don't listen very well, anyway).

The play-by-play sportscaster was adequate. He did a fine job in his Walter Cronkite-type voice. However, the color man's commentary was less than stupendous.

I think his name was Walter "Dinky" Zeman, a former third-string wingman from the Wabaunsee County Cavaliers, a minor league field hockey team.

For instance, Zeman's comments were often slightly irrelevant, as in the following segment (as near as I can remember):

Fred Garvin (male...no no, play-by-play man): Smith takes a 17-footer. Rebound by Carroll. He goes back up—two points. Boy, that Carroll is powerful inside, Dinky.

Zeman: Huh?

Garvin: Oh well. Indiana's ball. Woodson drives the lane. Beautiful move! That ties it at 47.

Zeman: Yes, Fred, this just shows the dominance of ACC basketball.

Garvin: These are Big Ten teams, Dinky.

Zeman: Big what?

Garvin: Big Ten. You know, the Big Ten Conference.

Zeman: Oh yeah. That's one thing I wanted to ask you about, Arnold.

Garvin: Fred.

Zeman: Oh yeah. Well, anyway, there must be more than ten big conferences. I mean, there are hundreds of teams, so there are surely 15 or 20 big conferences, not just ten. It really makes me mad when I keep reading about that. In fact, those guys in Kansas and Oklahoma say there are only eight big conferences. Ridiculous.

WELL, you get my drift about ol' Fred and Dinky.

Another problem was the camera work. The most common camera angle was from the men's restroom. Every once in a while, they would use hand-hand cameras for closeups from the stands, the locker room, the concession stand and Myrtle's Fried Chicken (where the gizzards are charcobroiled).

But, we don't have to worry about poor coverage this weekend, NBC will handle the NCAA semifinals and finals.

Garvin and Zeman, by the way, are on their way to Queens to cover the Houser Street Bake-off between Edith Bunker and Cybil Gouley. See it on Mizlou.

Softball team edges Northwestern 3-1

Lisa Packard and Terry Mah helped each other and the K-State softball team as the Wildcats defeated Northwestern 3-1 in the first game of the Oklahoma Invitational in Norman.

In the first inning, Packard's home run with Mah on base made the score 2-0. In the fifth inning, Mah returned the favor and brought Packard home with a single.

K-State had seven hits and one error and Northwestern had three hits and one error.

The winning pitcher was Kay Beatty, who is now 1-1 on the season.

K-State plays twice today—against Southwest Missouri State at 12:30 p.m. and against Texas A&M at 6:30 p.m.

Farmers urged to join group for parity prices

CHRIS MCKEE
Collegian Reporter

WAMEGO—Area farmers were urged to join in a new organization to drive the price of farm products up and increase their bargaining power on the international market.

In a meeting Sunday at Wamego High School, Jerry Lester of Parity, Inc. explained how they could increase their profits for farm products.

Parity, Inc. is a nationwide organization that is seeking members to pool their agricultural products to gain bargaining power.

"The goal of Parity, Inc. is to organize commodity producers into one membership and market their agricultural products," Lester said.

"You've got farms. You've got to have a say in the sales of your own products. You're the chicken that's got the golden egg," Lester told the farmers.

"You've been told by the grain companies that you're too stupid to understand commodity markets. You've been told grain markets are too complex to understand.

"If you understood world trade when you went to Washington, you would not have drove your tractors into the mall. You would have drove them through the White House," he said.

LESTER SAID Parity, Inc. would deal directly with foreign buyers and negotiate a price agreed upon by the farmer. Direct dealing with foreign markets would eliminate the "middlemen" and create more profits for the farmer.

"Washington isn't going to do anything for us unless we force them to do it," Lester said.

He said by pooling their grain in "export locations," the farmers could hold back wheat needed to fill large contracts and drive the price up.

"The big grain companies have already contracted more than 600,000 metric tons of hard red winter wheat and they don't have it," he said.

"What would happen if you struck a match to it (the wheat) before the combine went through? They won't have it unless you sell it," he said.

"The greatest producers of food in the world are sitting in this room going broke," Lester said. "Keep your wheat."

The headquarters of Parity Inc. is in Oakley. It has other offices in Nebraska, Colorado, Oklahoma and Texas.

Government taking parental role

Jeffries sees worsening family ties

By SCOTT STUCKEY
News Editor

The United Nation's designation of 1979 as the "International Year of the Child (IYC)" belies a government trend that could destroy the American family, according to Jim Jeffries, congressional representative from Kansas' 2nd District.

Jeffries said the growing belief in government that parents need help in caring for their children is resulting in policies to "totally remove" children from American values such as patriotism and religious instruction.

"They could someday make it illegal for parents to teach their children the Word of God," he said. "To me, it's quite frightening."

Jeffries spoke on "Legislation and the American Family" in an address to about 30 members of the Latter Day Saint Student Association Saturday night in the K-State Union.

A father of three and grandfather of four, Jeffries said he is concerned about the influence radical feminist and leftist organizations are having on government.

Government-supported abortions and family-planning programs, and a "child's bill of rights" are examples of increasing government encroachment on the family, he said.

"The family is coming under attack by the liberal, social activists in government," he said.

JEFFRIES SAID President Carter has established a national commission to further the goals of the U.N.'s IYC, and this commission has been budgeted $1.8 million to promote "child advocacy and anti-family programs."

"It spends taxpayers' dollars to fill the radio, TV and newspapers with propaganda to make us believe in radical change, and to destroy the traditional family," he said. "The $1.8 million is just the beginning."

The State Department increased funding for UNICEF with the intention of using that increase for the IYC program, Jeffries said.

A fundamental concept behind these programs is that children have a "laundry list" of rights, he said. The notion that each child has a right to adequate nutrition, education, housing and medical services is a humanitarian ideal, but it has to be paid for by the taxpayer, he said.

Children's rights have even been extended to such areas as sexual self-expression, which includes the availability of contraceptives and abortions without parental consent, he said.

"This attitude (in government) leads to an expansion of the welfare state," Jeffries said. "It leads to a loss of work incentive and to an increase in the breakup of families."

REITERATING THE platform used in his successful campaign against Martha Keys, Jeffries said the federal govenment is usurping power from state and local governments—the level at which any necessary family programs should be administered.

When asked what current legislation in Congress could affect the family, Jeffries said there are several proposals for national health insurance, but "nothing is in the hopper right now."

"You've got some things floating around out there," he said.

Jeffries said he based his comments about governmental influence on the family on research being done by the House Executive Committee of the Republican Study Group, of which he is a member.

Jeffries said that since taking office in January he has been encouraged by the hard-nosed approach to government spending being taken by most of the 77 freshmen congressmen.

He said the new legislators have come to Washington with a clear mandate from their constituents to curb inflation and reduce taxes.

"The American people don't like their inability to keep what they earn," he said.

Jeffries said inflation is caused by government, and Carter's 7 percent wage and price guidelines are not even adhered to within governmental agencies. He said congressinal committees have asked for anywhere from 7 to 2,600 percent increases in their annual funding for staffs

Snowstorm springs surprises on campus

Two days after the sun crossed the equator to warm the Northern Hemisphere into spring, Manhattan was hit with a freak snowstorm that downed power lines and left much of the city and northeast Kansas in darkness.

Many campus buildings were without power Friday for as long as 11 hours. The Union cafeteria had to serve food by candlelight, and residents of Goodnow and Marlatt Halls had to go without lights and heat for most of the day.

The entire campus was without power between 3:30 and 4:30 p.m., and several classes were canceled.

Because of a power failure in their building at 318 N. 5th, staff members of The Manhattan Mercury had to use equipment in the Collegian newsroom in Kedzie Hall to put out their afternoon paper.

Some residents of rural areas outside of Manhattan were out of power for at least 20 hours, but KP&L reported that most lines were back up and in operation by late Saturday.

Carter resists controls despite inflation figures

DALLAS (AP)—President Carter, on the second leg of a political fence-mending trip in the Southwest, proposed to Congress Sunday new efforts to streamline and cut the cost of federal controls on the environment, health, safety and business.

The president returned to Washington Sunday night.

Carter told a question-and-answer session following his speech that he remains strongly opposed to mandatory wage and price controls despite new inflation figures showing the sharpest monthly rise in consumer prices in more than four years.

"I am not considering, and nobody in my administration has dared to propose, that we have mandatory wage and price controls," he said. "I'm not about to abandon...controlling wages and prices on a voluntary basis."

The president also told the broadcasters that history may judge the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty scheduled for signing in Washington Monday as "maybe the most significant occurrence during my term of office."

In response to a questioner who asked if the treaty is "merely window dressing" and short of a comprehensive Mideast peace, the president predicted the treaty will last and will make it easier to bring other Arab nations into negotiations with Israel."

He told one questioner his administration has not yet made a decision on whether to require that alcohol be mixed with gasoline to stretch petroleum supplies. But he said his administration has increased each year the allocation of federal money for exploring renewable energy sources such as the so-called "gasohol blend."

In response to another question, Carter said he would oppose total elimination of federal controls on the broadcasting industry, in which the Federal Communications Commission controls the allocation of television and radio channels. But he said, "I think we'll have less restraints on your industry by far when I go out of office than when I came into office."

The president promised anew to identify publicly soon the four or five businesses which the administration feels have violated Carter's voluntary price standards.

Jeffries...

He said the fact that about 6,500 people work for the Senate's 100 members illustrates the magnitude of the federal government.

Jeffries said he has mixed feelings about the proposals for a constitutional convention that would change the Constitution to require a balanced budget. He said Congress has always had the power to balance the budget, but he is not optimistic about the chances of it doing so.

"It's a crying shame to have to have an amendment to do it," he said.

Khomeini denounces Egypt-Israel treaty

TEHRAN, Iran (AP)—Iran's Moslem patriarch, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, denounced the U.S.-sponsored Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty Sunday as increasing "the dangers that have always been posed by Israel in the region."

To the west in Kurdistan, Ibrahim Yunesi was named the new provincal governor general. He is the first Kurd to become chief administrative officer of the province.

Interior Minister Seyyed Javadi said in Tehran that Yunesi's appointment was a major concession by the revolutionary government to the Kurdish minority.

The Kurds, with their ancestral lands divided among five countries, have been waging an armed rebellion for autonomy.

The 78-year-old Khomeini, who inspired the revolt that toppled Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's monarchy last month, said in a major foreign policy statement broadcast by Iran radio that the bilatral Egyptian-Israeli treaty "is against the interests of the Arab world."

He said Egytian President Anwar Sadat, by agreeing to the pact, "has made his connection to the U.S. imperialist government more obvious."

NBC's Savitch to speak Tuesday

Jessica Savitch, NBC reporter, will speak at the first convocation of the semester at 10:30 Tuesday morning in McCain Auditorium. A topic for the speech has not been announced.

Savitch joined NBC News in the fall of 1977 as a Washington correspondent. From 1972 to 1976 she worked for KYW-TV, an NBC affiliate in Philadelphia. She began there as a general assignment reporter and finished as co-anchor woman.

Newsweek magazine has labeled her "dogged, ambitious and a workaholic...at 30, Savitch is clearly NBC's reporter most likely to succeed."

Her reporting duties now include covering the U.S. Senate, anchoring weekend news and occasionally co-anchoring the NBC Nightly News and Today Shows.

"No matter what I do, no matter what I say, I am still Jessica Savitch, the petite blond, not the award-winning reporter," she was quoted as saying in the March 3 TV Guide. "I'm not going to apologize for my looks any more."

She did use her looks to make money for a college education, however, when she worked as a model.

"It paid better than being a waitress," she said.

"She gives very much the professional image," said William Sparkman, chairman of the University Convocations Committee. "But part of her saleability does revolve around what she looks like."

Savitch has not succeeded through looks alone, however. She has gained a reputation for going after news stories with tenacity that once included hitting and kicking an officer trying to hinder her and a group of reporters at an airport skyjacking, according to Newsweek.

She has received the Clarion Award for a TV documentary from the National Chapter of Women in Communications in 1974. In early 1975, she received the Special Award for Outstanding Achievement in newscasting for the Sales and Marketing Executives of Philadelphia.

Recently she received the Women in Communications Award and the Broadcast Media Conference Award for her documentary, "Lady Law," and the Philadelphia Press Award for the best news feature.

Anti-Castro group ignites 3 bombs

NEW YORK—Three bombs exploded in the New York area Sunday night—one at Kennedy International Airport and the other two in New Jersey, authorities said. An anti-Castro terrorist group claimed responsibility for all three in a telephone call to The Associated Press.

Police said there were no immediate reports of injuries in the New Jersey explosions. Four persons were reported injured in the Kennedy blast.

The caller told the AP that the explosions were the beginning of an offensive by the group against organizations it sees as friendly to Cuban President Fidel Castro.

Bombs went off at the offices of the New Jersey Cuban Refugee program in Weehawken and the Elmaceen Pharmacia in Union City, which police said sends medical supplies to Cuba.

At Kennedy, a suitcase exploded in a Trans World Airlines baggage area minutes before it was to be placed on a flight to Los Angeles, police said.

Peace treaty signing to be televised

WASHINGTON—The Mideast peace treaty signing ceremony, scheduled for 1 p.m. today, is to be nationally televised by ABC, CBS, NBC and PBS.

Also, it will be broadcast by the four commercial radio networks—ABC, CBS, NBC and Mutual—and AP Radio, NPR and UPI Audio.

Chinese move 12 miles into Vietnam

BANGKOK, Thailand—Hanoi claimed Sunday that Chinese forces shelled Vietnamese territory and took up new positions as deep as 12 miles inside Vietnam. The Soviet Union charged that China also was escalating "provocations" against Laos.

The official Vietnamese Communist Party newspaper Nhan Dan said Chinese leaders "are behaving contrary to their promises."

Instead of pulling their invasion force out, "Chinese troops have in recent days occupied many more areas of Vietnamese territory," Nhan Dan was quoted as saying in reports by the Vietnam News Agency and Vietnam radio received here.

Snow melts, but power outages linger

TOPEKA—About 3,000 rural homes in central Kansas were without electricity Sunday in the wake of last Friday's storm which caused millions of dollars of damage to high-voltage lines.

A utility official said Sunday it might take until Tuesday or Wednesday to repair all of the power lines and poles which were toppled by heavy wet snow and high winds.

Bill Ohlemeier of Kansas Electric Cooperatives said some 2,000 rural customers in the Wamego area had no electricity Sunday, while another 1,000 were without power in the Topeka, Atchison and Council Groves areas.

Ohlemeier said power was expected to be restored to some of the affected areas by Sunday night, but residents in other areas would have to wait until Tuesday or Wednesday.

The utility official said hundreds of repair crews have been working around-the-clock since the storm struck.

The storm knocked out power to much of the state early Friday, but it was restored to most cities and towns by late Friday.

Ever eat a tree? Try this bread

WASHINGTON—A popular bread that has been marketed for its nutritional qualities must tell consumers in advertising that they are eating wood fiber, a consent agreement with the government said Sunday.

The bread is "Fresh Horizons," which has been promoted by a part of the giant International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. as having 30 percent fewer calories than white bread and 400 percent more fiber than whole wheat bread.

Under the agreement with the Federal Trade Commission, advertisements for the bread must say, "The source of the fiber is wood" or "Contains fiber derived from the pulp of trees."

In Rye, N.Y., Robert Keane, spokesman for ITT Continental Baking Co., said, "We feel that we can live with the consent agreement very well. We disagree with many of the allegations in the complaint and have denied all along that we were guilty of any false advertising."

Weather

Friday's freak snowstorm almost cost the Collegian weather editor his job. However, over the weekend he flew to Cloud County Community College and earned a Ph.D. in meteor-illogical sciences. Impressed, huh? Well, his job is now secure, electricty has been restored and the troops will be home by Christmas. OK, now for the weather—today will be mostly cloudy with highs in the low 50s. Lows tonight are expected to dip into the mid 30s. Highs Tuesday are forecasted for the mid to upper 50s.

Have you heard the one about how to wrap a 10,000-year-old elephant?

SEATTLE (AP)—How do you wrap a 10,000-year-old elephant?

"Well, you start with a carload of toilet paper, get about five gallons of glue..."

It may sound like a joke to most people, but for Jim Martin it was a problem of truly mammoth proportions.

Martin, a paleontological researcher for the Burke Museum at the University of Washington, was describing how he and fellow researchers prepared the skeleton of a 20-foot woolly mammoth for transport back to the museum in Seattle.

"We got that elephant out in four days," Martin said of the museum's crash excavation near the Tri-Cities last August.

Martin and research assistant, Steve Nelson, explained that they wrapped the area around the bones—earth and all—in toilet paper, then encased the whole works in plaster for the trip back to the museum.

"I went into Richland and bought all the toilet paper in the store," Nelson recalled with a laugh.

"We wanted to get pink toilet paper so we could have a pink elephant, but we had to settle for green and white."

'Strong on small halls'

Mabel Strong, director of Putnam Hall for 15 years, died last spring—but her memory remains through the three residence halls (Strong Complex) bearing her name.

These halls are now threatened with losing their food service.

Mabel, as director, fought to retain the individuality of Putnam and the other two small halls.

Putnam, Van Zile and Boyd, with this individuality, offer an alternative to the mass-living arrangements of the large halls.

For years, Strong Complex residents have put up with certain disadvantages because of what they saw as benefits of small hall living. These disadvantages include a lack of lobbies on each floor, no exercise facilities, no in-room telephones and no air conditioning.

Now the three halls are accused of not pulling their share of the operating-expense load. The housing department reported the Strong Complex lost $86,658 in operating revenue last year.

To equalize financial burdens, the proposed answer is to shut down food services in the small halls. It is not an original idea.

The same solution was proposed by Thomas Frith, director of housing, in 1975 after the small halls generated a deficit of $106,420. The Housing Council voted unanimously to continue food services in the three halls.

What is hard for residents to understand is why the small halls can be charged with being a burden while they are paying on the bonds to build the Derby Complex.

It's the same old story. "All for one, and one for all" is the cry when bond payments are the issue, but the cry changes to "all for one, but not the small halls" when operating deficits are being discussed.

Frith has repeatedly said the housing department isn't cutting services but expenditures. This doesn't make sense but works well as a way to rationalize ruthless action.

Closing the small hall food services is a ruthless, devastating action which could lead to the closing of the three halls.

If this action upsets you, add your voice now to the 602 Strong Complex residents protesting this move before it is voted on by the Housing Council April 4.

Supporters can write letters, call or visit Housing Council members: Tom Frith, director of housing; Jean Riggs, associate director of housing; Dan Beatty, vice president of business affairs; Earl Nolting, director of the Center for Student Development; Margaret Nordin, associate director of the Center for Student Development; any Association of Residence Halls or Student Government Association representative.

Laws of shopping (with women)

Yes, it's true: I would rather be struck by a speeding train (a contradiction in terms?) than go shopping with a woman who is looking for clothes.

No, I'm not a sexist pig. Nor is it that I don't like to see ladies well dressed; I do. I just have a low boredom threshold when it comes to shopping.

Most men shop for clothes with something specific in mind. They go into a store, ask for what they want, buy it and leave.

Not so with the women I know. If a salesman approaches and asks, "May I help you?" the standard reply is, "No thanks, I'm just looking." And it's the truth. She's looking and looking and...

The last time I was conned into going clothes shopping with a woman, she approached me with a big smile and said, "I need a new turtleneck to go with the cranberry skirt you gave me for Christmas. Would you care to go to the store with me?"

Being naturally chivalrous, (OK, so I exaggerate) I agreed. What a sucker.

FARINA'S FIRST Law of Shopping is: Whatever item the lass claims she is looking for will always be in the section of the ladies department farthest from the entrance you use. She wants turtlenecks? First you have to walk by the jewelry and purses.

We stop, "just to see what's there." After some minutes we stroll past the perfume counter. What the hey, we give the ol' olfactory senses a workout. (Warning: Men, don't let any of that stuff get on you, unless you like getting funny looks from the male clerks.)

Now we meander through the blouses, again stopping "to see what's here." From there it's onward into the dress department. Here I try to get into the swing of things, so I show her some garments I think would look attractive on her.

"Are you serious? I'd look 12-months pregnant in that tent!... Oh, come on, I want people to notice me, but I don't want to blind them!... A size NINE? Of all the insults!"

Well, I don't have to be burned twice. I shut up and follow her around, letting her do what she pleases. From dresses we go to skirts, slacks, jumpsuits, pantsuits, sweaters and on and on. She is accumulating a few items to try on.

NOW WE'VE been in the store for two hours, and I'm getting tired of standing. Farina's Second Law of Shopping: There is never a place to sit down in the entire ladies department. The only seats are inside the dressing rooms and who the hell sits down to try on clothes?

Speaking of dressing rooms, we come to Farina's Third Law: There will always be nine dressing rooms in the ladies department and eight will always be closed for "Major Renovations." I don't know who the major is, but I wish he'd take his business elsewhere.

She waits in line to use the only dressing room while I try to keep my growling stomach from annoying other shoppers. It's been at least eight hours since we've had any food.

Finally it's her turn. She's inside the room for a while. When she comes out, she casually announces nothing really suited her after all.

Now I become as macho as possible. I demand we leave at once and go home to eat. She agrees.

Halfway across the parking lot she stops, looks at me and says calmly, "I forgot the turtleneck."

I give her enough money for cabfare and go home alone.

Uses for Acker's office

Editor,

There sure has been a lot of discussion in the Collegian these days about spending money. First there was the article (March 19) about giving President Acker the "Golden Fleece Award" for his $100,000 office.

Then, of course, there was Craig Polson's letter (March 21) stating that KU's Chancellor Archie Dykes was more deserving of the award. Craig says that we at K-State "will benefit from our Anderson Hall offices" than the Jayhawks from Dykes' air conditioning.

My first reaction was that I never use the president's office, so how could I benefit from it? And then I realized it is my own fault if I don't use it. After all, it's right there, convenient to all. What a great idea!

So now I urge each and every student to get involved. Go and make use of "our" office whenever you can. And bring all your friends. In fact, to ease congestion and prevent crowds, Acker could post a sign-up sheet on his door. He could arrange it so he'd have 15 or 20 students, for about an hour at a time.

Students could study, play cards or just rap with the president. Be sure and bring your cameras; I hear the woodwork is beautiful.

For those who demand practicality and functional use, I have another idea. To save money (and who doesn't want to do that?) the residents of Boyd, Putnam and Van Zile could go to Acker's office to eat. They could alternate: one hall for breakfast, one for lunch and one for supper. This would alleviate the food service problem and put "our" office to good use.

By golly, don't tell me we K-Staters can't find ways to justify our expenditures.

God meets need for love

Editor,

I must admit that the column (March 23) was very good about describing the love relationships that almost everyone goes through. But I must also comment that there is a need for love. At least, everyone I know seems to have that need. In looking to fill that need I have come to find the perfect love.

I was in high school when I first met this friend. He was kind, he never lied, never answered back when insulted. When he suffered he did not threaten to get even, and he was always ready to forgive me when I mistreated his love and turned away from him.

Another thing about this man is that he has a wealthy father that is willing to give me everything I will ever need.

You may wonder what makes me think that he loves me so much. Well, this man died for me. I committed a crime and he took my punishment. The thing that shows me his love is that he did not have to die for me.

He and his father could have left me out in the cold but his father sent him back to die so that I would not have to.

Even you have someone who loves you more than anything else. The man's name is Jesus and he is alive and well and he loves you and I.

'Showtime' cable service to replace HBO April 1

By ED REESE
Collegian Reporter

Manhattanites who escape theater ticket prices by watching movies at home on cable TV will be relieved of the repetition of shows with the coming of a new service April 1.

Manhattan cable TV is changing its syndicated entertainment service from Home Box Office (HBO) to a similar service, Showtime.

The entertainment service currently provided by HBO consists of movies that haven't been shown on network TV, such as variety show, night club shows, and sport events.

Charley Cooke, regional manager of cable TV, said the move is being made to satisfy present customers and to attract new ones. He said since HBO was started in 1976, the cable service has received calls from customers complaining of the airing of sports and the repetition of movies.

"It's (Showtime) the same type of service, but it has a different philosophy and different programming," Cooke said.

Showtime doesn't program any sports and will be about 75 percent movies. He said there won't be any daily repeats on Showtime and movies will only be shown four or five times during the month.

Cooke said Showtime would take a poll of the favorite movies aired every month and there would be an encore presentation if there is enough audience demand.

Cooke said the service would not be interrupted during the switch, and Showtime would cost the same as HBO. HBO costs $10 for installation and is $9.95 per month.

He said Showtime will have 16 to 20 different shows per month compared to the 20 to 25 shows aired on HBO. However, HBO repeats about half the shows it carries every month, he said.

About 90 percent of the people in Manhattan subscribe to cable TV, Cooke said, and about 16 percent of that 90 percent gets HBO. He estimated there would be a four to five percent increase with the move to Showtime.

He said HBO and Showtime are the larger of seven similar companies in the United States.

Royce Bearg, chief technician for the Manhattan company, said HBO and other entertainment services like it are received by satellite signal.

BEARG SAID the cable TV service was started in Manhattan in 1961 to provide Kansas City channels. He said a microwave system upgraded the service in 1962.

"In 1968, the system was completely rebuilt with new cable, amplifiers, and included all twelve channels," Bearg said.

Uganda:

Idi Amin declares curfew in Kampala as Tanzanian troops drive within 20 miles of capital

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP)—Tanzanian tanks trapped President Idi Amin early this morning at his official residence in Entebbe, cutting him off from Kampala, his capital, a Ugandan spokesman reported.

The invasion force of Tanzanian troops and Ugandan exiles seized the highway between Kampala and Entebbe, 20 miles south of the capital, the Ugandan government radio reported. This cut Kampala off from Uganda's international airport at Entebbe, through which Libya had been funneling aid to the threatened Ugandan government.

The broadcast, monitored in Nairobi, said the government had shut down Entebbe Airport, 20 miles south of Kampala, and ordered a nighttime curfew in Kampala. "Anyone violating Ugandan air space will be shot down without warning," the broadcast said.

The extreme measures were announced one day after reports in Nairobi, Kenya, said the invasion force was shelling Entebbe Airport.

Unconfirmed accounts from Dar es Salaam, Tanzania's capital, said the Tanzanian troops and anti-Amin Ugandan exiles had reached Mpigi, a crossroads village 20 miles southwest of Kampala and 12 miles northwest of Entebbe.

OTHER UNCONFIRMED reports by Ugandan exiles Sunday claimed Amin's soldiers had fallen back to Nabingo, site of a large girl's school about 14 miles southwest of Kampala. A sizable swamp is the last natural barrier between Nabingo and the capital.

The radio announcement said the Kampala curfew would go into effect at 10 p.m. Sunday and last until 6 a.m. Monday. On subsequent days, the curfew would last 12 hours—from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m.

The Defense Council banned the use of "full electric light in houses." Movement at night would be restricted to ambulances and emergency services, the council said.

The government's orders represented the first official Ugandan acknowledgment that Amin's military position has continued to deteriorate in the past three weeks, despite a reported Libyan airlift of heavy weapons and soldiers.

LIBYA HAS DENIED the airlift, but travelers from Uganda have reported seeing scores of Arab soldiers.

The Uganda-Tanzania war began in October when Amin's forces crossed the border and occupied 710 square miles of Tanzanian territory. Tanzanian troops pushed the Ugandan troops back across the border within two weeks and have continued their drive toward Kampala.

Dealing for charity dollars; Cardathon to begin April 4

K-State students will be dealing for dollars next week.

Local card players will raise money for charities as part of the seventh annual Black and Gold Cardathon beginning Wednesday, April 4 in front of the K-State Union.

The cardathon will run continuously for 150 hours, from 1 p.m. April 4 until 7 p.m. April 10, Ed Null, cardathon chairman, said.

The cardathon is being sponsored by Pi Beta Phi sorority and Acacia fraternity.

"The objective of the marathon is to earn a substantial amount of money to be divided among the Shrine hospitals, the Capper Foundation for Crippled Children and Arrow in the Arctic," Null said.

Pledges are currently being taken on a cents-per-hour basis, he said, and donators will be billed according to the number of hours the cardathon lasts.

The cardathon raised $2,700 in donations last year and more than $10,000 has been raised in the last six years. Null said the goal of this year's cardathon is to raise $3,000.

Acacia began the cardathon in 1973 to raise money for the Shrine hospitals and the Capper Foundation. Each year a different sorority is asked to join Acacia in the fund drive.

Rec Services' budget requests part-timers' 'fair share'...

By MARY JO PROCHAZKA
SGA Editor

Part-time students jogging around the tartan track in Ahearn Field House or smashing handballs at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area may have to start paying for these services next fall.

Raydon Robel, director of Recreational Services, is asking Student Senate to establish a line item in which part-time student would pay $1.25 per semester for Rec Services. Student fees for part-time students would not be increased, but senate would reallocate the money from other groups.

Since 1974, Rec Services has been funded as a line item for full-time students—a set amount of $2.50 per student per semester. Part-time students have been allowed to use the free recreational facilities, even though their money hasn't gone to Rec Services.

"Basically, the only people who are using the program and not paying into it are part-time students," Robel told senate Finance Committee during budget hearings Saturday.

"Part-time students do paticipate in our program and are increasing in numbers," he said. "Full-time students are supporting the part-time students whose dollars go into the activity fee fund (allocated by senate) but are not allocated to Recreational Services."

ROBEL SAID he's asking for the line item so part-time students would pay "their fair share" and because of a financial crunch. A decline in the number of full-time students this year meant fewer dollars for Rec Services, he said.

A higher income from non-student sources is planned through increases in equipment rental fees and facility use fees for faculty, staff and alumni, Robel said.

"In just over a year's time, alumni usage...has increased by over 50 percent," Robel said, which he attributed to K-State's open alumni membership by which non-alumni can purchase memberships to the Alumni Association and use these to buy facility use cards for recreational services.

Robel proposed restrictions on alumni, including higher facility usage charges and a charge for the time alumni occupy courts to "slow some people down" and "kind of hold them back."

Several Finance Committee members echoed concern with the heavy usage of K-State recreational facilities by many categories of people.

"It's a problem—there's no doubt about that," said Chet Peters, vice president for student affairs and finance committee member.

Robel has estimated a total Rec Services budget of $160,000 for 1979-80, of which about $75,000 would come from student money. About $72,000 would be paid back to students in the form of salaries, according to the budget.

Rec Services is one of nine groups which had budget hearings Saturday. After the remaining groups requesting student money are heard April 7 and 8, Student Senate will begin determining tentative allocations for all the groups.

...ULN also seeks more student funds

University Learning Network (ULN) wants $515 more of students' money next year, mostly for salary increases.

During budget hearings Saturday, ULN coordinator Bradford Brunson explained his request for $5,094.70 from Student Senate.

"We've always been able to work on the lowest shoestring budget possible," Brunson told senate Finance Committee members.

Brunson wants $550 to increase the assistant coordinator's yearly salary from $2,200 to $2,750.

"The assistant coordinator's salary has been $2,200 since 1973," Brunson said, "yet his duties have more than tripled."

He said ULN's need to "strive for more professionalism" caused its request for more money than they were allocated last year.

Brunson told the committee ULN ranks third nationally of all college information centers and ranks first among Big 8 schools.

Since the information center was established in 1970, its staff size has almost quadrupled, Brunson said. The 35 staff members are handling an average of 20,000 telephone calls each semester.

Some of the additional money requested will be used to update the center's reference material, he said.

Hard riding and fast roping kept spectators entertained at the 23rd annual K-State rodeo last weekend in Weber Arena.

The event was sponsored by the K-State Rodeo Club, member of the National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association (NIRA).

The rodeo began Friday night with the crowning of Cindy Breech, junior in animal science and industry, as 1979 K-State rodeo queen.

Other rodeo special events included a calf dressing competition won by Acacia fraternity on Friday and Sigma Alpha Epsilon Sunday.

In the calf dressing event, two men catch and hold a calf while a woman dresses it in longjohns.

Saturday night's "Battle of the Sexes" pitted Jackey Jeffery, senior in art, against disc jockey Don Paustian from KJCK radio in Junction City in a bull riding competition; while Mark Eaton, another KJCK personality, challenged Karol Leggett, sophomore in physical education, to a bareback bronc riding contest.

JEFFERY scored 72 points on her bull ride to win that match, but neither Leggett or Eaton stayed on their horses the required time.

The rodeo was highlighted by performances in the bareback bronc riding and the bull riding, considered the most dangerous events in rodeo.

Saturday evening Jimmy Cleveland from Southeast Oklahoma State (SEOS) thrilled a sellout crowd with a spectacular 76-point ride on a horse named Moonshine. Cleveland again thrilled the audience Sunday with a 78-point ride on Coyote.

The bull riding competition was equally exciting as Southwest Oklahoma State's Gary Toole and Mark Robertson, from Claremore Junior College, dazzled the Weber Arena audience.

Bull riders, required to stay on the animal for eight seconds, may only use one hand to hold a rope tied around the bull's midsection. If the rider's free hand touches the bull during his ride, he is disqualified

MANY TIMES these eight seconds seem like an eternity to a rider, as he is jerked and spun at the mercy of the bull.

If the bull rider can stay on one of these 1,600-pound enraged animals for the required time, he is faced with the problem of dismounting ....

Dismounting can be as tricky as staying on. The cowboy has only one choice—pick a soft spot in the arena and hope for the best.

After dismounting, the cowboy must rely on the rodeo clown, an acrobatic daredevil in football cleats and war paint, to distract the bull so the cowboy can make a hasty exit.

Toole won the competition as he rode Little Floyd for a 78-point score Friday and finished Sunday with a 75-point performance on Speck.

Robertson, however, was a close second as he scored 144 points on his two bulls, Henry and My Luck.

SEOS dominated the rodeo, placing first in seven of the nine events. Southwestern Oklahoma State at Weatherford won the remaining two events.

K-STATE was led by Neil Worrel, senior in elementary education, who placed third in steer wrestling.

In the timed steer wrestling event, a 650-pound steer is chased into the arena by two mounted cowboys, one wrestler and a hazer.

The hazer cowboy rides his horse along the right side of the steer, preventing the animal from running away from the wrestler on the left side of the steer.

When the three animals are running at full speed with the steer in the middle, the cowboy slides off his horse, grabs the steer by the horns and throws it to the ground by twisting the animal's neck.

Olin Smith of SEOS won the steer wrestling competition with a time of 4.6 seconds.

Goat tying recently was added to the rodeo events. Girls entered in the event ride a horse the length of the arena where a goat is tied to a stake.

The girl throws the goat to the ground, then ties its legs together. The contestant tying her goat in the shortest time is declared the winner.

The rodeo was dedicated to Marvin Smith, a long-time friend of the K-State Rodeo Club, who died this month.

SEOS is in first place among schools competing in the NIRA from the Central Plains states region.

K-State is in fourth place behind third-place Panhandle State College of Goodwell, Okla., and second-place Southwestern Oklahoma.

Other schools competing in the rodeo were Oklahoma State University, Fort Hays State University, Fort Scott Community Junior College, Dodge City Community College and Claremore Oklahoma Junior College.

CLOCKWISE FROM TOP LEFT...A capacity crowd was kept on the edge of their seats as the bull riding got underway in Weber Arena Saturday night. Newton Burr from Southwest Oklahoma State wraps his ankles before entering the bareback riding competition. Another rider pulls on his glove and secures it with a leather strap. A cowboy streaks by after a calf in the calf roping events. BOTTOM...Catching some sleep between events, Randy Mitchell from Southeast Oklahoma State waits for his ride to come up.

Eve of treaty signing

American Embassy in Syria suffers blast

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP)—Two bomb blasts shattered windows of the American Embassy here Sunday night, the eve of the signing of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty. There were no reports of injuries or serious damage.

The violence hit as Arab governments stepped up their campaign to discredit the treaty.

Syria predicted that Saudi Arabia would join in sanctions against Egypt. Syrian President Hafez Assad conferred for four hours Sunday with visiting Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko. And the Soviet envoy later met here with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

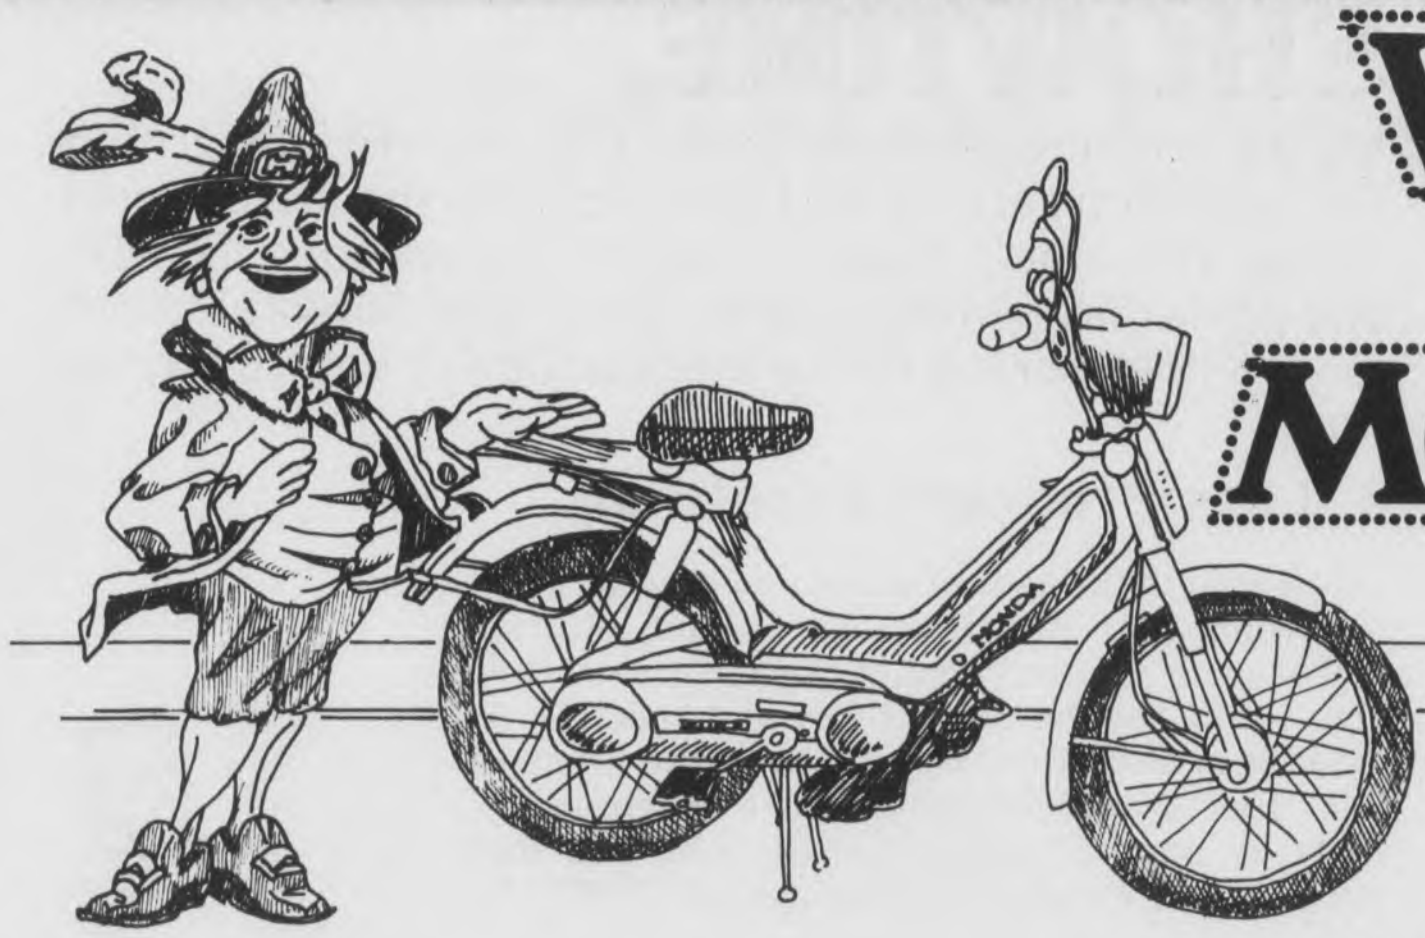
Syrian eyewitnesses to the explosions at the embassy's chancellery building said one of the bombs was tossed into the embassy garden from a passing car and the other went off near the rear of the building.

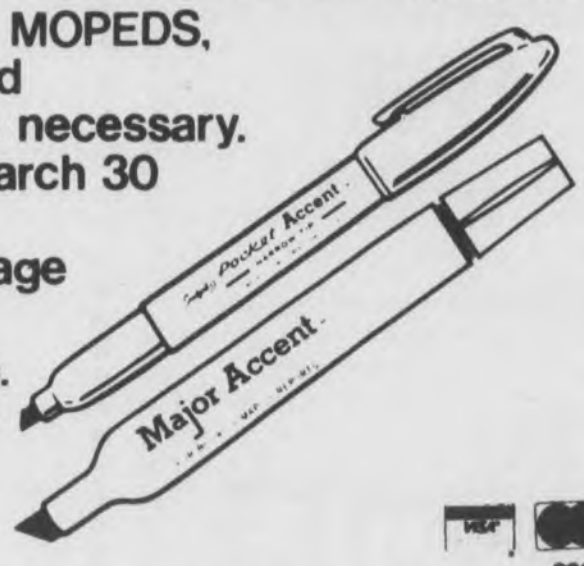
A witness said someone in the car shouted: "To hell with the traitorous agreement!" before driving off.

The embassy was closed at the time, with only a Marine guard and Syrian security men present. No one claimed responsibility for the attack immediately.

In Washington, State Department spokeswoman Kimberly King said the Syrians took some additional security measures—unspecified—after the incident and that the United States appreciates those actions.

"We don't know who the perpetrators were," she said.





American officials had warned U.S. missions in the Middle East to be watchful for possible terrorist attacks as the time approached for the signing of the U.S.-sponsored Egyptian-Israeli treaty.

Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko arrived here Saturday on a surprise visit. Informed sources said his talks with Assad centered on prospects for resumption of the Middle East peace conference in Geneva as a "substitute" for the Camp David settlement. The U.S.-and Soviet-sponsored Geneva conference has been dormant since December 1973.

Nissen leads Old Dominion to AIAW basketball title

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP)—Inge Nissen and Nancy Lieberman ignited a rally by top-ranked Old Dominion early in the second half Sunday to spark the Lady Monarchs to a 75-65 victory over Louisiana Tech for the national women's collegiate basketball crown.

The Lady Monarchs, trailing 32-27 at intermission of the AIAW championship game, outscored Louisiana Tech 12-2 in the first 6½ minutes of the second half as they applied a full court press.

In the consolation game, Cindy Brogdon scored 24 points to pace third-ranked Tennessee to a 104-86 triumph over defending champion UCLA.

Nissen, a lithe 6-foot-5 center, scored 22 points and Lieberman added 20 as the Lady Monarchs finished the season with a 34-1 record. Their only loss came at the hands of South Carolina, winner of the National Women's Invitational Tournament.

Louisiana Tech, led by Angela Turner's 18 points, finished the season at 34-4.

The game had been expected to hinge on a matchup between Nissen and Elinore Griffin, also a 6-5 junior, but Nissen proved too much for the Louisiana Tech center, who had 16 points.

Winless tennis team shows improvement

Although the K-State women's tennis team hasn't won a match, Coach David Hacker said he believes the team has improved 50 percent since the beginning of the season.

Hacker said the team, which lost 6-3 to both University of Oklahoma and Tulsa this weekend in Oklahoma, has learned to relax against stiff competition.

"They have learned to be more patient in their shots," Hacker said.

In the match against Tulsa Saturday, K-State freshman Brenda Bennett defeated Shauna Phillips, 7-6, 1-6, 6-4. The Wildcats' other two wins were by default.

Although K-State dropped all of its singles matches to Oklahoma Friday, the 'Cats swept a trio of doubles matches.

Bennett narrowly lost her singles match 7-5, 7-6.

Hacker praised Bennett, K-State's No. 4 player, for her "remarkable improvement" and tenacious play.

Grand slam lifts 'Cats to 13-3 victory

In its first game away from Frank Myers Field this season, the K-State baseball team split a doubleheader with Missouri Southern Saturday in Tulsa, Okla.

K-State, losing the first game 11-5 while running through a string of four pitchers, came back to win the second game 13-3.

The 'Cats scored nine runs in the second inning of the nightcap, led by a grand slam from first baseman Michael Akins. The win makes Wildcat pitcher Mark Harrison 2-0 for the season and puts the 'Cats at 13-1.

The Wildcats return home for a doubleheader with Benedictine College Tuesday. They will close out the week in Myers Field with five games against Iowa—doubleheaders Thursday at 1:30 p.m. and Friday at 1 p.m., and a single game Saturday at 1 p.m.

We've got what you've been asking for. SHOWTIME.

We've listened carefully to our subscribers concerning the premium service we have provided the last several years. The concerns boil down to 5 major requests, with one dynamic solution. Showtime. The entertainment you've been asking for, at the same price you're paying now.

1. Less Program Repetition

Showtime believes that when you pay for programming each month you should get different programming each month. So with Showtime you won't see the same films and specials repeated month after month. Showtime presents 3-4 "special return engagements" each month, only by popular subscriber demand and then only after a 6-month resting period.

Bird vs. 'Magic'

Polar opposites battle in NCAA title game

SALT LAKE CITY (AP)—"How do I feel about the matchup with Magic Johnson?" Indiana State's Larry Bird repeated a question. "I don't look at it as a matchup.

"I am a scorer. He is a passer. I can't guard him. He can't guard me. We are two different people."

The towering spearhead of the unbeaten, No. 1-ranked Sycamores spoke logical words but even he could not dull the marquee impact of the Indiana State-Michigan State battle tonight for the NCAA college basketball championship.

No matter how one tries through cold analysis to downplay the eyeball-to-eyeball confrontation of the season's two top cage personalities, the NCAA final boils down to a dramatic, super-charged duel between two of the season's leading personalities.

It's the "Bird Man" against the "Magic Man."

Bird is correct when he says he and his arch rival are different. They are of different color, different backgrounds, sharp contrasts in style—both on the floor and off.

LARRY BIRD is a 6-foot-9½ inch giant out of a small, rural Indiana community, French Lick—a white man in a sport dominated by blacks.

Called one of the most complete players of the generation, he has spent much of his postseason time collecting awards as the universally acclaimed Player of the Year, feuding with the press and fielding questions

(see NCAA p. 12)

Knee surgery slows Blackman

The sight of K-State's all-Big 8 guard Rolando Blackman limping around on campus might cause Wildcat fans to fear for next year's basketball team, but they have nothing to worry about, according to Lon Kruger, K-State assistant basketball coach.

Last week Blackman underwent surgery on his left knee to alleviate pain caused by a "tip of cartilage" floating around, Kruger said.

The injury is a result of continued "wear and tear" and not due to any one incident, he said.

The operation went "real well" and isn't expected to affect Blackman's future performance, Kruger said.

about how many millions of dollars he will demand to turn professional. A 22-year-old senior, he is the first round draft pick of the Boston Celtics of the NBA.

Earvin "Magic" Johnson is a stringbean, ball-handling wizard out of a teeming black neighborhood in Lansing, Mich. He is a sophomore, 6-8 and 207 pounds, who is mature for his 19 years. Already a finished player, there are reports he may plead hardship and quit college to join the pros after this term. The pros are drooling in anticipation.

It's true they will not guard each other but they are sure to cross paths often during the course of the evening. They're the men 15,500 paying fans and a nationwide TV audience will be watching.

BIRD, his long blond hair flowing, is inclined to dominate a basketball floor. He is an intimidating figure as he uses all of the hardwood skills—shooting, passing, rebounding, stealing—with the subtlety of a berserk tank. Human bodies bounce off his massive frame.

Johnson, on the other hand, is like a phantom. He moves with such speed and grace and maneuvers the ball with such sleight-of-hand artistry that it is hard for the human eye to follow him.

Many regard him as the finest passer in the game. Like Bird, he appears to have peripheral vision—eyes on the side and at the back of his head. He can spot a moving teammate and hit his target through the slightest opening. He is a fencer with radar in his blade.

If Bird subdues his opponents with a mixture of versatility and brute strength, Johnson lulls them to sleep with his mesmerizing finesse.

"Some people like to shoot. I get my kicks out of making a good pass and watching a guy go up for two," he says.

YET, he refuses to concede he lacks shooting ability. "If I'm straight up, looking at the basket, it's going in," he insists. "I can shoot when I want to."

He proved it in the semifinal game Saturday when he scored 29 points in the Spartans' 101-67 victory over Penn. His all-around consistency was amazing. He hit nine of 10 from the floor, 11 of 12 free throws, grabbed 10 rebounds and made 10 assists.

Bird was equally effective, scoring 35 points on 16 of 19 field attempts and three of four free throws plus 16 rebounds and nine assists. "I was so hot I kept begging for the ball," he said, after Indiana State eked out DePaul 76-74.

The two collegiate super stars are striking contrasts in personality.

Bird is a dour, introverted personality, sullen, defensive about press criticism and inclined to be arrogant in interviews when forced into them. He has had a ban on interviews with the print press during the past season.

SOMEONE asked him whether Indiana State needed to win the NCAA in order to have a successful season.

"Hell, it doesn't matter whether we win or lose, I'm going to get my money," he snapped.

This is typical.

Johnson, on the other hand, has carried his floor magic to his relationship with fans and the press. He is a charmer—everybody loves him.

He can't wait to get to the interview room where his naturalness and high good humor abound to overflowing.

"I just naturally love people," he says. "I love to talk. Man, I'm lucky—this is a great life."

And he lights up the room with his magic smile.

Oklahoma, Tulsa shut out Wildcats

After a first-round win over Northwestern, the roof caved in on K-State's softball team in the Oklahoma Invitational in Norman.

In its first game Friday, K-State was crushed 10-0 by Southwest Missouri State. Friday evening, the 'Cats were eliminated from pool play by Texas A&M, which also scored a shutout, 6-0.

Southwest Missouri had no mercy on K-State pitcher Tammi Larsen as it scored in every inning and had 10 hits. K-State managed only three hits.

In Friday's second game, the K-State bats were more successful, as the 'Cats had seven hits. However, they were unable to group enough hits in any inning to score.

Leslie McGinnis, Janelle Poppe and Margo Jones each had two singles for the Wildcats. Kay Beatty was the losing pitcher.

UFM asks allocation increase

By SUZANNE SCHLENDER
Collegian Reporter

University for Man (UFM) wants more bucks from Student Senate.

Dave Ayers, UFM campus director, presented a budget request to the Student Senate Finance Committee Saturday asking for an increase of $1,514 more than UFM's budget this year.

Most of the requested increase will go to higher salaries. UFM is requesting that salaries for the four student-funded staff positions be increased from $9,575 to $10,750 for the 1979-80 year.

John Martin, Finance Committee member, asked Ayers if he would rather have an increase in the director's salary and lose the assistant's position or not increase any salaries.

"I don't see any way possible to cut out any people," Ayers said. He is paid for working 20 hours per week, he said, but many times he works 50 hours a week.

UFM also is asking for an annual increase of $139 for printing three brochures listing UFM courses offered.

THE NUMBER of brochures printed was reduced by about 4,500 copies per year to partially offset increasing printing costs, Ayers said.

"Printing of the brochure, rent of space and salaries are the most important (budget items) to keep at the same level (requested level)," Ayers said.

Increases also were requested for postage ($25 increase), office supplies ($25 increase) and professional services including typesetting, photo-services and graphics ($50 increase).

A total of $100 also was requested to help pay registration fees for the four student-funded UFM staffers to attend the National Free University Conference in Denver next year.

Ayers said UFM had the "largest enrollment ever" this spring with about 5,500 people—60 percent of them K-State students—enrolled in 240 classes.

A loan for renovating the UFM house has been paid off, but the roof still needs repair work, Ayers said. About $5,000 will be needed for the repair, but UFM is not requesting these funds from senate because of a 2-year-old promise, he said.

Two years ago, when UFM requested money for installing fire escapes and storm windows, UFM representatives told senate they would never request student money for repairs on the UFM house again, Ayers said. The roof will be repaired through fund-raising and collecting outstanding pledges from previous fund-raisers, he said.

UFM also receives funds from K-State's Division of Continuing Education for the UFM director's position. It received $3,250 from Riley County United Way this year and depends on grants and contributions for the remainder of its expenses, Ayers said.

Blood substance in mice, humans cancer cure?

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP)—A cancer-killing substance first isolated in the blood of mice has been found in human blood as well and may be a key component of the body's natural defenses against cancer, a researcher said Sunday.

Dr. Saul Green of Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York said the substance when isolated from mouse blood had killed cancers in other mice as quickly as in 24 hours.

"We have experimental evidence which support the concept that normal animals have a biochemical surveillance system which enables them to fight off cancer repeatedly during the course of their lives, Green said.

Green told an American Cancer Society seminar here that the substance had caused human melanoma cancers to shrink when the cancers were growing in "nude" mice, a strain of experimental animals used for testing human cancers.

In experiments with tissue cultures, the substance killed human cancer cells from patients with cancer of the large intestine and skin, and slowed the growth of a human cancer called neuroblastoma.

In humans, the substance is called NHG, an abbreviation for normal human globulin, from which it is isolated in the blood. Workers at the SloanKettering labs had purified it from blood from their own blood bank and from various commercial sources.

The substance NHG is believed to be a close relative of a substance which is known in the mouse as TNF, for tumor necrosis factor. TNF was first isolated in 1971 after scientists noted that blood taken from mice and injected into other mice sometimes killed cancers.

Green said that, unlike many anti-cancer agents, NHG is not poisonous because it is a natural substance.

But he said the substance was far from human clinical trials.

We don't know the answers as to how it works, he said. "But if enough of the substance could be procured it may lead to a treatment for cancer or a way to protect persons who are at a higher risk of cancer by using drugs to stimulate its production in their system.

Red Cross is counting on you.

Edmonds and Curley force-feed humor to dinner audience

By DAVID GREUSEL
Collegian Reviewer

Watching the comedy team of Edmonds and Curley in the Union Catskeller was a lot like being tickled by force—you had to laugh, but you weren't really sure if you enjoyed it.

The two comedians, who looked remarkably as you would expect Laurel and

Collegian Review

Hardy to look if they went to college in the '60s, tried very hard to give the audience a few belly laughs during their hour presentation. At times, though, like too much tickling, it seemed forced and uncomfortable for both the ticklers and their victims.

The basic style of their performance comes from an older and more established comedy duo, Skiles and Henderson, who have made a nice living doing strange sound effects with microphones.

Edmonds and Curley come from the same mold, but obviously have not met as much success as the former group. Otherwise, why would they be playing the Catskeller?

One reason they may not have the appeal of Skiles and Henderson is most of Edmonds and Curley's humor comes straight from the bathroom.

LIKE ALMOST all current comics, they felt obliged to provide us with an amusing look at feminine hygiene products, prophylactics and hemorrhoids. I, for one, was glad I chose to skip the dinner portion of Saturday night's dinner theater.

What bothers me about the bathroom humor is most people laugh at it not because it is extraordinarily witty, but because they are surprised and embarrased to hear such things discussed in public.

Fortunately, Edmonds and Curley came out of the bathroom for a few minutes during their act and gave us some amusing glimpses of Russian and American astronauts fighting the language barrier, soap opera acting, absurd commercials and the reaction of a pair of fish to two inept anglers trying to lure them with artificial pork rinds.

When the show ended after just 56 minutes, most of the post-performance murmuring was about how short it was. I think, though, the patrons of Saturday night's dinner theater would not have felt shortchanged had Edmonds and Curley delivered a full 56 minutes of the kind of high-energy comedy they are capable of rather than 15 minutes of the latter and 41 minutes of bathroom jokes.

Saturday's Cryptoquip — CLAMOROUS DISCOTHEQUES CAN DISCONCERT MOST QUIET SCHOLARS.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: Y equals A

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

'Peace has come'

Egyptians, Israelis enter fragile era of peace; 20 years of hostility ends

WASHINGTON (AP)—Egypt and Israel, neighbors but enemies for a generation, signed a treaty Monday to begin a new, fragile era of peace between Arabs and Jews.

In a solemn ceremony on the front lawn of the White House, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin put their names to Arabic, Hebrew and English copies of a treaty promising mutual recognition, respect and peace.

"Peace has come!" declared a beaming President Carter, whose personal intervention brought the talks back to life after they had stalemated on the details.

Carter quoted the Bible and the Koran, and he offered a personal prayer that Arabs and Jews may one day be brothers.

Sadat, replying, declared: "Let there be no more bloodshed between Arabs and Israelis."

"Let us work together until the day comes when they beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks," the Egyptian said.

Carter quoted the same words from Isaiah.

"No more war," agreed Begin. "No more bloodshed. Peace unto you. Shalom, salaam, forever."

"Shalom" means "peace' in Hebrew. "Salaam" means "peace" in Arabic.

Sadat and Begin both praised Carter profusely. Sadat called him a man of compassion; Begin said Carter's work would be remembered for generations.

But agreement did not come easily.

Even at lunch, only a little more than an hour before they signed. Begin and Sadat were still disputing what the treaty papers should call an area which the Israeli leader insists on referring to as Judea and Samaria and most of the world calls "the West Bank."

Sadat and Begin signed, dramatically, on the windy lawn, after 30 years of hostility and four wars between their nations and after 15 months of American-sponsored negotiations.

Then Carter added his signature, a satisfied witness.

Thus, on a chilly, sun-filled spring afternoon, with 1,600 witnesses waving the flags of the three nations, a Moslem, a Jew and a Christian joined in solemnizing their handiwork.

They hoped their act would lead to a permanent peace throughout the Middle East, a task threatening to be even more difficult than this hard first step.

After signing, the three grasped each other in a three-way handshake. Carter said softly, "I'm so proud of both of you."

Outside the White House gates, 1,000 protestors, supporters of Palestinians, shouted their opposition, charging Sadat had betrayed their cause by making a separate peace with the Jewish state.

"The Shah Is Gone Sadat Is Next" their placards read, and "Palestine Is Not for Sale."

Hunters Island site recommended

Coal-plant location outweighs cost

By DAVE HUGHES
Staff Writer

TOPEKA—K-State officials have made up their minds.

In an informal meeting with the Kansas Senate and House Ways and Means Committees, they recommended the Hunters Island site, south of Manhattan, for the proposed coal-fired power plant which could be in operation as early as 1983.

K-State President Duane Acker and Vice President for University Facilities Gene Cross made the recommendation last night.

A bill giving the go-ahead to final planning and initial construction of K-State's controversial plant passed the House last week.

The Hunters Island site was chosen because it wouldn't require trucking coal since it is located near rail lines. This site is also best suited for burning refuse, if the Univeristy decides to do so later, officials said.

"To conserve resources and to help both local and state governments hold down costs, we expect solid waste will eventually be processed at the site and will provide a portion of the fuel need," Acker said.

Members of the consulting firm Lutz, Daily and Brain, also present at the meeting, have recommended that the plant be built at the intersection of Kimball and Denison Avenues north of the campus. They said this site would be the most cost effective.

UNIVERSITY OFFICIALS said another reason the Hunters Island site is better is that it lends itself to future expansion, even though it would have to be surrounded by a dike for flood protection.

Members of the firm said because the plant can use low-sulfur coal from Wyoming, it will not require scrubbers on the smokestack. Jack Daily, of the firm, assured the committee this system wouldn't violate environmental standards.

The University also recommended that the plant be equipped to co-generate electricity. The consulting firm had advised that co-generation would be cost-effective in the long run, but the idea has met opposition from the Kansas Power and Light Co. (KP&L).

Committee members questioned the University team on the cost advantages of using coal over other fuel sources. Even though the present price of coal is higher than natural gas, the availability of gas in the future is uncertain, Daily said.

Daily said the cost of coal would increase about 7 percent per year whereas natural gas prices could rise 12 to 25 percent per year.

Rep. Keith Farrar (R-Hugoton) pointed out the recent abundance of natural gas in the state and mused that gas, at least for the first years of the plant, could be used until costs made it prohibitive.

ALTHOUGH DAILY acknowledged that fact, he said gas will become less available and more costly in the future.

KP&L said they couldn't offer K-State long-term contracts for gas (which would lower rates) but coal suppliers who may be interested in providing coal to K-State said they could provide long-term contracts.

Daily said coal supplies are "inexexhaustible." He said he predicts an increase in gas costs in the near future.

In 1979, cost of construction of the plant at the Hunters Island site would be $25.1 million. In 1983, because of inflation, the cost would be $31.9 million, according to consultants' estimates.

The 1979 figure for the site at Kimball and Denison is $23.3 million, but the site also would require an additional $60,000 per year in trucking costs, they said.

PROF DIES...Riley County Police and employees of Parkview Funeral Home remove the body of Arne Richards from an east side drainage ditch. Richards,a bibliographer at Farrell library and dedicated distance runner was discovered by neighborhood children.

Professor dies; police find body in flooded ditch

A K-State professor was found dead Monday afternoon in a field on the outskirts of Manhattan.

Riley County Police said the man, 46-year-old Arne Richards, was found lying in a flooded ditch near an east-side dike. Richards was a national figure in distance running and an associate professor.

No cause of death has been established, but an autopsy will be performed today at 9 a.m. at Manhattan's Parkview Funeral Home. Police have ruled out foul play as a cause of death.

Riley County Investigator Steve French said some children alerted police when they spotted something "suspicious" in the field.

Richards, documents bibliographer at Farrell Library, was not reported missing. French said he was last seen Saturday.

Richards, a dedicated jogger who ran several miles daily, was an avid promoter of amateur sports—especially track and long distance running. He helped organize the Midwest Roadrunners Club anf was active in the Roadrunners Club of America.

Richards was once chairman of the Kansas Civil Liberties Union.

Actions warrant only 'spanking'; Marine charged with desertion

GREAT LAKES, Ill. (AP)—Jack Garwood said Monday there is "no way" that his son, Marine Pfc. Robert Garwood, who was missing in Vietnam for nearly 14 years, is guilty of desertion or other charges that could lead to his execution.

"I don't believe them (the charges)," the senior Garwood said. He added that whatever his son did, it should warrant no more than "a spanking."

The elder Garwood said nothing could compare with his reunion with his son, who was declared a prisoner of war in 1965. The Marine's brother said it "started raining in the room."

The reunion came Sunday after Garwood, accused of desertion and collaborating with the Viet Cong, arrived at the Great Lakes Naval Training Center where he is undergoing medical tests.

His father said at a news conference Monday he had not believed he would see his son until "I could reach out and touch him. Then I knew it was my boy. Beautiful. Best thing that could every happen to anybody. I still haven't gotten over it. Butterflies."

Garwood, a 33-year-old Indiana native, could face a firing squad if convicted of all five charges brought against him.

THE SENIOR Garwood, from Greensburg, Ind., said that when he first saw his son in the hospital room Sunday, "We just looked up, and hugged each other something fierce. It was beautiful."

Don Garwood, Robert's 30-year-old brother, said he reacted like his father. "I didn't know how to handle it. I just sort of stood there. And then we came together. It started raining in the room."

The family met with Robert for about eight hours Sunday.

Garwood's civilian attorney, Dermot Foley of New York City, asked reporters not to ask about Garwood's actions before the reunion.

Garwood disappeared in September 1965 from an area near Da Nang, Vietnam. He is charged with desertion, soliciting U.S. forces to refuse to fight, misbehavior as a prisoner of war, disloyality, and unlawful communication with the enemy.

The charges will be investigated to determine if there is sufficient evidence to courtmartial Garwood, said Lt. Col. Art Brill, spokesman for the Defense Department.

Brill said the investigation has not yet begun and that Garwood would remain at Great Lakes "indefinitely."

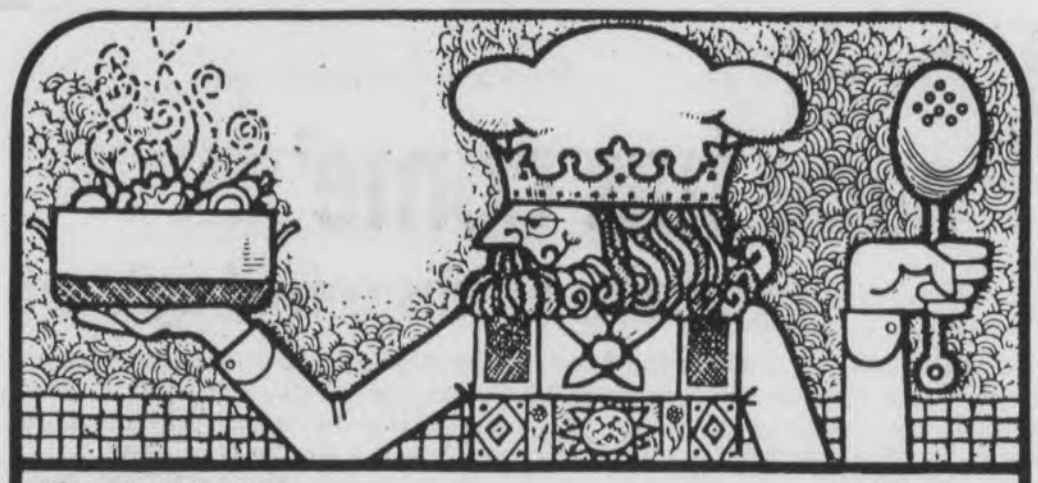
Firemen rescue King from stink

A pint of Pyridine provided excitement Sunday morning for firefighters from the city and campus fire departments when they responded to a chemical spill call at King Hall.



Pyridine, which is used as a solvent in organic research, is not considered to be dangerous, but the area was sealed off to avoid anyone being exposed. A search revealed that only one person was in the building at the time of the spill.

The accident occurred as a graduate assistant was going through a doorway when the vial of pyridine he was holding hit the door. Another graduate assistant was summoned from across the street in Willard Hall to contact the police. The police then contacted the city and campus fire departments to respond to the call.

Firemen neutralized the compound with hydrochloric acid before sawdust was spread on the spill to soak it up. The sawdust was then bagged up and disposed of north of KSU Stadium while exhaust fans were clearing out the foul smell inside the building.

"It wasn't dangerous at all, but it stinks. It is one of the few chemicals I hate to smell," Bill Fateley, head of the chemistry department, said.

"Ten years ago we wouldn't have done anything (about the spill), twenty years ago we would have ignored it, but we're getting more sensitive of chemicals," he said.

Israelis dance, cry, cheer, pray...

TEL AVIV—Tens of thousands of Israelis gathered in cold, rainy weather Monday to dance, cheer, cry and pray as they hailed the signing of peace with Egypt. The festive mood was shattered in Jerusalem, where a terrorist grenade injured nine persons.

The grenade exploded in Jerusalem's old city 10 minutes before the treaty was signed in Washington. It injured four American tourists, one French tourist and five other persons who were not identified by nationality.

Spokesmen at three hospitals said none of those injured was in serious condition and one American tourist was released after treatment. None of the victims was identified by name.

No one claimed responsiblity for the explosion, but Palestinian guerrillas have vowed to disrupt the peace.

A wave of emotion swept over Israel as citizens gathered before television sets and giant outdoor TV screens that showed live broadcasts of the treaty signing.

"Wonderful, wonderful," said Welder Rahamim Nehushtan, one of 60,000 people watching the ceremony in a Tel Aviv square. "Maybe it means I won't have to do so much army duty."

...while Egyptians joyful, apprehensive

CAIRO, Egypt—Uncertain, apprehensive, joyful, millions of Egyptians on Monday night watched their televisions, tuned in their radios or simply listened for the pealing of bells announcing the birth of peace for their land.

Not all welcomed the treaty with Israel. Officials said public gatherings were discouraged Monday night out of concern that treaty opponents, calling it a betrayal of the Palestinians and other Arab states, would try to disrupt them.

The ruling National Democratic Party of President Anwar Sadat planned rallies throughout Egypt for later in the week.

Monday night's organized events were simple—the lighting of mosques and ringing of church bells at the moment of the treaty signing in Washington, 9 p.m. here; the presentation of a "flag of peace" to the captain of the Norwegian cruise ship Sagafjord as it carried 400 American passengers through the Suez Canal; the piping of ship whistles along the canal.

Amin house besieged by 20,000 troops

NAIROBI, Kenya—Ugandan President Idi Amin claimed he was besieged by 20,000 Tanzanian troops and 12 tanks at his Entebbe residence Monday. He said God-fearing men such as himself should expect these problems, and vowed to fight his way out with a handful of help.

Ugandan exiles claimed the tanks belonged to mutinous Ugandan soldiers, but there was no other indication that any such siege was taking place. Residents of Entebbe, 20 miles north of the capital of Kampala, reported no tanks, no troops and no fighting. They said the road to Kampala was open.

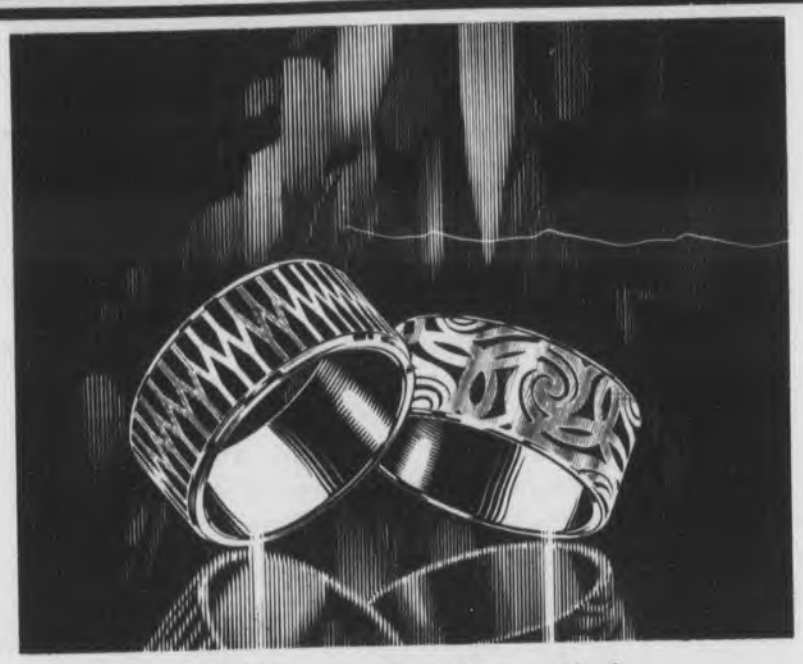
The airport control tower said all was quiet and Tanzanian military officials said their invasion forces were still 20 miles from Entebbe. But Amin said he could see 12 tanks from his window.

The radio quoted Amin as saying, "A brave and strong man who believes in God and discipline will always find this kind of problem. I will show how only 20 men can fight against 20,000 invading troops."

Judge gases up fuel prices

WASHINGTON—A federal judge Monday upheld federal regulations that are expected to allow gasoline prices to rise more than 19 cents per gallon in the next two years.

U.S. District Judge Aubrey Robinson Jr. ruled that the Department of Energy adequately considered the environmental impact of the regulations before they were issued.



Attorneys for consumer advocate Ralph Nader had asked Robinson to postpone the pricing rules on grounds that their environmental impact had not been carefully studied.

The Nader attorneys contended the rules would cause "permanent and irreversible" harm to air quality because they would increase the price spread between more expensive, but cleaner, unleaded gasoline and cheaper, but dirtier, leaded fuel. The attorneys argued that the increasing price differential would cause motorists to switch to leaded gasoline.

Weather

Good morning. Several hundred Collegian weather readers stopped by the newsroom Monday to inquire, "Why in the hell can't you idiots get the weather forecast right?!" My reply then, and my reply now is "Golly, I dunno." Today's forecast calls for a pleasant change. Today is expected to be cloudy with highs around 60. Skies should clear by Wednesday, making way for highs near 70.

Opinions

Sacrificing scapegoats won't solve problems

Congressman Jeffries,

A man in your position—one of power and authority—should be careful in what he says, should have well-considered reasons for his opinions and should make suggestions to solve problems without contributing to others.

In your speech at K-State on March 24, you displayed none of these traits.

It is too easy to make a scapegoat out of the government and feminist groups for a loss of "traditional American values." The intervention of the government and feminist groups in family life is the result of a need for somebody to take charge.

If parents were doing their job, there would be no need to resort to other groups for help, but many parents aren't good parents.

Consider the case of a young girl who is raped and becomes pregnant. She doesn't want to have the child, but her parents believe abortion is wrong and won't permit her to have one. What can she do?

A government-sponsored abortion without parental permission may be the only solution for her.

Or think of children whose parents beat them. Government intervention may save their lives.

You bemoaned governmental support of children, but didn't consider what the children would face if their parents and the government couldn't or wouldn't support them. A loss due to undeveloped brainpower, our greatest national resource, would be the result.

You expressed concern because children may obtain contraceptives without parental consent but—self-righteous judgements aside—isn't that better than burdening the country with more unwanted children?

Worst of all, you placed the blame for the deterioration of American values on handy scapegoats—the government and feminist groups.

The blame for this belongs at the source of the problem—at home. If parents can't or won't bother to care for their children, somebody must. Encouraging parents to shove off the blame and responsibility isn't going to help.

In a society where almost everyone receives training in reading, writing and arithmetic, it is appalling to see how little attention is given to training people about their responsiblities as family members.

Being a good parent, husband or wife takes work—it isn't something that just happens. Instead of choosing handy scapegoats to sacrifice, it would make more sense to encourage people to be aware of their responsiblities.

In a perfect world, there would be no need for anyone to interfere in family life but, in case you haven't noticed, this world isn't perfect.

Trick or treaty

Today's column guest is Henry Kissinger, former Secretary of State under—dare I say it—Richard Nixon. The renowned foreign affairs expert has agreed to discuss the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty.

DOCTOR KISSINGER...

"Please, call me Dr. K."

OK, Dr. K. who gave up the most to gain peace in the Mideast, the Egyptians or the Israelis?

"The United States."

The U.S.? How can that be?

"Very simple. Egypt gave up their friendship with the rest of the Arab world to gain peace and Israel sacrificed the Sinai, but the U.S. is losing Arabian friends and about $12.5 billion over the next three years."

That's a lot of money. Why would we spend that much money to get a peace that might not last?

"OIL"

Oil?

"Yes, you see, the Mideast sets upon the largest free world reserve of petroleum; without oil from the Mideast we're, how do you say, like a '79 Corvette without gas."

What about U.S. oil reserves?

"Enough to last about seven years."

Seven years?

"Yes, the United States is what other nations call an 'oil ogre.' It consumes 20 million barrels of oil every day. To keep up with the appetites of Americans more than half of that oil must be imported, most of it from Mideast nations."

But is 20 million barrels really all that much for a country like the U.S.?

"Let's just say that most countries don't understand why 5 percent of the world's population consumes 33 percent of the world's petroleum."

WILL THE 12.5 billion buy us as much oil as we want?

"The Israelis are hoping for 15 years, that's how long we've guaranteed to supply them with oil."

Why did we agree to supply Israel with oil when we're having problems getting enough for ourselves?

"Hey, I don't have the answers to everything. For example, under Carter's agreement, we're giving the money to the only two major countries in the Mideast which don't have substantial oil production. But it's hoped that the money will buy stability so that American gas pumps can continue to overflow with oil and gas for all."

How does the money buy stability?

"By equipping both the Israelis and Egyptians with so many weapons that they wouldn't dare attack one another."

But wouldn't that encourage an arms race similar to the one that's now facing the U.S. and Soviet Union?

"Well, Anwar Sadat has talked about a grand 'Carter plan' which would salvage the Egyptian economy, and I don't think he was talking about peanuts or little pills."

Suggestion box no token

Editor,

It was a cold, rainy Thursday night. I trudged to Farrell to listen to some audio tapes for a class. I arrived at the fifth floor audio-visual room, looking like a dripping fool. The audio-visual room was closed. That's right—shut tight, locked up, cemented and sealed.

Much to my dismay, my chance of acing a test had been destroyed, my freshly-curled hair was ruined, I was PO'd and there wasn't a damn thing I could do about it.

But there was something. You know the token suggestion box on the first floor? I wrote a suggestion to keep the audio-visual room open on Thursday nights. It was such a helpless feeling to drop that slip of paper in a box I knew no one would ever empty.

Someone did empty it. They even took my suggestion to heart.

The audio-visual room is now open on Thursday nights. My thanks to the people who read the suggestion (through all the smudges from my dripping hair) and actually did something about it. This proves to me the library personnel do care about upgrading their facility and serving student needs.

If more students would give the library input, their needs might be accomodated. It's worth a try, believe me.

Silkwood:

'We're still passing all welds, no matter what the pictures look like'

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP)—The undercover mission some persons say cost Karen Silkwood her life began when she was asked to help document alleged unsafe practices at a nuclear fuel plant, a union investigator testified Monday.

Steve Wodka, 30, testified he met with Miss Silkwood, then a lab technician at the Kerr-McGee Corp. nuclear fuel plant, in the Washington offices of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union on Sept. 26, 1974.

He said he asked Miss Silkwood to gather information for him and took her and two co-workers before the then-Atomic Energy Commission to register complaints about Kerr-McGee.

The Silkwood estate is suing Kerr-McGee for $11.5 million, claiming negligence in connection with Miss Silkwood's plutonium contamination. Kerr-McGee contends she contaminate herself, possibly to dramatize her accusations about working conditions.

Miss Silkwood died in a Nov. 13, 1974, one-car crash, when she was en route to a meeting with Wodka and a New York Times reporter.

Some nuclear industry critics contend Miss Silkwood was run off the road in an effort to silence her. The documents she reportedly had with her the night of the wreck have disappeared.

Wodka testified Miss Silkwood had told him Kerr-McGee was falsifying quality records for experimental nuclear reactor fuel rods. The records concerned welds used to hold radioactive pellets in the rods.

Workers have testified they were ordered to sandpaper rejected welds to try to bring them within specifications.

Wodka said he felt the charges needed to be backed up before being publicized. "We told Karen to go back to the plant, document the charges and we would arrange for her to meet with a reporter for the New York Times," Wodka said.

He said they agreed to keep in touch by phone. On Monday, the jurors heard a tape recording of an Oct. 7, 1974, phone conversation.

Miss Silkwood, referring to notes, said on the tape, "I have down here we're still passing all welds, no matter what the pictures look like."

Egg-sucking athlete trains for world record gobble-fest

Cambridge, Md. (AP)—The Guinness Book of World Records doesn't have a category for raw egg guzzlers, but that hasn't stopped Danny "Killer" Marsh.

A year ago, Marsh publicly swallowed 30 raw eggs in 45 minutes.

And on Saturday, Marsh will try to set a world's record for the event. The present one, he says, is 50 eggs in 60 minutes.

Marsh's said his raw egg habit dates back three years to when he was in high school. He said he was so slow getting out of bed for school that he had time only for a raw egg snack before class.

In training for the March 31 event, Marsh says he runs three miles a day and drinks "lots of milk and orange juice. You gotta work out and keep in shape."

While he fine-tunes his stomach, Marsh's managers, Gene Robbins and Bill Newcomb, are beating the bushes for backers.

They think they've lined up a Caroline County poultry farmer who will supply the raw material for the world record attempt.

'Reasonable perfection' policy for guests at world-famous Ritz

PARIS (AP)—Legend has it that on Aug. 25, 1944, while the rest of the Allies were liberating Paris, Ernest Hemingway headed straight for the Ritz personally liberating the hotel bar where he had spent so many days and nights during the golden era between wars.

The same legend, embellished over the years, says the writer blasted a hole in one of the famed hotel's toilets with a gun.

The first part of the tale has been verified by the barman who recalls Hemingway arriving in his war correspondent's uniform with a machine gun over his shoulder. The question of the toilet however, remains legend and is part of the hazy body of fact and fantasy surrounding what probably is the world's best known hotel.

The Ritz, whose name now is part of many languages as synonymous with elegance and luxury, still attracts the world's richest and most discerning visitors but ownership of the 80-year-old institution on the Place Vendome has passed to a secret Arab consortium.

Ritz managing director Bernard Penche confirmed last week that the majority of shares had been transferred from a British company to Ritz Paris Holdings Ltd. a company based on the British tax haven island of Jersey. The only name known to be attached to the company is that of Mohammed Al Fayad, a 50-year-old British businessman of Egyptian birth.

The French press reports a saleprice of $42.8 million—and this is only for the building and goodwill. The solid-gold land of the Place Vendome underneath remains the property of French interests.

There is widespread speculation that other Arab investors are behind Fayad. A group of Saudi Arabian oil magnates wanted to buy the hotel but pulled out when the French government demanded a 25-year guarantee that it remain a hotel not be made into chic offices.

A hotel spokesman said the change in ownership will not mean a change from the philosophy of Cesar Ritz the Swiss hotelier who established the Ritz in 1898, stressing elegance, atmosphere, service and above all discretion and privacy for guests.

There is no connection now between the Ritz here an any other Ritz hotel but the hotel has a copyright on the name and any hotel wishing to use it must ask permission.

Asked once for his definition of "ritzy," Charles Ritz the founder's son who did in 1976 replied: "Ritz simply means reasonable perfection."

In an effort to achieve that "reasonable perfection," the hotel always has maintained a ratio of two staff members for each guest.

The Ritz is not the world's largest hotel, not the most expensive. Its 209 rooms range from about $95 for a single to about $156 for a double plus a 15 percent service charge. There are 46 suites, including three grand suites the largest of which costs $600 a day.

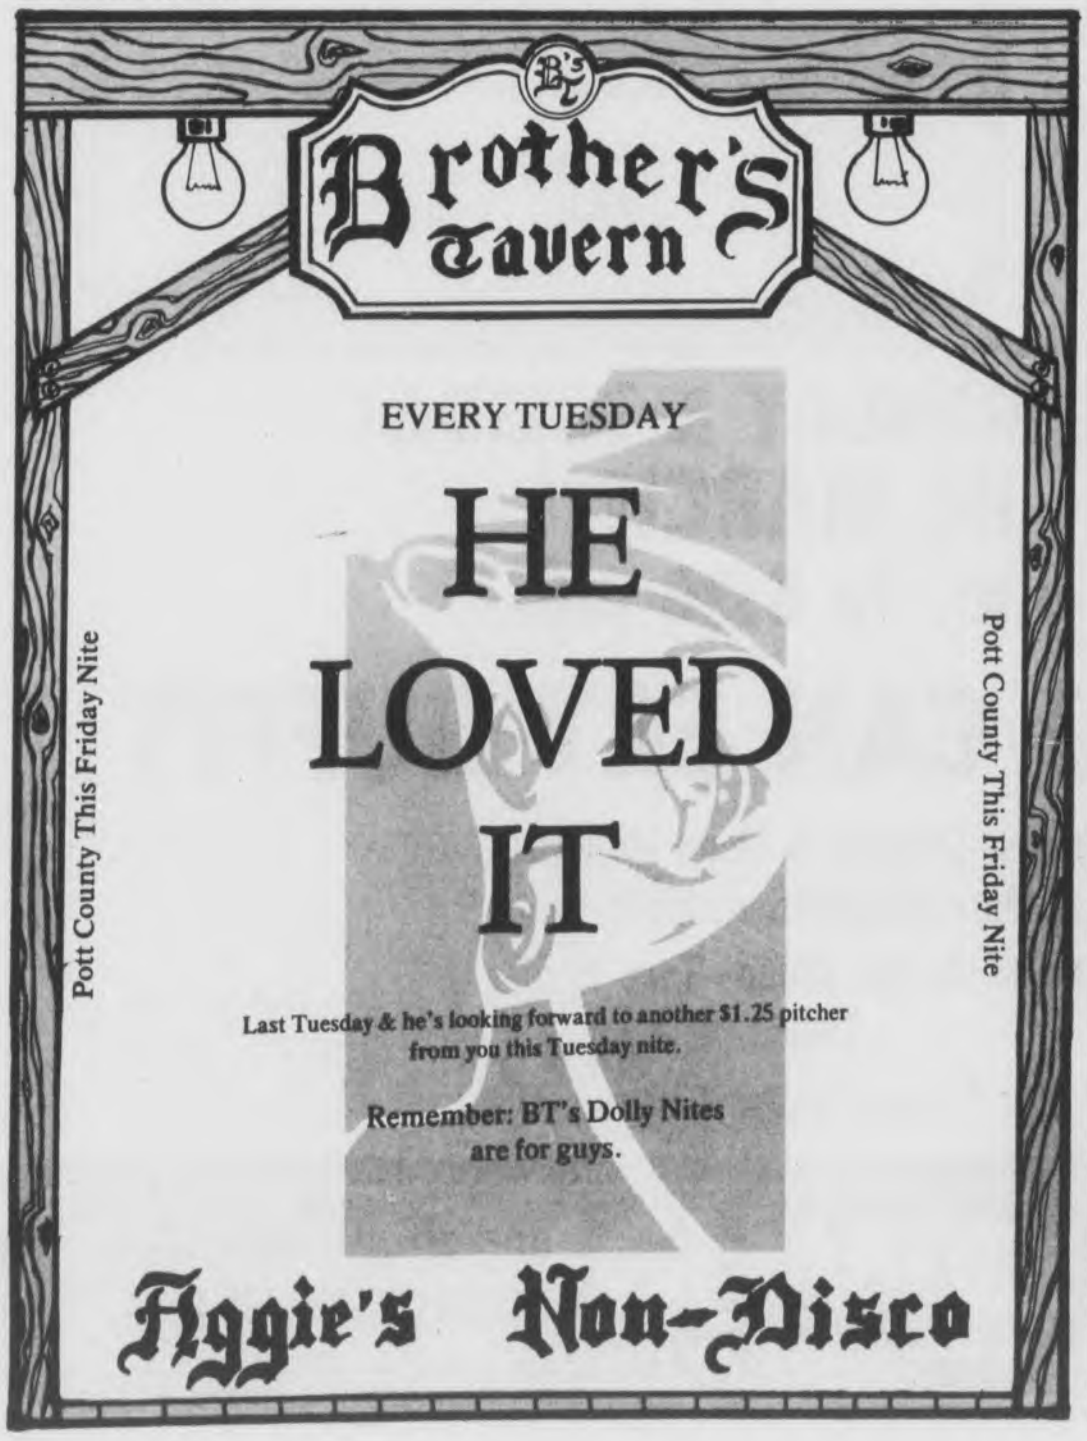
"It's not a snob hotel but a hotel of privacy and descretion," the spokesman said. People like to be called by their names, he said not referred to as room numbers.

"The Ritz is your home away from home," he said. That is, of course, if you have the means and taste for such a home.

Marcel Proust, one of the hotel's early habitues who was known to send a driver to the Ritz at odd hours for iced beer, said he liked the hotel because "there is no jostling."

Indeed, the first impression one receives when passing through the main entrance is quiet, uncrowded tranquility. People speak in low voices. Employees slip quietly about their duties or wait unobtrusively for the slightest sign from the customers.

The history of the Ritz' clientele is a veritable Who's Who: Winston Churchill, the Aga Khan, Scott Fitzgerald, the Duke and Dutchess of Windsor, Garbo, Hayworth, Rockefeller, Carnegie, Woolworth.



The German Luftwaffe chose the Ritz during the occupation. Coco Chanel was a resident for years and died at the hotel in 1971. Richard Nixon enjoyed the strict privacy of the Ritz while preparing for a 1978 appearance on French television.

"Discretion is the first rule," the hotel spokesman said. "If somebody tells us he does not want to be disturbed, nobody can reach him, not even his wife, not even in an emergency."

Remembering a lady's favorite flowers, a customer's particular whim or favorite room, suggesting wines from the famous cellar, advising on the theater, arranging transportation, or carrying out personal errands are what the hotel always has considered its duty.

But the clientele, 60 percent of it American, is changing. The leisured rich are scarce and the businessman is the new class.

"Americans will spend more money for deluxe accommodations," the spokesman said. "It's a mentality. Germans may have as much money, but not the mentality. In America, the Ritz is a symbol."

MORE STUDENT FEEDBACK

WE WANT OUR FOOD SERVICES!

In the past ten years the Housing Administration has been very cost conscious in all its decisions. They have sought to provide low cost housing for 4500 students in a completely self supporting system. This is an admirable goal in itself, but it is possible that they have lost sight of the other objectives of their operations. In an effort to lower costs, services have already been cut or reduced, such as programming, staff levels, and physical facilities. The Strong Complex (Boyd, Putnam, and Van Zile Halls) has often been the first to be affected by such cuts. The last time a closing of food service was proposed, the input from students kept the administration from making the very costly error of converting the dining rooms into student rooms. Even though we kept our food service open, at the time, we were forced to compromise on several other services. Services in the residence halls have suffered and will continue to suffer unless our voices are heard. We, the residents, are saying "ANY ADDITIONAL CUTS WILL HAVE A DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON OUR LIVING SITUATION." We think the advantages of individual dining areas outweigh the "supposed" costs.

Increase inevitable

Gas prices expected to rise by 12 cents a gallon within next two years

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP)—The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will probably raise oil prices considerably April 1, sources said Monday. An Iranian delegate said his nation had support for a 29 percent rise.

An increase by that much would raise the American retail price of gasoline and heating oil by about six cents a gallon.

"A price increase is inevitable," said an official of a key member of the 13-nation cartel. OPEC is meeting here to discuss the effects of oil shortages caused by the Iranian revolution and other factors on world oil supply.

The meeting was not designed for a price change decision, but sources said members had voted themselves authority to act on prices.

As part of the quarterly series of price increases approved by OPEC in December, the basic price of a barrel of crude oil is scheduled to rise 3.8 percent, from $13.35 to $13.84, on April 1. But that increase has been superseded by many OPEC members in the form of surcharges, generally of nine percent.

There had been speculation that OPEC would leave the scheduled increase alone and allow the price to rise through surcharges based on market factors. But it was apparent Monday that most members desired firmer action to raise the price.

Price increases and shortages already have had an impact on the American consumer. The Consumer Price Index showed that the cost of gasoline went up 2 percent in February to a level 18 percent higher than it was a year before.

In some areas gasoline costs a dime more a gallon now than it did a year ago. Some service stations are limiting hours because they cannot get enough gasoline.

In addition, changes in government pricing regulations are expected to add up to 12 cents to the price of a gallon of gasoline over the next two years.

Iraqi Oil minister Tayeh Abdul-Karim, an OPEC militant, said his nation might withhold oil from some nations to "punish" them for being involved with the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty.

Professor co-authors award-winning book

By KRISTI WALTER
Collegian Reporter

"Twilight of the Saints," a book co-authored by Robert Linder, professor of history, was chosen as one of the "Choice Evangelical Books in 1978" by Christianity Today magazine.

The book, a story of civil religion, also has been honored as one of the most significant religious books by Eternity magazine.

The term civil religion was introduced by Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 14 years before the signing of the Declaration of Independence. But Rousseau didn't invent civil religion; he simply described something already existing.

Rousseau acknowledged "no state was ever founded without having religion as its basis."

In America, civil religion is a blend of piety and patriotism, Linder said.

"Civil religion is the story of how almost every country had some glue to hold it together," he said. "Notice how presidents talk about almighty God, but never get specific."

According to Christianity Today, America's most widely-read religious journal, "Twilight of the Saints" is "an outstanding examination on biblical faith and American civil religion."

LINDER co-authored the book with Richard Pierard, professor of history at Indiana State University in Terre Haute.

"The reason for the book grows out of a deep concern I have as a Christian and an American for the subject of civil religion," Pierard said.

"I wrote the book to make Americans think," Linder said. "In the book, we gave a history of civil religion and then raised some contemporary questions to cause people to think."

"There are two important things which the authors of this book have in common—we are citizens of the United States of America and we profess an evangelical Christian faith.... More than anything else, these two factors have shaped our lives and underlie the thinking of the pages which follow," Linder and Pierard said in the book's preface.

The authors have been concerned about matters such as civil religion since they did their graduate work together at the University of Iowa, Pierard said. Since, they have co-authored four books.

"Twilight of the Saints" is now being used as a text in many colleges and seminaries across the country, Linder said.

"It (the book) can be used in history, political science and theological ethics courses because it addresses the topic from the perspective of both history and contemporary revelance," he said.

ACCORDING TO Inter-Varsity Press, book publisher, the initial printing of 10,000 copies in 1978 has been nearly exhausted.

"The award is nice and it means that people are reading the book," he said. "And books aren't written to lay on shelves."

"I am really happy to see the book get the award," Pierard said. "I had something important to say and the book was the best way."

Milford to hatch more fish to catch

By STANTON JANSSEN
Collegian Reporter

Tripled fish production at a lower cost for the state will result if Kansas' proposed largest fish hatchery is approved.

Plans will be completed this year for the hatching and rearing facility at Milford Reservoir which would increase the amount of fish available for stocking Kansas ponds and reservoirs from the present 60,000 pounds to 168,000 pounds of fish per year, according to Cal Groen, fisheries chief for the Kansas Fish and Game Commission.

It costs about $3 to produce one pound of fish in the Commission's present facilities, but with the Milford facility it would cost about $1.25 per pound, he said.

Most of the present facilites were built in the '20s and '30s, and have had few modifications since. There are three hatcheries and five rearing facilities across the state, Groen said.

A consulting firm, hired to evaluate the present hatchery system, estimated the demand for stocking in 1985 (the projected completion date) and provided a recommendation. The firm estimated 1985 demand at 180,000 pounds per year.

"They came up with a new hatchery at Milford," Groen said.

The Milford facility won't meet the projected demand, but Groen said the earthen-pond hatchery at Pratt will continue to be used for raising Striped Bass and Bluegill, because they do better in an earthen pond facility.

Groen described the proposed Milford facility as an intensive rearing facility, with 24 concrete raceways for hatching and rearing fish. Each raceway will be 8 feet wide, 3 feet deep, and 100 feet long. Eight raceways will house breeding stock, with the remaining 16 for rearing.

"You can have a high density of fish in the raceways because running water carries away the waste produced by the fish," Groen said.

Groen estimated a need for 12,000 galllons of water per minute for the facility.

"We looked around the state and Milford has an unlimited water supply," he said.

Milford also has a good supply of groundwater, which will be blended with reservoir water in the summer to obtain an optimum temperature for raising fish. In the winter, only groundwater will be used, since it is about 40 degrees Farenheit, he said.

"Milford is one of few reservoirs that has a good supply of both groundwater and reservoir water," Groen said.

Milford also has a central location among most of Kansas' reservoirs, and is about 30 miles from Manhattan Airport.

"Most of our reservoirs are in the northeast part of the state," he said.

"I think an important part of this facility is its accessibility to the public," Groen added.

"People enjoy going to hatcheries. We'll have tours and walkways going through the facility, so sportsmen can see where their money's going," he said.

Besides stocking reservoirs, the commission raises fish to give to owners of qualified private or farm ponds, according to Verl Stevens, supervisor of fish culture with the commission.

To qualify, each pond must be one-half acre or larger, wth a minimum depth of 8 feet. It must be free of any fish population at the time inspected, he said. "We stock 900-1000 farm ponds per year," he said.

Drug Education Center asks committee for $1,095 increase

Drug Education Center is requesting a $1,095 increase from Student Senate for salaries and advertising.

Dave Neuhaus, director of the center, presented his budget to the Student Senate Finance Committee Saturday.

If allocated, the money will increase the director's salary from $2,750 to $3,300 yearly, and will increase the assistant director's salary $105 to $550 yearly and the advertising budget, Neuhaus said.

"The director (of the center) must have a great deal of knowledge in drugs as well as being able to work well with volunteers," Neuhaus said.

"It's hard to get a qualified person to fill the position with the salary offered now," he added.

John Martin, committee member, asked Neuhaus which salary raise—director or assistant director—is more important if an either-or situation arises.

"If it comes to the bottom line, having money for the assistant director is more important," Neuhaus said.

"We (the center) are able to offer two new programs because of the help of the assistant director," he said.

One of these programs, the probation counseling service, has 13 clients who have been in trouble with the law, he said.

The second program is an encounter group.

"The encounter group is for the people who are into drugs but want to get out," Nehaus said.

Extra money for advertising would be used to attract volunteer workers, Neuhaus said.

Neuhaus was asked if he thought the Drug Education Center and FONE could be combined as one social service.

"I don't see how you can run everything we have and everything FONE has with the same number or fewer people," Neuhaus said.

"It would be difficult for one person to serve as director if the services were combined. It would be a lot of responsibility for one person," he said.

Goals for next year include continuing research, presentations and offering a class through the University For Man, Kim Johnson, Drug Education assistant director, said.

Director's pay depends on more CRB funding

"Cutting the budget to the bone" to make an increase in the director's salary possible, the Consumer Relations Board (CRB) is requesting a $474 budget increase from Student Senate.

"Professional leadership is not going to be available if there is no salary increase," CRB Director Melanie Stockdell told senate's Finance Committee Saturday, defending her request for a $550 increase in the director's salary.

Stockdell said scaling the director's salary with the Consumer Price Index shows a salary of $2,700 in 1971 is now only worth $1,700. Stockdell's 1978-79 salary is $2,750.

Steve Arnoldy, committee member, asked about the possibility of an expanded work-study program to staff the board.

"The problem I have is leadership. Unless someone (director) has expertise, it doesn't matter how many work-study people we have," Stockdell said. "Without effective leadership, the board can't exist on inertia for more than three years."

Stockdell is requesting a $15 increase for dues, memberships and subscriptions.

Stockdell's requests for postage, advertising and transportation are less than money allocated for this year.

Stockdell said it is important to increase CRB advertising.

"In the past, the emphasis (of CRB) has been to increase visibility, particularly on and off campus," she said.

"We've kept our name in front of people to let them know of our availability," Stockdell said.

Unexpected technique draws Ohlsson encore

By LOIS GRAHAM
Contributing Writer

Garrick Ohlsson played his special 97-key Bosendorfer piano for an audience of about 800 Friday night in McCain Auditorum despite the threat of cancellation posed by loss of electricity earlier in the day.

Previewing the compositions on the program—three by Chopin, three by Liszt, one by

Collegian Review

Schoenberg and one by Beethoven—presented the possibility of having them all played in Romantic style.

This style employs use of ad-lib tempos, dramatic climaxes and overflowing motionalism. When Ohlsson came on stage this possibility was reinforced. He is a tall man with large hands which would enable easy manipulaton of the octave runs, full chord and loud dynamics also used in this style.

But when he began his first piece, an early Beethoven sonata, the preconceptions were found wrong. The scaler passages were crisp, the tempos steady and the whole effect was one of dryness and control, played in the classical style.

Ohlsson's charismatic personality came through as he took time to explain the 12-tone row, a modern composition technique in which a song is written based on only 12 notes, to the audience before he played Schoenberg's "Five Piece , Opus 23."

Ohlsson never tried to do something while he was playing, he just did it. There was no struggling, no attempt to make a piece sound impressive. The simple passages were played simply.

My only real criticism would have to center on the second half of the program. The three compostions by Liszt, "Benediction de Dieu dans la Solitude," "Les Funerailles" and "Mephisto Waltz, No. 1" were played consecutively and lacked variety.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Lois Graham is a senior in music composition and theory at K-State.

Pipeline break spills 84,000 gallons of oil

EMPORIA (AP)—Crews from a Tulsa pipeline company worked southwest of Emporia Monday to contain a spill of thousands of gallons of crude oil into Jacobs Creek.

Some 84,000 gallons of oil spilled from a pipeline break southwest of the city Friday. An undetermined amount flowed into the creek, which empties into the Cottonwood River about four miles west of Emporia.

R.G. Keearns, manager of environmental affairs and pipeline safety for Williams Pipeline Co., said the break was in a 16-inch pipeline running from El Dorado to Des Moines. The break was about eight miles south and eight miles west of Emporia.

The accident dumped about 2,000 barrels of crude oil but Williams said he was unsure how much had spilled into the creek.

Keearns said the cause of the leak was "a longitudinal seam failure."

Presto! Spartan magic beats Indiana State

SALT LAKE CITY (AP)—Michigan State threw a net around Larry Bird with a brilliant zone defense and Earvin "Magic" Johnson scored 24 points as the Spartans defeated the Indiana State Sycamores 75-64 Monday to win the NCAA basketball championship.

The loss ended a Cinderella season for the Sycamores, who had stormed out of nowhere to the top of The Associated Press poll and had won 33 straight games before the final.

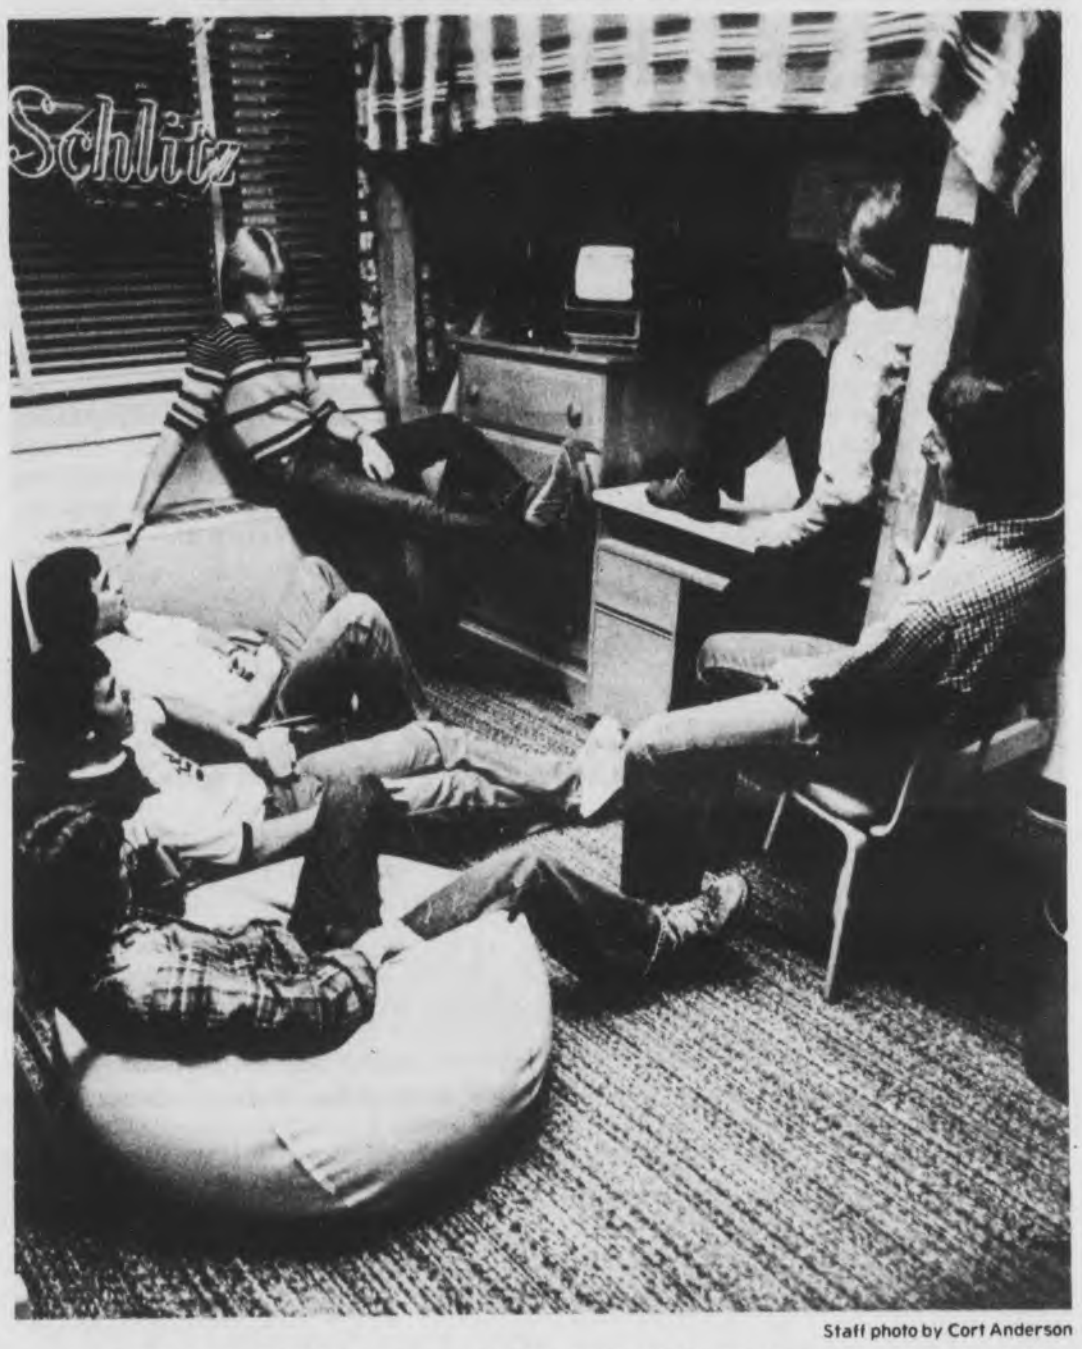
Bird, who had been killing just about everyone this season with a 29.0 scoring average, had to work hard for his 19 points against the Spartans' two-three zone, which sagged on the blond bomber every time he went to the basket.

The national championship was the first for Michigan State in its fourth appearance in this tournament.

THE SYCAMORES never led after the opening minutes and trailed by as many as 16 points several times early in the second half. But they made it interesting with a late 12-2 flurry behind Bird that chopped Michigan State's advantage to 52-46 with 10 minutes left in the game.

Johnson then spearheaded a rally that put the Spartans in command and quieted the usually raucous Indiana State fans in the noisy crowd of 15,410.

Johnson scored seven points in an 8-4 burst that moved the Big Ten Conference power's lead to 61-50 with 5:06 left in the game.



The Sycamores never came within striking distance of the Spartans after that.

Bird, who had been a terror in this tournament in four previous games, was so stymied by the rugged Michigan State defense that at one point he went more than 13 minutes without a field goal.

Foul trouble hurt both teams in the closely called game, and the calls had both coaches bitterly complaining to the officials throughout the contest.

GREG KELSER, who scored 19 points for the Spartans, put the cap on the game with an enormous slam dunk at the end and the Michigan State cheerleaders and some supporters rushed to hug their heroes.

While the Michigan State players danced joyously around the court, Bird sat disconsolately on the bench with his head buried in a towel, his great college career ended.

Search for 'a ringmaster' to be spring football priority

Unlike last year, the football field will get some use this spring, and not just by the baseball team.

The K-State football team will begin practicing for the fall season Friday with "finding a ringmaster" as Coach Jim Dickey's number one concern.

By ringmaster, Dickey was referring to a quarterback to lead his team.

Although the football team returns with plenty of talent, the Wildcats 1978 starting quarterback, Dan Manucci, played out his eligibility last season.

Five players, including senior letterman Sheldon Paris, will battle for Manucci's spot. Also on display will be junior Paul Hobbs, freshman Darrell Dickey, juco transfer Bob Daniels and walkon Mike Kopsky.

"We need to find out who can get us into the end zone...throwing, running, handling the offense or whatever," Dickey said. "Sheldon has the early edge because of his experience from last season, but it's pretty much a wide-open race at the position."

ALTHOUGH K-State appears to have a lot of depth and experience in other positions, Dickey said he hopes to evaluate his entire squad during spring ball.

"That's one of the things we didn't get accomplished last year," Dickey said. K-State was prohibited from holding spring practice due to early training violations.

Spring drills will end April 28 with the annual Varsity-Alumni game.

DePaul takes third as Aguirre scores 34

SALT LAKE CITY (AP)—Freshman Mark Aguirre scored 34 points, including eight in overtime, as DePaul turned back fired-up Penn 96-93 in the third-place game of the NCAA basketball playoffs Monday night.

DePaul blew a 23-point lead before fighting back to beat the Ivy Leaguers.

Leading by 46-23 with about four minutes left in the first half, the Blue Demons seemed to have the game locked up. But Penn came back to make a game of it behind Tony Price, who scored 31 points.

Price tallied six points in the last three minutes of the first half, helping Penn chop the deficit to 54-43 at intermission.

Gary Garland added 22 points for DePaul, while Curtis Watkins had 18. Bobby Willis added 14 points for Penn.

Kappa Sigma hosts charity tourney

K-Staters and Manhattan residents will be raising their rackets for The United Way next month.

Kappa Sigma fraternity is sponsoring a tennis tournament which begins Saturday and ends with the finals at Cottonwood Racquet Club April 29.

Some celebrities are expected to play in the tourney, including Gary Spani of the Kansas City Chiefs and Paul Coffman of the Green Bay Packers. Both are former K-State football players.

Attorney General Bob Stephan has been invited to play, although tournament chairman Dan Brenner said he's yet not received confirmation.

Brenner is expecting 40-50 entrants in the tournament.

Sponsors will donate $5 to The United Way for each round of advancement won by the player they are sponsoring.

The finals will be covered by WIBW and KTSB TV stations in Topeka.

Entries for the tournament are due at the Kappa Sigma fraternity, 1930 College Heights Road, by midnight Wednesday. An organizational meeting will be held for contestants Thursday at 8 p.m.

Extra points

'Butt Al, what's a girth worth?'

After unmercifully attacking the Mizlou Network last Friday, I promised that NBC would do a much better job during the NCAA playoffs. And, it has.

However, even the big boys at NBC make some comments which violate the 11 Commandments of Color Commentary, published bi-decadely by the Crayola Crayon company.

For instance, Al McGuire commented during Saturday's DePaul-Indiana State game that DePaul freshman Mark Aguirre was 6-7 but "with a rear end that big, he plays like he's 6-10."

Either McGuire is a bun man or a whole new recruiting statistic may be developing.

I can see the stat sheets now—"height, 6-7; weight, 210; 40-yard dash speed, 4.5; girth and-or rear end size, 42 inches."

Sports Illustrated will run stories on the high school stars, saying "Wilmore has quickness, agility, good vision, jumping ability, and the biggest rear end in the history of Pennsylvania basketball. He's only 6-2, but with a rear end that large, he plays like he's 7-1."

MCGUIRE and Dick Enberg also had some fun with Michigan State substitute Jaimie "Shoes" Huffman. McGuire nicknamed him "Shoes" during an earlier game in which Huffman spent several minutes of his playing time trying to put his shoe back on. When he finally got the shoe in place, he scored his first points of his Michigan State career, thereby making himself America's next folk legend.

He was even called "a white Earvin Johnson" by McGuire after making a semi-spectacular pass. That's going way too far, but NBC can be forgiven for its attention to Shoes because the 101-67 slaughter of Penn was about as interesting as the fierce competition between a firing squad and a firing squadee.

TECHNICAL problems also plagued the telecast Saturday.

Apparently the telephone lines are used for the NBC transmissions, and something seems to get messed up every once in a while.

It would be refreshing if the networks would suffer an attack of honesty when something goes awry.

Enberg would say "we understand that your picture is upside down, colorless and there are wavy vertical lines all over it, but it's not the telephone company's fault. We're just really goofing up here and we're so incompetent that it will probably be about a half hour before we get it figured out. You might try ABC right now. There's a dynamite "Three's Company" on."

During the championship game between Indiana State and Michigan State last night, McGuire was again in form.

His classic line, destined for large type in "Bartlett's Quotations," came after Larry Bird picked off a Spartan pass on a fast break.

"He looked like a professional pingpong player, the way he grabbed that ball," McGuire blurted.

Now, don't get me wrong—Al is one of my favorite commentators, but one has to wonder where basketball is headed if recruiters soon will be looking for big buns and pingpong prowess.

K-State golfers open season in Oklahoma; tryouts continue

Although tryouts for the K-State men's golf team are still underway, the top five players from last fall's team will travel to Shawnee, Okla., Wednesday for their opening tournament.

Tulsa University and six Big 8 teams are expected to compete in the tournament, which is hosted by Oklahoma Baptist.

Although the players going to Oklahoma are veterans on the K-State golf team, Coach Paul Anderson said it is too early in the season to predict how they will do in the tournament.

While the warm-up rounds are being played in Oklahoma Wednesday, tryouts for the K-State team will conclude as the 12 players making the team are announced. Anderson said eight of the 12 will be veterans from last season.

FOR the first time, K-State will have a women's golf team this season.

The women will open their season Friday with a triangular against Kansas and Nebraska in Lawrence.

Bargain babysitters?... K-State has solution

Where can a student parent get 50 cents-per-hour babysitting services besides the 12-year-old down the street?

K-State's Infant and Child Care Center offers low-cost child care services to student families, Murray Krantz, associate professor of family and child development, told members of the Student Senate Finance Committee during budget hearings Saturday.

Krantz requested senate pay for the entire $400 monthly salary of the center's graduate assistant. Senate decided last year to allocate $300 instead of $400 and the rest of the salary was paid by the Department of Family and Child Development.

In return for students paying the graduate assistant's salary, services at the center are reserved strictly for student families, Krantz said. The center can take care of 16 children at a time and is serving 38 families now, he added.

John Martin, committee member, questioned whether the center was actually serving the needs of the students because so few families are receiving the benefits of the center.

"It's almost like we're awarding a gift (to the families using the center)," Martin said.

Krantz said more families cannot be served because of space and staff limitations. The center tries to have one staff member for every four children, he said.

The center receives most of its funding from the Department of Family and Child Development. Only about 10 percent of the cost is subsidized by Student Senate, he said.

Krantz told the committee if senate does not fund the position next year, he will have to "go somewhere to get the extra money and insure that we can get kids."

Krantz said he couldn't guarantee students would be given first consideration if senate withdrew funds. The center's fees would have to be raised and the center's staff might have to consider taking non-student families to insure full enrollment, he said.

"We'd like to stay with student families if we can, but it's a matter of economic survival," he said.

Krantz said other babysitting services charge about $1 per hour and many of the families the center serves can't afford to pay that much for the services.

'Not just for women' WRC reaches men

Budget hearings for Women's Resource Center (WRC) were unusual in that financing was not the major topic discussed.

The center's name was debated more than the $790 request WRC presented to Student Senate's Finance Committee during hearings Saturday. One committee member suggested the name of the center be changed to "Person's Resource Center."

"The WRC is not just for women but it's about women, and because it's about women, it includes men," said Maxine Lentz, graduate in education and WRC coordinator.

Lentz told the committee more men need to be included in the center's programs. Discussion about changing WRC's name followed.

"I know you're not militant, but it (the name) tends to hang on the militancy of the women's lib type thing," John Martin, committee member, said.

Margaret Nordin, WRC adviser and dean of women students, said men are welcome at the center and she hopes the name doesn't turn anyone away.

Lentz said changing the center's name would drastically change the direction of the center.

WRC centers itself around three basic sevices: it acts as a referral service, a resource library and a center presenting programs dealing with the changing role of women in society today, Lentz said.

Along with these programs, WRC presents specific programs requested by living groups, classes and the community.

Of the $790 requested, $400 will be the salary for one work-study assistant. This represents a $40 increase from this year's budget ($750) to pay minimum wage.

Psychic turns detective to find missing bodies

NUTLEY, N.J. (AP)—She calls them her babies, her angels. Though they may be skeletons or mutilated masses of flesh, to her they are, and always will be, beautiful smiling faces of innocent youth.

It's both moving and frustrating to Dorothy Allison, the psychic who helps authorities find the bodies of missing and murdered youngsters, as she studies their pictures in a photo album she keeps. She opens it on her kitchen table—the same table she's sat around with police to discuss the hundreds of cases she's been involved in.

She smiles with tight lips. "I wish I were in the picture before they were raped, sodomized and murdered," she said. "The best thing I can do is find the body and find the killer."

For many, psychic phenomena is pure bunk. But to a growing number of law enforcement officials, it's sometimes a last and reasonable resort in a case where all else has failed.

TWO YEARS ago, Allison described the gravesite of missing 14-year-old Susan Jacobson to Staten Island police. It was an oil drum. Her killer was caught and convicted.

She also "saw" the grave of 18-year-old Debbie Kline of Waynesboro, Pa., and gave police a composite sketch of her killer.

"When you know you haven't got very good leads and you want something, you try anything and everything," said Jim Durst, sheriff of Woodford County, Ill. His department has used a Chicago psychic in the unsolved murder case of 15-year-old Cathy Tucker, whose burnt body was found in an abandoned house in December.

"We'll probably know later on, but the psychic brought out some interesting points," he said. "To start with, we didn't even give her the age or anything else about the victim. She told us."

Salvatore Luberpazzi, a Nutley detective, didn't believe in psychic phenomena until he met Allison. "It's a very strange feeling to go up to this woman and tell her what I'm looking for and she describes the area and it's miles and miles away," he said.

"She's found 20 missing or deceased persons for us since 1968."

BUT IT DOESN'T always work for this 54-year-old grandmother. Last Christmas Eve, Capt. Joseph Kozenzack of the Des Plaines, Ill., police called her to help find the body of 15-year-old Robert Piest.

She stumbled through three feet of snow, drove more than 1,000 miles and worked 18 hours a day searching for the boy. She didn't find him.

Piest's body never was found, but John Gacy Jr. was charged with his murder and six others after 29 bodies were found in his home.

"The police gave me Robert's coat to hold," Allison recalls. "I like to hold something the person has touched when I'm looking. When I touched this coat, I started to itch. It was awful. I'm still taking medicine for those hives."

A signal from the grave? Who is to say. But Kozenzack doesn't lightly dismiss Allison's try. "I don't think it was a good time for her to come here," he says. "There was the snow and we were restricted where we could go on foot.

"If you really believe in the psychic part of it, then you know that you're dealing with about 30 victims and you're receiving all kinds of things from all of them. Maybe that's why Dorothy had so much trouble."

Iranians to cast long-distance votes

By BECKY VINING
Collegian Reporter

The voice of Iranian citizens residing in the United States will be heard in their home country when they gather in American cities Friday to ratify Iran's new government.

Iranians in Manhattan will travel to the Omar Mosque in Kansas City, Mo. to vote. A car-caravan will leave Manhattan Friday at noon.

The Iranians will vote on a referendum to adopt an Islamic Repbulic government in their home country.

A transitional government under Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini who has ruled since the monarchy of Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi was overthrown two months ago, said Fariborz-Jahansoozan of K-State's Moslem Student Association, a Persian-speaking group on campus.

If the referendum is passed, the Islamic Republic government will be officially in power. This government is based on politics within the Islam religion, as it doesn't believe in the division of state and church, according to Jahansoozan.

The polls in the U.S. are being organized by the Iranian Embassy in Washington D.C., he said.

AN EMBASSY SOURCE said Iranian citizens who are at least 16 years old may vote Friday in 11 cities in the U.S. The ballots will be counted by an election board at each city and results sent to the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Iran to be included in the national vote.

"There would still have to be an election to get the constitution itself," the embassy spokesman said. "Under it, the entire government would be a representative government with every minority represented."

"The entire revolution was based on the Islamic Republic," she said. "The entire 12 million were marching for the Islamic Republic."

"It's very doubtful that it (the referendum) won't pass," Jahansoozan said.

After 2,500 years of dictatorship this is their first chance to become involved in the type of government they want," the embassy source said. "We expect 50,000 (Iranians to vote in the U.S.)."

"63,000 people wouldn't have shed their blood if they hadn't wanted a new government," Jahansoozan said.

OPEC price hike called unjustified

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP)—The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) raised crude oil prices by 9 percent Tuesday to $14.54 a barrel and authorized members to tack on any surcharges they think the market will bear.

The increase, taking effect Sunday, should raise American retail gasoline prices by about 2 cents a gallon and increase the American bill for foreign oil by at least $4 billion over last year's total of $43 billion. Surcharges could push the bill higher.

State Department spokesman Hodding Carter called it "untimely and unjustified" and said it points up the need for strict conservation measures.

Algeria, Venezuela and Libya immediately said their countries would add surcharges to the basic rate and oil ministers here predicted other members of the 13-nation cartel would do likewise.

The base increase alone is expected to enrich OPEC nations by an additional $13.5 billion this year, analysts here say.

OPEC President Saeed Al Otaiba of the United Arab Emirates said the next OPEC meeting, scheduled here in June, could decide on yet another hike.

He said the UAE, Saudi Arabia and other Arab "moderates" opposed the even stiffer increases proposed by some countries and would continue to do so in the future. He said Ecuador joined the fight to keep the increase low.

Militant members such as Iraq, Iran and Libya lobbied hard for larger increases.

Savitch

Economic woes stinging Carter

By SUE FREIDENBERGER
Staff Writer

Jessica Savitch started in the broadcast business in a time when men's faces dominated the nightly newscast and even her good looks couldn't get her a job.

She said she is confused by people who say she's "made it" because she's a woman, when it used to be she couldn't get a job for that very reason.

Savitch, who anchors the NBC weekend news, spoke about herself, the network and Washington's political atmosphere at the semester's first all-University convocation Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

Monday's signing of the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty, Savitch said, was the "biggest media event of our time."

At a press conference Tuesday morning she called the peace talks the "Anwar-Menachem Show" and conceded that the talks were a "little over-covered" by the media.

"But the media involvement is more positive than negative," she added. If people know more about a situation, it will be more carefully considered. The peace treaty warranted most of the coverage it received, she said.

"It is costing us $5 billion in extra aid to Egypt and Israel," Savitch said. "The price of peace is anything but cheap...especially when we wake up the next morning and find that the OPEC oil cartel has raised oil prices and can do so again any time at will."

SAVITCH SAID because of the high cost of the peace talks and increased oil prices, along with the general state of the economy, Jimmy Carter has about a 50-50 chance for re-nomination in 1980.

"He's up for a lot of criticism. If he doesn't do something substantive this year, it will be difficult for him to get renominated," she said.

She said the Democratic party is looking for an alternate, and potential candidates are Massachusetts Sen. Ted Kennedy and California Gov. Jerry Brown.

"The Republicans are in a good offensive position, considering the rate of inflation and the state of the economy," she said. "I think (Tennessee Sen.) Howard Baker will be nominated. He's liberal."

When asked about the rating competition between networks and the relative lack of success of NBC's Weekend magazine show, Savitch said time was a key factor in determining success.

"You have to remember that "60 Minutes" didn't do well when it first came on. It's been on for 10 years now; CBS stuck with it and now it's rated in the top 10.

"I think if we stick with Weekend, it will be a success."

ALTHOUGH SHE didn't cover the American Agriculture Movement (AAM) tractorade this year, Savitch said she met the farmers last year.

"There is a feeling in Washington that farmers live a great life because they breathe fresh air." Therefore, the AAM tractorcades in Washington are not effective, she said.

"It snarls traffic and irritates people and does as much harm as good. The thing it did do was get the attention of the media across the country," Savitch said.

Objectivity is a major concern in broadcasting, she said.

"Whenever you put an individual in between an event and another individual's perception of that event it becomes distorted. Total objectivity is impossible."

On a lighter note, Savitch recalled her first experiences with the "recognizability" that comes with working a network news show.

"A lady came up to me one day. I was just waiting for her to say, 'I know you...you're Judy Woodruff (another blonde NBC reporter)!' She said, 'I know you...you're Carol Simpson!' Carol is the only black female correspondnt on the staff!"

Savitch has been accused of getting her job on the basis of her good looks. She disagrees.

(see SAVITCH, p. 2)

City, county commissions study Little Kitten Creek development

Construction of a sanitary sewer district to serve the Little Kitten Creek area west of Manhattan, was discussed by a joint study session of the Manhattan and Riley County commissioners last night.

The area is one of four that is part of Manhattan's Growth Guidance System, set up to meet the objectives of community growth and development.

Although no decision was reached, the City Commission indicated its willingness to annex the area if a county sewage district is established.

The County Commission then requested the annexation proposal be put on the agenda for the City Commission's meeting Tuesday, and, if approved, the City Commission will send a letter to the county formally announcing its intentions. The City Commission agreed.

The controversy stemmed from the separate city and county functions in aiding city development. The county was hesitant to build a sewage district without a commitment from the city to annex and develop the land.

The two commissions also discussed improving drainage on a tract of land adjacent to the northeast corner of the city, part of which is proposed for annexation.

The land is part of a 2,800-acre drainage basin, most of which is owned by K-State for agricultural research purposes. Runoff from the agronomy and livestock research farms was cited as contributing most of the runoff problems at the basin's lower end, causing flooding of the proposed tract.

It was noted that some improvement of the present drainage ditch would be needed before the city can develop the land, as the present ditch gets narrower at the lower end of the drainage basin.

Since the University's land is involved, it was suggested that a joint meeting between the city, county and University be held to discuss further action.

Savitch...

"Sure it doesn't hurt but if you can't do the job, they're not going to keep you. I write all my own material and get all my own stories, as does everyone on the NBC staff," she said.

SOMETIMES THE work becomes a hassle. Savitch said she works in Washington all week, then flies back to New York to tape the weekend news broadcasts.

"It's very hard to live in two cities. I think my home is the Eastern Airlines shuttle," she said. "I have to budget my time quantitatively, not qualitatively."

Savitch has been honored with numerous awards for outstanding news work. One documentary featuring abortion, precipitated 60 letters from viewers.

"Half the letters said I was biased in favor of abortion and half said I was biased the other way. I know I've done a fair job of reporting when both sides hate me," she said.

Savitch urged people to take advantage of all sources of news and information, saying that no source is correct all the time.

"TV viewers have the opportunity to be the best-informed people in the entire world. They can, and should, take advantage of all dissemination of information from every media source."

Line schedules available for fall

K-Staters interested in furthering their efforts in higher education can now buy the Fall 1979 line schedule in the Union Book store for 25 cents.

The schedule contains information on class times and room assignments, plus information on enrollment procedures for this spring and fall.

A calendar including enrollment deadlines, drop-add, and sign up for A-pass-F and credit no credit is included in the schedule.

Pre-enrollment for the fall 1979 semestr starts April 2.

George Eaton, superintendent of printing services, said the summer line schedules will be finished by Friday.

Kansas Citians select Berkley

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Richard Berkley became the first Jewish mayor in Kansas City history and the first Republican mayor in 54 years by defeating black Democrat Bruce Watkins 73,358 to 52,793 Tuesday.

Watkins, who had campaign help from Vice President Walter Mondale, conceded the election to Berkley late Tuesday, saying Kansas City wasn't ready for a black mayor. "I'm concerned that maybe it takes more money and a different color to win," he said.

The Mondale campaign visit became an issue because the election is nominally non-partisan.

Arafat rallies hardline Arab leaders

Bomb attacks in Israel and Paris killed one person and injured more than 50 others Tuesday in a terrorist campaign against the newly signed Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty.

Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) leader Yasser Arafat urged hardline Arab leaders gathered in Baghdad, Iraq, to support the PLO's war against the treaty by ending all trade with the United States. He also urged a new oil embargo.

"It is taken for granted that (Egyptian President Anwar) Sadat's regime will be punished, but don't just hit the tail of the snake, hit the head of the snake—the United States," Arafat said.

Arafat also said, "We should stop buying big American cars and other products" because the United States "pushed Egypt and Israel into signing this deal."

Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein Warnej backed Arafat, saying U.S. interests in the Middle East "cannot be spared reprisals...."

There was no other immediate comment on Arafat's proposal from the foreign and economy ministers of 18 Arab nations who met in the Iraqi capital to decide how to sabotage the peace pact.

Ooof! Ugh! Pow! It's movie time

LOS ANGELES—"Boulevard Nights," another movie about brutal street gangs, has been blamed for violence that has left 10 persons injured in shootings and stabbings and forced theaters to hire armed guards to protect their patrons.

Though a box office hit, it also has sent some theater managers scurrying to lawyers to cancel contracts for the film.

It all sounds like a rerun of the events surrounding the showing of another film of the same genre, "The Warriors," which allegedly incited two gang-related shootings that resulted in at least two deaths a few weeks back.

A third street gang film, "Walk Proud," will be released in May.

Warner Bros. Studios, "extraordinarily happy" at the box office success of "Boulevard Nights," disclaims any blame for the violence.

The violence surrounding "Boulevard Nights" comes only a month after Paramount's film about New York street gangs "The Warriors" was blamed for touching off a rash of incidents in which two Southern California youths were killed and New York City subway riders were assaulted by a gang of youths who had just seen the film.

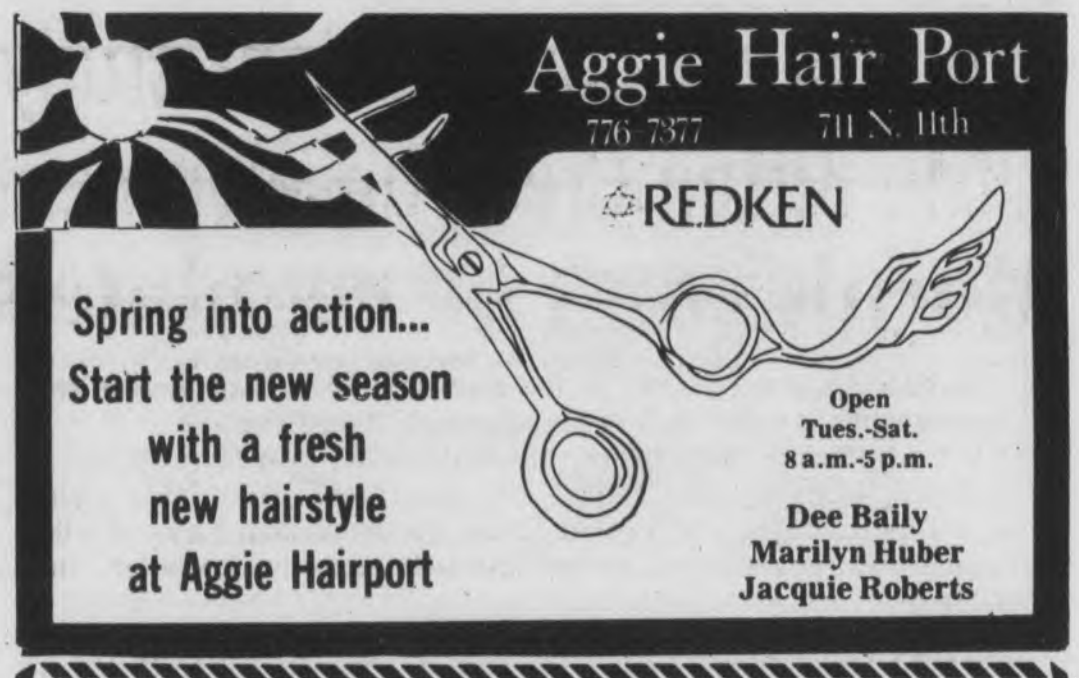
Army nerve gas released in Utah

DUGWAY PROVING GROUND, Utah—The Army blew up 26 landmines believed to contain a liquid nerve agent on an isolated part of this desert testing post Tuesday, and the base commander declared: "There was no widespread contamination."

Gov. Scott Matheson, who expressed anger on learning of the plans last week, said through a spokesman that he was glad the destruction of the canisters went without incident—and he was glad it was over.

The operation involved destroying mines found in January by an Army patrol. The mines, which had evidently been discarded and forgotten during a period of open-air testing in 1963, were now deteriorating.

Their destruction was twice delayed by tricky winds before it finally was accomplished on Tuesday.



The mines were covered with several thousand pounds of plastic C4 explosives and blown up under what the Army described as ideal winds at 8:46 a.m.

He had set up communications with the blast site, and after the blast was set off, he announced with a smile:

"It has gone. The detonation is complete."

Weather

Hi Crimestoppers. My Dick Tracy weather monitor reports today will be windy and cloudy. Holy moly! Temperatures should be mild today as highs are expected to reach the upper 50s. Thursday is expected to be partly cloudy with a chance for showers and thundershowers. Oh, and by the way, here is today's crimestopper tip—goodness is not bad.

Opinions

Morals can't be regulated

To hear some people tell it, the mere availability of alcohol and pornography is equivalent to the misuse of these items.

It's surprising, and absurd, at a time when almost everyone—farmers, businessmen, school administrators—complains about over-regulation from federal and state government for a lot of folks to still want government to regulate behavior they consider "immoral."

The dry forces in this state are certain the increased availablity of liquor will lead to all manners of calamity. They have a point when they talk about ABUSE of alcohol but they have yet to prove any correlation between availability and overconsumption.

If you wanted to get drunk in Kansas right now, you could do it. Go to the liquor store and buy a few fifths, or sit in a bar and get sloshed on 3.2 beer. A confirmed alcoholic will get his juice regardless of what the government does (look what happened during Prohibition). Alcoholics don't get that way simply because they like the taste of the grape; they have personal problems only they can deal with through the bottle.

The same argument holds for pornography. No one is holding a gun to your head forcing you to buy "Hustler" or see movies such as "Deep Throat" and "Misty Beethoven." The choice to use or not to use these materials is up to YOU.

If salacious smut is not your thing, avoid it. Don't patronize theaters having sex shows or bookstores selling sex books. But don't ask the government to protect you from these items at the expense of those who get some pleasure from them.

If the government has no right to regulate business, it has no right to regulate personal morals. We cannot protect ourselves from ourselves with laws. Healthy family environments and good education are the tools which will prevent the abuse of alcohol, marijuana, pornography and anything else which in moderation provides pleasure, in excess can lead to tragedy.

The handwriting is on the wall if we read it. Laws regulating personal morals attack the symptoms, not the causes. The real problem is a socio-economic structure making consumers out of everyone from cradle to death and making it imperative for both parents to work in order to provide the basic necessities of life.

So back off, Reverend Taylor, Vern Miller and others of your ilk. Your intentions are noble; your methods are completely wrong. The neo-conservatives are right: we need less government, not more. Regulations on personal behavior are a good place to start trimming.

'Where the road is always smooth'

It would be hard to spend much time at K-State and not know Arne Richards. Although he slept in a little house on North 12th Street, he lived everywhere. You could never be sure where Arne would turn up next.

He ran through the streets of Manhattan like a phantom—pounding dry, dusty country roads in the summer, mincing along icy sidewalks in the winter. He often ran alone, but sometimes was accompanied by Peppy, his jogging dog. Never was a pet more rightly named.

You could almost guess by looking at him that he was a long distance runner. Arne was so thin his sweat suit hung on his body as it would on a wire hanger. But his slight physique was no obstacle to athletic achievement. When you're 46 years old, running in a 26-mile marathon, you don't need to carry any extra baggage.

He loved to race. He was never fast, but he was relentless. He would line up behind the younger, more talented runners in a race at a K-State track meet, and run his three miles, never once daunted because he was eight or 10 minutes off the pace. He was always right on his own pace.

WHEN HE wasn't competing, he was organizing. With a stopwatch draped around his neck, he was as common a sight at a track meet as the man with the starting gun. If he was asked to be a lane judge, he would discharge his task with all the intensity and seriousness of a Supreme Court judge.

But then, Arne was very thorough in everything he did. He would drive to Blue Springs to visit his mother every weekend during the last few months of her life, even if he had just competed at 10 kilometers the day before. But there was no activity he pursued more doggedly than his running. He could (and would, if you let him) recite from memory his place and time from every race he'd ever run. If he ever missed a day of training, I don't think anyone knew about it.

It is at once tragic and appropriate he died while on one of his daily runs. He abhorred the term "jogging." Arne was probably seen and forgotten by dozens of people the day he made his last run. Now he can be sure he will never be forgotten.

ARNE HAD no family as most of us think of families. There will be no grieving wife, no children at his memorial service. But he had a much bigger family.

Runners from all over the Midwest were his brothers. Youngsters, whose first exposure to competitive track was at one of the summer meets he helped organize, were his children. No one was really close to Arne, but everyone who knew him feels reduced by his death.

Probably Arne Richards' only regret at dying at such an early age was losing the opportunity to set even more age group records for distance running. Having vanquished his competition at 45 and over, he was looking forward to setting records at 50 and over, 55 and over, and on and on.

But don't feel sorry for Arne. He is still running, only now he runs where big dogs don't chase you, potholes don't trip you, and the road is always smooth and flat.

Randy Shuck

Caring—mortal way to immortality

The time is 23 years past, and most of the characters have faded into the mists.

The child was five years into the world, and lived surrounded by the quiet woods shading the house in which he was born and the manicured grounds of his grandmother's home.

The death of his grandfather four years before was a memory which the child retained through the stories told him by his parents.

Grandmother seldom talked of her husband. When she did tell his story through tales of mutual happiness, the emerald eyes which had viewed her 82 years smiled as brightly as the rest of her sun-browned face.

Her age was not apparent to the child who saw the ghost-smiles in the lines etched around her eyes and mouth and the light freckling of age spots on her hands.

SHE WAS older than his parents, the child knew, yet she talked to him as a friend and equal, not in the condescending tone of an adult.

The season was spring—full-flower, a time of life and rebirth. Yet this night as the grandmother and child lay on the fresh new grass they talked of death and ending.

It was a clear night with southern winds breathing on their cheeks. She pointed to the sky, to one of the brighter stars in the Milky Way.

"See that star?" she asked the boy, "The one that twinkles like a diamond in the flame?"

The boy saw and while she talked he watched until it seemed to glow brighter than the others.

"That's our star," she said, "Yours and mine, remember where it is so that you'll always be able to see it through all the others."

"My life has been a happy one," she said to the child, "Soon I will be gone, but the star that is ours will remain. When you see our star, remember me and I will be there."

THE CHILD asked why she would leave to go to the star.

"I will die soon," she answered. "My body will crumble into dust and will be lost to the world, but the immortal me will live through you and our star. Remember me and my life will never end."

One week later she died, and the child remembered.

Someday the child within me will share that star with a favored child and tell of my grandmother in the sharing.

We all share stars and live in the memories of our loved ones: "When you see our star, remember me and I will be there."

Richards—a trusted friend

Editor,

Arne Richards was a gentleman, a competent librarian, an outstanding athlete and a trusted friend who will leave a void in the lives of the many people he inspired. The citizens of Manhattan and everyone associated with K-State are indeed fortunate to have claimed him as one of our own for over 15 years.

His national reputation in academic and athletic circles reflects credit upon us all. His support of human rights and the arts is additional evidence of his wide ranging service to society. Few persons have given as unselfishly of themselves.

My wife and I knew him best as a person who loved running. We cannot hope to emulate Arne's athletic achievements but we will continue running and will always be grateful for his inspiration.

Front-page photo no way to remember Richards

Editor,

When I heard on the radio that Arne Richards was dead many thoughts went through my mind.

I remembered him finishing the Junction City marathon two summers ago and joking at the finish line, "Hey, that was fun. Let's do it again." I remembered seeing him jogging in and around Manhattan, sometimes alone and sometimes with his four-footed friend. I remembered talking to him in the library. So I, who barely knew him, have many fond memories. I'm sure others do too.

And then there's the 5 by 8 picture in the Collegian as you announce Arne's death. Does this kind of junk contribute to an understanding of the situation? Does it help anyone appreciate Arne's zest and enthusiasm? Does it do anything for the many people who saw Arne jogging around town but didn't know who he was?

My congratulations to photographer Bo Rader for being on the scene and getting a telephoto shot of some men carrying a stretcher up the levee. How disappointing, Editor, that you chose to run this trash rather than giving us one last look at the real Arne.

Debate Squad wants $4,000 Senate funding

By MARY JO PROCHAZKA
SGA Editor

Debate Squad, a group not presently funded by Student Senate, wants $4,000 from senate next year.

Ed Schiappa, representative of Debate Squad presented a $10,000 budget for the 20-member group to senate's Finance Committee during budget hearings Saturday.

The $10,000 requested would pay for the squad's attending 23 tournaments throughout the United States next year. A breakdown of the request shows $2,000 requested from Arts and Sciences College Council and $4,000 from the Department of Speech and dean of the College of Arts and Sciences along with the $4,000 request of senate.

"We're asking for a contribution equivalent to subsistence, Schiappa told the committee members. He said the squad decided to use an "integrated approach"and seek a "fair share" from each group the squad is requesting money from.

Student Senate used to completely fund Debate Squad but sent it to the college council for funding in the early 1970's when senate began funding college councils, according to Chet Peters vice president for Student Affairs and Finance Committee member.

This year the squad was funded $7,245. Of this $5,000 came from the speech department and dean's office and $2,245 came from Arts and Sciences College Council.

Schiappa was asked why the speech department and dean's office cut their allocation to the group by $1,000.

"This ($4,000) is the figure we were told and this is what we've been guaranteed," Schiappa said. "We ourselves have been wondering why we were cut back."

Schiappa said Debate Squad is important to the University because some classes and faculty members are here only because debate is.

"We feel there are fringe benefits that occur as a result of those people being here," he said.

Of the total requested, $4,107 would be used for subsistence (food and lodging), $1,895 for entry fees $1,200 for judging fees and $2,800 for travel expenss, according to the proposed budget.

If the squad does not get all the money requested, it would probably have to cut back on the number of tournaments attended, Schiappa said.

Committee passes bill on taxable real estate

TOPEKA (AP)—A bill designed to set the stage for a statewide reappraisal of taxable real estate cleared the House Assessment and Taxation Committee Tuesday with surprising ease.

Fourteen of the 21 members voted to send the measure to the full House membership for debate.

Chairman James Braden (R-Wakefield) expressed surprise at the bipartisan support the bill received in committee.

"I have hopes the bill will pass in the House if it doesn't become a partisan matter," Braden said.

Gov. John Carlin has threatened to veto the measure unless the Legislature also agrees to submit a constitutional amendment that would allow individual residences to be treated as a separate class of property for assessment and taxation purposes.

But Rep. Ruth Wilkin (D-Topeka) made a substitute motion to recommend the bill to the full House. It carried.

The bill would set up a program under which data on revised taxable valuations of property would be collected statewide prior to Jan. 1, 1983.

Use of the revised valuations for tax purposes would require further action by the Legislature.

The data collection process is estimated to cost $3.6 million. It would include the collection of market value data on all property and data for use-value appraisal of farmland.

The bill carries tax lid provisions designed to prevent governmental units from collecting "windfall" taxes if the new valuations are much higher and are implemented.

Quick response to oil spill averts pollution of refuge

EMPORIA (AP)—Quick response by authorities was believed Tuesday to have averted pollution of the wildlife refuge at John Redmond Reservoir by a crude oil spill from a ruptured pipeline.

Cleanup of the spill on Jacobs Creek in open country southwest of Emporia was expected to take another week, depending on the weather.

An estimated 168,000 gallons of crude was dumped in the creek Friday. Most of that had to be set fire and burned off to prevent it from seeping into the Cottonwood and Neosho rivers which flow into the reservoir.

As much of the remaining oil as possible will be pumped from the surface of the creek into trucks. Earth-moving equipment was brought in to dispose of the oil soaked up by the damp ground.

Crews sent in by the Williams Pipeline Co. used plastic booms and other devices to trap the oil in the creek Saturday, and a mile-long stretch of the spill was set afire Monday.

The spill, which extended five miles downstream from the break, was stopped on the creek a half mile short of the Cottonwood River about four miles west of Emporia.

"Our main objective was to prevent the oil from getting into the Cottonwood River and John Redmond," said Marvin Glotzbach of the Kansas Department of Health and Environment in Topeka.

Tom Mosher of the state Forestry, Fish and Game Commission said damage to fish and wildlife had been minor, so far. "We got off real lucky, I think," he said. "We'll have to see what happens."

The break in the 16-inch pipeline, which runs from El Dorado to Des Moines, Iowa, was attributed to a seam failure. The line is buried about four feet underground through the area.

Court forbids random checks; drivers given protection of law

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Supreme Court ruled Tuesday that police officers may not stop motorists' automobiles at random to check drivers' licenses and car registration.

The justices said random stops of motorists who are not suspected of breaking any law violate the Constitution's protection from unreasonable search and seizure.

The 8-1 decision struck down a Delaware law that had given individual police officers broad discretion in choosing cars for the routine checks. Many states allow similar police practices, which now will have to be changed.

"An individual operating or traveling in an automobile does not lose all expectation of privacy simply because the automobile and its use are subject to government regulation," Justice Byron White wrote for the majority.

White stressed, however, that the ruling does not bar Delaware and other states from "developing methods for spot checks that involve less intrusion or that do not involve unconstrained exercise of discretion."

WHITE SUGGESTED that questioning all oncoming traffic at roadblock-type stops could be an alternative. Two other justices, in a concurring opinion, suggested that police could make "not purely random stops such as every 10th car to pass a given point."

The sole dissenter was the court's other leading conservative, Justice William Rehnquist.

Noting that the court is willing to allow police to stop groups of motorists but not a single car at random, Rehnquist said, "The court thus elevates the adage 'misery loves company' to a novel role in Fourth Amendment jurisprudence."

The Delaware police case stemmed from a 1976 stop which led to an arrest for marijuana possession.

The criminal defendant successfully barred police from introducing the seized marijuana as evidence at his trial when state courts ruled that the drug was seized during an unconstitutional detention.

IN OTHER DECISIONS Tuesday, the court:

—Declined to decide, in what could have been a critically important race-relations case from Los Angeles, whether persons who sue under an 1866 civil rights law have to prove "discriminatory intent." That proof is necessary for bias suits based on the Constitution.

Agent combines work, hobby

COLBY (AP)—As FBI agent for western Kansas, Bill Piper spends many hours on the road, accompanied only by the natural surroundings of the High Plains.

So he carries with him a pair of binoculars and a field indentification guide for North American birds—always on the ready for the sighting of an owl, eagle, hawk or falcon.

The 51-year-old Piper has spent the last 10 years seriously watching birds of prey in his spare time or while he travels.

"I'm on the road quite a bit during the week and I'm always hoping I can see something," Piper said.

"You can go out for a drive and not see a bird and then go back a few hours later, over the same territory, and see 15 or 20. The wind and atmospheric pressure during different parts of the day can give you entirely different results.

Piper, an FBI agent for 28 years, the last 16 here, said he became interested in bird watching because of a liking of "things in their natural surroundings."

The native of Corydon, Iowa, he worked as an agent on New York City and eventually was assigned to the Colby position.

Ag Week festivities include roach races, bale throwing

Hay will fly and cockroaches will be on their marks during the College of Agriculture's second annual Ag Week, which starts today and ends Sunday.

"The purpose of Ag Week is to bring the ag students closer together and to promote agriculture," said Steve Handke, junior in ag economics and Ag Week co-chairman.

Today's events include agriculture exhibits in the Union Courtyard, a farm equipment exhibition outside the Union and Ag Council officer elections in Weber and Waters Halls and in the Union.

K-Staters will be able to participate in a farm animal weight guessing contest and egg toss in front of the Union Thursday, Hanke said.

A cockroach race and hay bale throwing contest will take place in front of the Union after Friday's All-University Open House opening ceremonies at noon.

A tree will be planted at 3 p.m. south of Call Hall in honor of Harold Gallaher, currently forestry department here, he said.

During Ag Science Day Saturday, the departmental clubs will have exhibits in Waters, Weber, Call and Shellenberger Halls demonstrating classroom and club work.

The Little American Royal, K-State's student livestock fitting and showing contest, will begin at 3 p.m. in Weber Arena.

At intermission the six Miss Agriculture finalists will be introduced and campus celebrities will compete in a cow milking contest. Contestants include quarterback Dan Manucci, basketball player Ed Nealy, marching band director Phil Hewett, assistant athletic director John Kadlec, acting dean of agriculture Dave Mugler and student body president Greg Musil.

'China Syndrome' spurs nuclear thinking

EDITOR'S NOTE: "The China Syndrome" is now showing at the Campus Theater in Aggieville

By JANET DAVISON
Review Editor

If you want to see a movie which will make you laugh, relax and generally enjoy yourself for two hours, DON'T go see "The China Syndrome."

If, however, you want to see a powerful,

Collegian Review

hard-hitting, thought-provoking film with some excellent acting and strong directing, "The China Syndrome" is the movie for you.

The movie has nothing to do with China and it's not about a weird psychotic condition either. It is about power—nuclear and corporate—and the misuse of both.

Jane Fonda, as Kimberly Wells, a young "soft" news reporter for a Los Angeles TV station, is nothing less than brilliant. With each movie she makes, her acting seems to improve.

Her convincing portrayal of a woman torn between wanting to break out of her "cute girl reporter" mold and remaining loyal to the station establishment will get you so involved you may forget it's just a movie you're watching.

JACK LEMMON, as Jack Godell, also is torn emotionally. As head engineer of a large nuclear power plant located outside LA, he must choose between loyalty to the plant and his profession, and doing what he knows is right to save a lot of lives.

About the only character in the film who isn't torn is the young cameraman, Richard, played by Michael Douglas. He knows what he wants and will stop short of little, including stealing, to get it. He has a strong, if somewhat radical, sense of justice which adds a nice touch of urgency and suspense to the show.

The combined acting of these three veterans is a large part of what makes this movie the best I've seen this year. Each turns in a powerful performance individually; and collectively they work a magic which mesmerizes the audience, leaving it spellbound.

Another important factor in the movie is subject matter. Nuclear power is, at best, controversial these days and there's no denying this movie is meant as a statement against it.

In several scenes, when advocates and opponents of nuclear power give testimony before a federal commission, the realism is no accident. The dialogue comes directly from transcripts of actual hearings.

NO ATTEMPT is made to hide allusions to the Karen Silkwood case either. For those of you who don't know, Silkwood was a young employee at a nuclear facility who died in a car accident on her way to talk with a New York Times reporter. Documents alleged to have been with her before the accident were missing when the car was found.

In one scene, a man carrying potentially damaging information against the nuclear plant is injured when his car is pushed off a cliff by unidentified bad guys in a van. When he is cut free from his car, the documents are gone.

The tension builds gradually to the final, chaotic climax which should have you on the edge of your seat. And, as you walk out of the theater in sickened, shocked silence, you may find yourself thinking twice about the safety of nuclear power. (And the integrity of some corporate bosses.)

Whatever your opinion on the subject, the ads for this movie should be enough to make you go out of curiosity. That's why I went. But if you think I'm going to tell you what the China Syndrome really is, forget it. Go see the movie and find out for yourself.

Israel, Egypt seek U.S. arms

WASHINGTON (AP)—The leaders of Israel and Egypt took different stands Tuesday on Palestinian autonomy but asked Congress nonetheless to give them the weapons of war and trust them to keep the peace.

Both warned of Soviet threats to freedom around the world.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat renewed a proposal for a combined municipal council of Arabs and Israelis in Jerusalem. But he declared flatly that "sovereignty in Arab Jerusalem should return to the Arabs."

Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin spoke separately to senators and congressmen assembled in meeting rooms on their respective sides of the Capitol. Sadat elaborated on his statements during a brief meeting with reporters.

Carlin plans for state to absorb extra money

TOPEKA (AP)—Gov. John Carlin said Tuesday he thinks funding school finance, taking the sales tax off utility bills, expanding homestead property tax relief and boosting highway spending will absorb all the extra money the state has available to spend.

The governor commented at his news conference in the wake of a rash of tax relief and spending bills now moving through the Legislature, following revelation the state will collect nearly $100 million more in revenue the next 15 months than had been projected.

Among them are a school finance plan which would take $53 million more state money to fund, the $18 million to take the sales tax off utility bills, and a $41 million expansion of homestead relief.

In addition, Carlin is proposing the transfer of as much as $40 million from the state general fund to the highway fund to beef up the state's road maintenance and construction program.

"Taking the tax off utility bills, expanding homestead and the highway proposals pretty much take up all the available money," Carlin said.

"I'm not surprised there are a lot of spending proposals floating around, but I am concerned in terms of what will eventually reach my desk.

"The important thing is that they (legislators) operate in such a way that they put the priorities first.

"I think we're pretty much agreed that we should take the sales tax off utility bills, then direct our attention in the direction of property tax relief."

HE SAID he supports the $41 million expansion of the homestead program, which originated with House Democrats.

The governor noted that the school finance plan "is going in every direction" as the two houses work over revisions in the state's system for distributing state aid to local school districts.

On another subject, the governor said he gave his blessing to former legislator Richard "Pete" Loux becoming chairman of the Kansas Corporation Commission because of "the very obvious reason of experience."

Federal grant cuts requested increase for FONE budget

FONE decreased the budget increase they are requesting from Student Senate because of a federal grant which will pay their assistant coordinator's salary.

FONE's assistant coordinator's position will be funded by the grant instead of student fees, Jim Bartlett FONE coordinator told senate's finance committee during Saturday's budget hearings. This reduced FONE's requested increase from $1614 to $264.

The grant was awarded to K-State's Center for Student Development by the state Social and Rehabilitation Services for a taped information system about alcohol consumption, said Robert Sinnett director of Lafene Mental Health and FONE adviser.

THE GRANT will pay personnel costs for the system which is scheduled to be operational next year, Sinnett said. Taped messages will be available from FONE and the University Learning Network, he said.

Bartlett requested a $300 allocation from Senate for tapes and equipment for the system.

He also requested an increase in the coordinator's salary from $250 to $300 per month and $50 monthly salary for a community contact person who would seek community funds.

"The goal of the FONE is to become a community and University service. It already is, but they (the community) should help defray the costs," Bartlett said.

Although FONE covers a wide range of problems its only area of extensive training deals with suicide, Bartlett said when asked what his feelings were about combining the services of FONE and Drug Education Center.

"Their (Drug Ed) area of expertise is drugs. We're not that close in function," he said.

A $14 increase was requested for advertising to cover rate increases and requests for office supplies and telephone expenses were reduced.

FONE was recently converted to the University telephone system and can use KANS-A-N—the long distance telephone system leased by the state government for state agencies, said Chet Peters, vice president for Student Affairs and committee member. Bartlett said he would see how this affects their request.

'Takes a while to get used to'; K-Staters examine cadavers

By CHRIS MCKEE
Collegian Reporter

For most people the thought of viewing a dead person is repulsive, but for students in Structure and Function of the Human Body it's a part of class.

"Some people can't handle it. If they can't, they aren't forced," Sally Robinson, graduate in physics, said.

Ron Gaines, biology instructor, said he gets the cadavers for the department from the Kansas University Medical Center in Kansas City.

ROBINSON SAID the bodies come from Kansans who have made provisions in their wills to donate their bodies to science.

"A lot of people in Kansas donate their bodies to science," she said. "KU has the right to do anything they want with the bodies. They always have an excess," she said.

Gaines said the cadavers cost K-State $250 each. "This cost is to help defray the cost of storage and the expenses for embalming the body. The bodies are embalmed at a funeral home," he said.

GAINES SAID the department is required to return the body to the med center where it is buried or cremated, depending on the wishes of the family.

"We have an indefinite return date. We have one cadaver we have had for 3½ years. It depends upon the quality of the cadaver," Gaines said. The quality of the cadaver depends on how well it was prepared by the funeral home, he said.

Robinson said when they get the cadaver they also get the death certificate that includes the name, age and cause of death.

"We go through the cadaver by systems. We study the muscular system first, then the respiratory system, the digestive system, circulatory system and so on," she said.

ROBINSON SAID by taking the cadaver apart by systems, the student can see how the systems interact.

She said the greatest advantage of having the cadaver is being able to show the actual structure of anatomy with a human example.

Robinson said all of the pre med and physical education majors are required to take the course.

"The odor of the embalming fluid is more offensive to most people than the sight," Gaines said. "It takes a while to get used to."

Robinson said the cadavers are sprinkled with a solution of glycerol, phenol and water which "helps to keep them from drying out and keep down bacterial growth."

Doctor, women question legality

Nebraska abortion law challenged

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP)—A constitutional challenge to Nebraska's week-old abortion law was filed Tuesday before Judge Warren Urbom in U.S. District Court.

The action brought by Womens Services Professional Corp. and Dr. G. William Orr of Omaha argues that the statute passed March 19 and signed by Gov. Charles Thone March 22 violates the constitutional rights of women and doctors in several respects.

The suit also alleges that portions of the law constitute an imposition of one particular religious view and therefore violate the doctrine of separation of church and state.

Proponents of the law have said it had the support of the Nebraska Catholic Conference, headed by the state's three Catholic bishops.

Urbom suspended most of an abortion law that was to go into effect in January, citing substantive constitutional questions surrounding it.

The law signed by Thone last week was the Legislature's answer to that suspension, and proponents said it was aimed at recognizing federal court decisions and eliminating most clear cut constitutional questions.

THE SUIT said that when the new law takes effect April 22, the "plaintiffs face a deprivation of their constitutional rights should they comply with the challenged sections and a threat of criminal prosecution if they do not."

Orr faces the additional possibility of losing his license to practice medicine and surgery if he does not comply, the suit said. Doctors also can be sentenced to one year in prison or fined up to $1,000 for violating the law.

The suit was brought both individually and as a class action.

The action contends the right of doctor-patient privacy is curtailed by the law because of provisions requiring minors under age 18 to obtain parental or guardian approval before an abortion can be performed.

The suit seeks a declaratory judgment, a temporary restraining order and preliminary and permanent injunctions prohibiting enforcement of the abortion statute.

THE SUIT further contends the statute violates the constitution by denying minor women the fundamental right of all women to determine whether to bear children because the law permits a parent or guardian to interfere in the abortion decision.

The suit says the law deprives women in Nebraska of free exercise of religion and constitutes an establishment of religion in violation of the constitution.

The suit contends the law constitutes enactment of one religious belief concerning abortions and the nature of the fetus, and constitutes the imposition of that view on women who would otherwise choose abortion according to their religions or non-religious beliefs.

The action also maintains that the enactment of the law has created and threatened further entanglement of church and state.

KU Arabs protest Egypt-Israel treaty

LAWRENCE (AP)—Arabian students at the University of Kansas conducted a peaceful noontime march along the university's main drive Tuesday, protesting the signing of a peace treaty between Egypt and Israel.

Some 100 marchers chanted slogans against the peace treaty, and were greeted by catcalls and chants of "Long Live Israel" from parade watchers.

A spokesman for the marchers, Majid Ali, an engineering student from New York City, charged that the treaty "only strengthens Israel's grip on illegally-occupied territory."

KP&L bounces back; storm worst in years

TOPEKA (AP)—When Mother Nature turned off the lights across more than half of Kansas Friday, she was proving just how vulnerable power systems across the state can be if conditions are right.

But weather and utility officials say Kansans can be thankful those precise conditions normally occur only in early winter or early spring, rather than when winter is at its worst.

"It was the most destructive storm we've had in the last 50 years," said Hal Hudson, Kansas Power and Light Company (KP&L) spokesman. "We had 98 percent of our power restored 15 hours after we went out, but it may be several months before all of our facilities are repaired." Damage to equipment is expected to run in the millions.

The unexpected snow and ice storm that rolled out of Colorado and across the Kansas plains toppled steel utility towers, snapped power poles and utility lines, cutting power for varying lengths of time from Liberal in far southwest Kansas to Atchison in the northeast.

But because of the warmer weather, the storm passed as quickly as it came, enabling repair crews to work virtually unimpeded rather than having to rely on National Guard helicopters and motorized equipment to get to trouble spots, as was the case during January's blizzards.

Allen Pearson of the National Weather Service said moisture-laden storms such as the one last week occur only in the early spring or sometimes in early winter. Kansas Corporation Commission spokesman Ward Salisbury agreed.

Last week's wet snow swelled some utility lines to five inches in diameter, Hudson said.

Some lines snapped when whipped by 55 mile per hour winds. Others sagged to the ground under the weight of the heavy snow, then "sprang back like a string on a bow when the snow melted and dropped off," Hudson added. Those lines whipped against each other and broke.

Col. Mahlon Weed of the Kansas Office of Emergency Preparedness said Tuesday the state could have coped with such a massive outage had it occurred during January's blizzards, but "we would have really had a time."

"We've done it before and I still think we could handle it."

The guard has 20 helicopters which can be used to ferry repair crews to trouble spots, the officer said.

"I don't think the state's power system is vulnerable," Weed said. "It's just that you can't prevent that kind of storm."

Service can be restored rather quickly to major areas, Weed said, but added "we've had problems in the rural areas. They're paralyzed from a standpoint of electricity and water. When electric pumps go off, the areas are without water.

"We can't supply electricity to a whole town, but we can get mobile generators to run water pumps, for nursing homes, things like this."

POWER COMPANIES in western and north central Kansas were hit Thursday night when the storm began its sweep eastward. But the big blow came Friday morning, when KP&L's lines began snapping and customers from one corner of the state to the other began losing power.

The Topeka-based utility serves 284 communities of all sizes plus 17 rural cooperatives and 40 municipal utilities. More than 90 communities were knocked out; some 90,000 KP&L customers were affected for periods ranging from a few hours to more than three days.

Twenty of the state's 36 rural electric cooperatives were without water for various periods of time.

The storm pointed up the complexity of the state's power network, its strengths and its weaknesses.

CENTRAL KANSAS Power Co. of Hays, for example, which provides electric power to 14 northwest Kansas counties lost its two major feeder lines from KP&L. It had to revert to its own generating equipment and power was lost to its customers while the transition was made.

KP&L normally feeds power to Central Telephone and Utilities of Great Bend. When KP&L's power sources dwindled, CTU's generating facilities were cranked up in Liberal, Dodge City, Great Bend and Concordia, and the company began supplying power back to KP&L. This power was furnished to Manhattan, getting power restored there several hours before KP&L could have done so by repairing its own lines.

WET WAVE... Phil Wolfe, a Manhattan resident, is hit by spray Tuesday afternoon as the tubes at Tuttle Creek Reservoir were opened full blast.

Tuttle lets loose its water; open tubes lower lake level

Because of rising water from spring rains and melting snow, the Army Corps of Engineers opened the tubes all the way at Tuttle Creek Reservoir Tuesday.

The tubes are releasing 178,000 gallons per second, according to James Johnston, project manager for the reservoir.

Permission to open the tubes had to be obtained from the Kansas City Water District Control, which checks the Kansas and Missouri River basins daily to determine how much water to release.

Johnston said the current flow from the tubes would help keep the two rivers at flood-stage level, while allowing the water level at the lake to drop a foot each day.

The reservoir's elevation was 1,109 feet Tuesday morning, which was 34 feet higher than the usual elevation.

Johnston said the corps can keep the water under control as long as its elevation remains below 1,136 feet, which is the elevation of the tops of the gates in the spillway area.

All parks at the reservoir are closed except for the River Pond area.

Europe loaded with drunken youths

LONDON (AP)—Some Soviet kids start hitting the vodka before they're 10. In Britain there are almost twice as many teen-age drunks as 12 years ago, and in West Germany laws banning booze sales to those under 16 are widely ignored.

An Associated Press survey shows many European countries are now deeply worried by the ravages of alcohol among their young people and are spending millions of dollars trying to do something about it.

The experience is similar to that of the United States where drinking ages were lowered at the time voting ages were several years ago, but many states have now raised drinking ages again.

Some European countries claim to be making progress in the battle against teen-age drunkenness and some say the problem is not as serious in their countries as elsewhere.

But others appear to have little success halting a trend that experts say is fueled by a diversity of factors.

These include increasing affluence among the young, an oft-found feeling that modern life is futile, a desire to ape adult drinking—itself on the rise in some places—and the false equation of alcohol with maturity and sophistication.

HERE IS a country-by-country report:

—AUSTRIA: The health ministry says the situation is not as bad as in other European countries or the United States. But it's bad enough for Austrian authorities periodically to run anti-drinking publicity campaigns that include trips to hospitals treating alcoholics.

—BRITAIN: Youngsters swigging cheap wine from the bottle are a common sight on London streets. The Royal College of Psychiatrists said last month that teen-age drunkenness has almost doubled in the last 12 years, to 4,805 convictions a year. It quoted teachers as saying alcohol is replacing drugs as a social problem and is believed to be behind the upsurge of pupils' attacks on teachers.

It also said the nation had 300,000 alcoholics of all ages in a population of 56 million and that Britons of all ages are drinking almost twice as much as 30 years ago.

THE CHURCH of Scotland said 98 percent of boys and 96 percent of girls in Glasgow, hard-drinking Scotland's largest city, regularly drink at age 17. The law, as throughout Britain, prohibits sale of alcohol to those under 18, but it is widely flouted.

Jenny Crick of the Independent Broadcasting Authority said law limits booze ads on British television. But an estimated $132 million is spent each year publicizing alcohol on TV and elsewhere.

—CZECHOSLOVAKIA: A law to be enacted shortly will ban advertising of alcohol and allow removal of drink displays from shop windows. It will also prohibit sales of all alcohol at youth-only events and allow only beer and wine to be served at mixed-age events, and only low-alcohol beer at sports events and in factories and office canteens. The present law bans sale of alcohol to persons under 18.

—DENMARK: The Danes have few restrictions on drinking except a ban on sales to those under 18. However, a police spokesman said violations of the law probably run to "thousands every day."

—FRANCE: A government committee on alcoholism said drinking among youngsters declined from 1960 to 1968 but now appears to be increasing. But a spokesman commented: "Young people do not seem to be drinking more than in previous generations." The committee organizes lectures on alcoholism and has banned serving alcohol at school lunches to those under 15. The move raised eyebrows in wine-drinking France.

—IRELAND: Hard-drinking Ireland last year banned all advertising of alcoholic drinks on its state-run radio and television.

—SOVIET UNION: Soviet officials have expressed concern in recent years about heavy drinking by teen-agers. The Education Ministry's newspaper said last year that 90 percent of Soviet alcoholics had their first drink before age 15 and one-third before age 10.

—SWITZERLAND: Education on the dangers of alcohol is part of the everyday curriculum in Swiss schools. Advertising for hard liquor is banned from television and radio.

—SWEDEN: Parliament decided in 1976 to lower the voting age from 20 to 18 but kept the age at which youngsters can buy hard liquor, wine and strong beer at 20. The state liquor monopoly runs a widespread publicity campaign warning of the dangers of drink.

—WEST GERMANY: It is illegal to sell alcohol to those under 18 and those between 16 and 18 can be served drink in bars and restaurants only when with an adult. But the Ministry of Youth, Family and Health said the laws are widely disobeyed.

Benefit basketball tonight

No. 5 Chairmen to take on 'Cats

Basketball will return to Ahearn Field House tonight.

The Wildcats will be playing a team which has scored 164 points in one game, is fifth-ranked in the country, has played in Hawaii, Canada and the Virgin Islands and boasts a player who's scored 100 points in a single game.

And, the members of that team are in wheelchairs.

The Topeka Chairmen will take on the varsity men's team (which will also be confined to wheelchairs) tonight at 7 in Ahearn.

All proceeds from the game will be used to help fund a shuttle car service for handicapped students at K-State.

The shuttle service is in its first year and was used by 15 students this winter, according to Donna Gore, president of Students for Handicapped Concerns, which is sponsoring the game. Two blind students were also escorted to and from classes while campus sidewalks were covered with snow.

"We've also helped temporarily disabled people get to class on time, like people with broken legs as the result of ski or auto accidents" Gore said.

BY SPONSORING the game, the Students for Handicapped Concerns hope to raise $9,000 to fund a year-round service next year.

Tickets for the game are available at Holtz Hall or at Ahearn tonight.

Prices are $2 for adults, $1 for students and 50 cents for children.

The rules of wheelchair basketball are the same as collegiate basketball, except players are allowed to stay five seconds in the lane instead of three.

Players have to dribble once every two pumps on the chair's wheels.

The teams will play 20-minute halves. All of the varsity players are expected to participate, except Rolando Blackman and Eugene Goodlow.

The coaches for the wheelchair game are Mark Jensen of radio KMAN and Ed Sorensen of KTSB-TV in Topeka.

Have regular medical check-ups.

Baker's team starts fast but still seeks consistency

By CINDY FRIESEN
Asst. Sports Editor

Before the spring baseball season began, K-State's Dave Baker, head baseball coach, said the key to a succesful season would be a good start and consistent play by his team.

Now, two weeks into the season and with 16 of 57 scheduled games behind them, the 'Cats have achieved one of those goals—a good start. Showing 13 wins, two losses and one tie, the baseball team has its best opening record in more than three years and the 'Cats are just seven wins short of last year's team's total wins. The 1978 team went 20-29.

Sports

Listing 16 new players and only seven returning lettermen on the roster, Baker said he knows his team is capable in all departments, but is still looking for some consistency.

After opening the season with 12 straight wins, the 'Cats dropped two games in a row: one to Minnesota-Morris in extra innings last Wednesday and the other in the first game of a doubleheader against Missouri Southern in Tulsa, Okla., last weekend. K-State came back to win the nightcap against Missouri Southern 13-3.

THE TEAM'S main weakness right now, Baker said, is a poor mental attitude.

"When you play so many doubleheaders, it's going to happen," he said. "It's hard for us to keep up for the second game when we blow somebody out in the first one. But doubleheaders are what college baseball is all about."

Although K-State is capable of good, solid hitting, as first baseman Michael Akins proved with his grand slam against Missouri Southern along with a three-run homer by teammate Don Hess in the same game, Baker still believes the hitting sprees need to be constant.

"I think we've got to hit more from the top to the bottom. We've got the people who can do it, everyone's capable. It's just a matter of them all doing it at the same time," Baker said.

TURNING TO the defensive abilities of the squad, the coach said the infielders are showing solid performances, but making the routine play is Baker's major concern.

"Maybe they've done a good job so far, but you can never be satisfied. It's gonna get tougher," Baker said.

The 'Cats will meet Benedictine College for a doubleheader today at 1:30 p.m. at Frank Myers Field. Home action will continue with doubleheaders Friday and Saturday afternoons against Iowa followed by a regular nine-inning game Sunday.

Men's tennis team nets second victory

The biofeedback training the men's tennis team underwent earlier this season is finally paying off as K-State posted its second win of the year with a 9-0 wipeout of Washburn University Tuesday.

The players are beginning to see results from the biofeedback training, particularly in awareness of their body movements and mental attitude, Steve Snodgrass, men's tennis coach, said.

The key to the biofeedback is attaining a relaxed state and "being aware of different parts of the body that might be holding up their ability to play," Snodgrass said.

With only two returnees from last year, Snodgrass said the team is the best he's seen at K-State. The top six or seven players are nearly matched in abilities, he said.

"Our two strong suits are the doubles and the depth. We're not a team that can just be blown off," Snodgrass said.

"Our attitude...is we all know how to play tennis, but where we're going to lift our game is in our head. If we can do this, we're going to win some games," he said.

'Cats sweep doubleheader from Washburn, 4-1, 7-4

The K-State women's softball team swept a doubleheader from Washburn University Tuesday to build momentum going into Friday and Saturday's Texas Women's University Tournament.

Kay Beatty was the winning pitcher in the first game, which the Wildcats won 4-1.

K-State scored three runs in the seventh inning as Nancy Nibarger doubled with the bases loaded.

In the second game, the 'Cats won 7-4 on Tammi Larsen's pitching. It was Larsen's first win and should "help build her confidence," Coach Mary Phyl Dwight said.

Lori Lamb hit a triple in the second inning and went two for three to lead K-State.

The 'Cats had a three-run sixth inning as the Washburn pitcher walked four K-Staters—Janelle Poppe, Julie Laughery, Lisa Packard and Leslie McGinnis.

"I was disappointed in the fact that we left 11 runners on base," Dwight said.

Fuel shortage may hurt attendance at athletic events

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Escalating gasoline prices and the possibility of gas rationing could seriously hurt attendance at professional and college sports events in Missouri and Kansas in the coming months, athletic officials say.

"Frankly, I'm scared to death," said Bryan Burns, the Kansas City Royals' director of marketing. In an interview with The Kansas City Star he said, "All I can say is that we're watching it like a hawk, but we just don't know what to do—just like the country doesn't know what to do."

A gas shortage also could take a heavy toll on attendance at Big 8 football games and Kansas City Chiefs games in the fall.

"I'd have to be very concerned. Heck yes!" said Dave Hart, athletic director at the University of Missouri. "If there's going to be rationing, that certainly would hurt us. We're sitting out here in the middle of the state."

HART said that in the event of a serious gasoline shortage, MU might consider trying to seek more season ticket holders from central Missouri.

But such action would not totally alleviate the pinch, according to DeLoss Dodds, K-State athletic director.

"I'm sure people could come to our games and get back on a tank of gas," said Dodds. "But the question would be whether that's what they wanted to do with their tank of gas. I think that's more than we could ask of them if the stations are closed and they're coming from Kansas City."

A survey conducted by the Royals shows that nearly 40 percent of the team's business comes from 50 miles and beyond Royals Stadium.

"Very simply, when you consider we're getting 38.5 percent of our fans every day of the season from outstate, anything that affects motor travel could affect our business," Burns said.

PART of the frustration for the Royals is that the club—like everyone else—isn't sure how severe the gas shortage might become.

"The situation changes from day to day," Burns said. "First you read we're going to close (gas stations) on Sunday. Then we're not. Then it's rationing, then it's not."

But so far, there's little proof that outstate attendance will be hurt badly in the event of a gas shortage.

At the Emporia State Bank and Trust, which is one of the Royals' Kansas ticket outlets, a spokesman said ticket sales are going well.

"We have a have a heck of a lot of Royals fans here," Stan Sommers, vice president of the bank, said. "They'll do anything to see the Royals. People here love their baseball and their Royals. In the last two years we've sold over $30,000 in tickets and I would predict we'll even go higher this year—gas shortage or not."

EARN OVER $650 A MONTH RIGHT THROUGH YOUR SENIOR YEAR.

If you're a junior or senior majoring in sciences like math, physics or engineering, the Navy has a program you should know about.

It's called the Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate-Collegiate Program (NUPOC-C for short) and if you qualify, you can earn as much as $650 a month right through your senior year. Then after 16 weeks of Officer Candidate School, you'll get an additional year of advanced technical education. This would cost thousands in a civilian school, but in the Navy, we pay you.

It isn't easy. There are fewer than 400 openings and only one of every six applicants will be selected. But if you make it, you'll have unequaled hands-on responsibility, a $24,000 salary in four years, and gilt-edged qualifications for jobs both in the Navy and out.

Ask your placement officer to set up an interview with a Navy representative when he visits the campus, or contact your Navy representative at 800-841-8000, or send in the coupon. The NUPOC-C Program. Not only can it help you complete college. It can be the start of an exciting career.

Committee passes amended bill

Taxpayers could save $45 million

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA—The Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee Tuesday amended a House-passed bill which would have removed the state 3-percent sales tax from grocery store food sales and substituted a $20 per person income tax credit to compensate for the tax.

The vote recommending the amended bill be passed by the Senate was 7-4.

The committee also recommended for passage a House-approved bill strengthening the state's 9-year-old property tax lid law by a vote of 8-3.

The income tax credit would save taxpayers about $45 million during tle first year, roughly the same amount that would have been saved by the sales tax exemption.

The tax credit is seen as a more practical alternative than removing the sales tax at the supermarket, because of the problems that causes the grocer in sorting out the non-food items.

SEVERAL committee members, including Chairman John Simpson (R-Salina) supported the credit method, arguing it gives the state more financial flexibility.

The tax credit could be reduced or eliminated in future years, if state tax revenues won't support it, much easier than putting the sales tax back on food.

One committee member, however, strongly objected to the tax credit, saying the system was purely political and if the state did not need the taxes it should not collect them.

"This is a purely political move to show the people how nice we are by giving the money back to them. Why don't we just cut the cotton-picking tax," Sen. Charlie Angell (R-Plains) said.

Angell's opinions were followed by his second motion in two days to lower the state sales tax, this time from 3 to 2¾ percent on all items. The proposal failed 6-3.

HIS MOTION Monday was to reduce the tax to 2 percent, which also failed.

Simpson said he was concerned the $20 figure could be too high, in light of the $41 million the House has added to homestead property tax relief.

Fuel mix upsets Kansas City buses

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Black, acrid smoke belched from Kansas City's 255 Area Transportation Authority buses Tuesday as officials attempted to use up a 33,000-gallon mixture of diesel fuel and motor oil.

The mixup began Monday when a workman accidentally added 4,000 gallons of diesel fuel to 11,000 gallons of standard motor oil.

ATA officials had the option of selling the mixture at scrap for 10 cents a gallon or diluting it further with additional diesel fuel and burning the mixture in the city buses. With diesel fuel costing 49 cents a gallon and fuel oil $1.09, ATA officials opted for the latter.

So they added another 18,000 gallons of diesel fuel and placed the mixture in buses for Tuesday's run.

"We were surprised that it created as much smoke as it did," said general manager Richard Davis. "We wouldn't dare run the buses tomorrow the way we did today (Tuesday)."

The black, smelly smoke was more than the ATA officials bargained for. The exhaust clouded city streets, prompted an inquiry from Enviornmental Protection Agency officials and brought more than 40 complaints from the public.

Davis said the ATA would continue to add 8,000 gallons of straight diesel fuel to the mixture each day. The city's buses use about 9,000 gallons a day, but Davis said he felt the fuel would be "diluted within a week to the point that it would not be noticeable."

Radioactive steam spreads 16 miles in nuclear mishap

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)—An accident at the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant forced radioactive steam into the air at levels that could be measured 16 miles away but caused no damage to the reactor core, government investigators said late Wednesday.

Charles Gallina, a Nuclear Regulatory Commission investigator who spent all day at the nuclear plant site, said radiation was being emitted from nuclear-charged water in an auxiliary building.

"We have a serious contamination problem on site. You might say from the breadth of the problem it's one of the more serious. The extent makes it serious, not the breadth," Gallina told a news briefing.

"Nothing critical failed, but it's a dirty problem. It's going to take some time to clean up," he added.

Officials said their readings indicated there was no immediate danger to the public and there were no plans to evacuate the 15,000 people living within a mile of the plant.

BOB FRIES, a member of the Department of Energy's emergency response team, said a specially equipped helicopter monitored small amounts of radiation 16 miles from the site.

The highest concentration of radiation was registered at the nuclear plant site, where officials measured 70 millrems of radioactvity. A chest X-ray can give a person up to 30 millrems.

"They are high but not yet critical ... It was not close to a catastrophe," said James Higgins, a NRC reactor inspector.

Higggins said radiation was still coming from an auxiliary building, which contains ionized water diverted there after the accident. The auxiliary building was being ventilated last night. Other radiation was released earlier when plant officials intentionally sent steam into the air not knowing it was contaminated, he said.

The NRC investigators said the reactor was still cooling down, and there were no plans to enter it for several days.

They said there would be a full investigation of the accident. Several plant workers suffered "minor contamination,"

Anderson: 'You've elected a boy scout president'

By JULIE DOLL
Editor

TOPEKA—Jack Anderson calls himself a watchdog.

A self-appointed guardian of the public's right to know, Anderson relentlessly searches for scandals buried deep in government and brings them to the attention of millions of readers through his column "Washington Merry-Go-Round."

Speaking to about 300 persons at Washburn University, Anderson said the public is "entitled to know what their employees (public officials) are doing."

"It should be obvious that most press spokesmen are liars," he said.

"Let's take Jody Powell (President Carter's press secretary). In all the years he's been in the White House he hasn't said one derogatory thing about Jimmy Carter. He's not that good."

BECAUSE OF one-sided press releases from government sources, investigative reporters are needed, Anderson said.

"We (investigative reporters) should be free to dig out the secrets of government. I'm not talking about national security...I'm talking about their embarrassments."

Such freedom is not for the press, Anderson said, but for the people.

For example, the people should know that the United States is embarking upon an economic war with oil-producing countries in the Mideast, he said.

"None of the countries of the past ... have been so successful ... in transferring money as the oil sheiks."

ANDERSON PREDICTED that the economic war would cause an energy crisis in the United States which could only be overcome if "we pull together in the spirit of sacrifice."

The 56-year-old Pulitzer Prize winner blamed Carter for much of the country's energy problem, calling him inexperienced.

"He (Carter) began our foreign policy by literally opening a geography book and finding out where the countries were," Anderson said. "Then he found out who the leaders were, and he's been on a cram course ever since.

"He's got all the intricate details; it's the kind of cram course you take in college."

Anderson compared electing Carter as president to having surgery performed by a boy scout.

"You've elected a boy scout as president of the United States. He's a nice boy scout, a bright boy scout, but an inexperienced one," he said.

As a result, Anderson gave the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty less than a 50-50 chance of survival.

Anderson said he was pessimistic about the treaty because Carter has alienated all other Arab nations besides Egypt. He also criticized Carter for failing to utilize the "competent cabinet" he has surrounded himself with.

Tri-Lateral Commission:

Farmers fight control

By LISA SANDMEYER
Staff Writer

The meeting opened with the pledge of allegiance.

"I know many of you haven't done that in a long time," Ken Chewning, sophomore in agricultural economics, said. "I just felt it was good for you people to do it again."

Chewning is a member of the American Agriculture Movement (AAM) who helped bring J.C. Lewis, a national leader of the movement, to K-State as part of Ag Week.

See related story, p. 16

Lewis spoke Wednesday morning in the K-State Union about the Tri-Lateral Commission, a group of 200 persons who he says controls the world's oil supply and monetary system as they work toward a one-world government.

With President Jimmy Carter and Vice President Walter Mondale as former members, the commission also controls government, Lewis said. He added that Carter and Mondale have maintained their interest in the commission.

"Carter won the Democratic nomination in 1976 because they (the commission) wanted someone to espouse religion and the family," Lewis said. "One of the first people they recruited was Carter."

The overlap of membership on American corporation boards of directors has put all major oil companies, major banks and even the networks under the control of the same few, he said.

The Tri-Lateral Commission was formed in 1973 by David Rockefeller, director of the Chase Manhattan Bank, to promote world peace, solve world hunger and world economic depression.

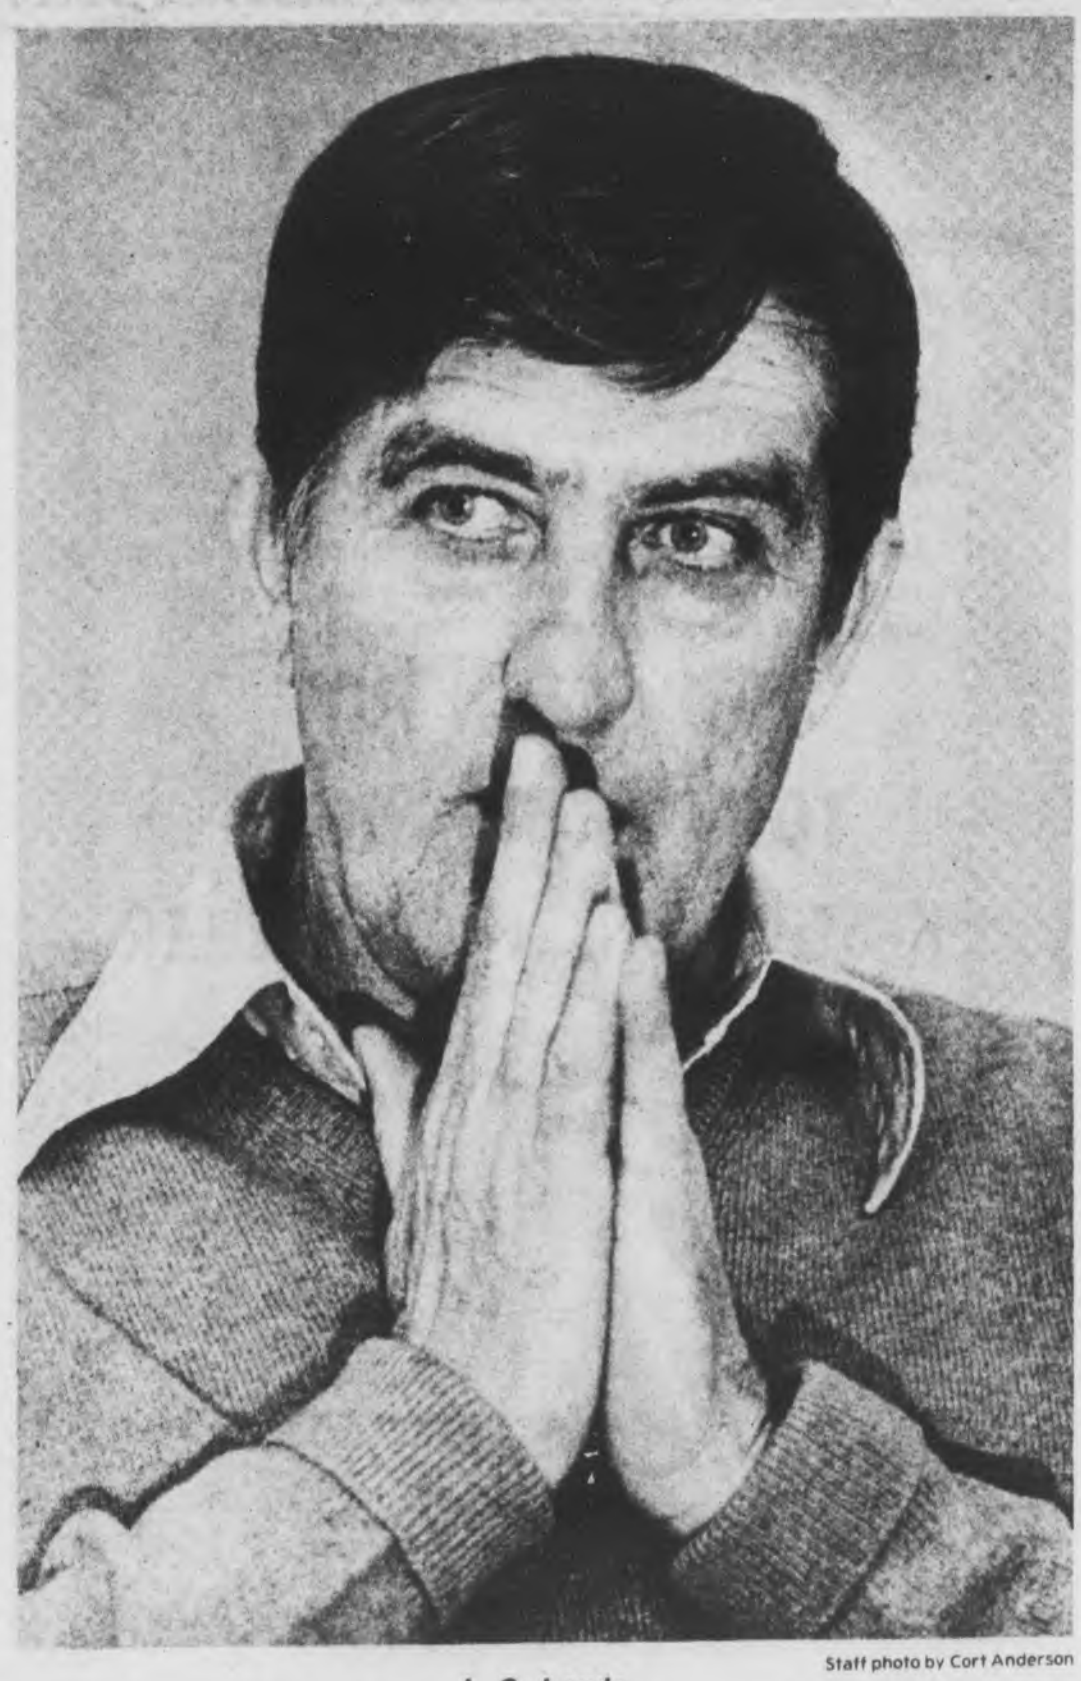
BESIDES FORMER members Carter and Mondale, the commission includes Henry Kissinger, former secretary of state; Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal; Andrew Young, U.N. ambassador; and most of the assistant secretaries and treasurers of federal departments, he said.

"This takes in nearly all the key members of the cabinet," Lewis said. "I maintain that is wrong."

"Paul Scott, a national columnist, recently quoted Kissinger, who said in essence, 'By controlling the oil we can control the nations, which in turn controls the money power. This can all become a reality by 1980.'

"Now then, you can say there is no way this can happen to the United States of America, and even if it did, how bad would a world government be?

"Perhaps we could run this world government much like our House of Representatives—in that case, Russia and China would out-vote the world. If we did it like the Senate, in which each country would get one vote, Africa would have us beat 60 to 1. Where's the advantage to the American people?" Lewis said.



WHILE THE AAM is fighting to save the family farm, the Tri-Lateral Commission is promoting corporate farming, Lewis said.

"The first step in combatting the Tri-Lateral is to make sure they don't get control of the farmland. We must see that the farmer gets paid for his product. We must help him make enough profit to stay on the farm.

If the farmer were to receive 100 percent parity, Lewis said, food prices would go up about 3 percent, or to about 20 percent of the average American income.

If farming is taken over by the Tri-Lateral Commission through corporations, he said, "in time the cost of food could go up to 30 or 40 or even 100 percent" of income.

"If we get 100 percent parity tomorrow, the fight's only begun," he said.

according to Higgins.

"Their outer clothing was contaminated, but the proper precautions were taken," he said.

EARLIER, Edson Case, a NRC spokesman, said radiation levels inside the plant's reactor building registered at 1,000 times normal.

But George Troffer, manager of generation quality assurance for Metropolitan Edison, one of the consortium of companies that runs the plant, said he thought that figure was too high. He said the level was perhaps 10 times more than normal.

Company employees and NRC officials worked at the plant to reduce the temperature and pressure inside the reactor dome to allow a team of engineers to check the reactor for damage.

The cause of the accident—or the precise sequence of events that led to the radiation's release—could not be immediately determined.

Cased said NRC staff members and plant officials were inside the power plant control room. At one point, he said, the workers were forced temporarily to don face masks because radioactive materials leaked into the room.

THE PROBLEM facing technicians was to reduce the temperature and pressure inside the reactor dome, and to stop the leakage of radioactive gases.

Case said heat-caused pressure inside the dome had risen temporarily to four or five pounds per square inch above outside atmospheric pressure—enough to cause leakage. The leaking gases included radioactive gases such as xenon and iodine, he said, but the pressure was not high enough to cause heavy fuels such as uranium or plutonium to leak.

Lt. Gov. William Scranton III said steam containing radioactive material was released into the air for over two hours to "relieve potentially dangerous pressure" in the reactor.

"The situation is more complex than the company first led us to believe," Scranton said.

Company officials could not be reached for comment on Scranton's statemnt.

Open heart pioneer dies of cancer at 69

Paul Gross, prominent insurance man and Manhattan resident for more than 40 years, died of cancer Wednesday at his home, 1500 Sunny Slope Lane.

Gross, 69, served as a director of the Riley County Heart Association and was a member of the Kansas State University Foundation.

He was the second Manhattan resident to undergo open heart surgery, and was amember for 10 years of "Cardiacs Anonymous," a group of more than 100 open heart surgery patients.

Surviving Gross are his widow, Virginia Louise, two sons, David and Conald Gross, a brother, J.C. Gross Jr., and a stepsister, Mary Kern of Kansas City, Mo.

Memorial contributioons may be sent to the Riley County Heart Association, or the First United Methodist Church in Gross's name.

Funeral arrangements will be through the Cowan-Edwards-Yorgensen funeral home.

Joel to play here

Billy Joel is coming to K-State—probably April 28.

A confirmation for the Joel concert was received Wednesday, according to Union Programming Council (UPC) sources.

An official anouncement is expected to be made Monday after the All-University Open House is completed.

Joel won a Grammy Award for his song "Just the Way You Are." His recent albums include "The Stranger" and "52nd Street."

House eliminates liquor pool, raises tax

TOPEKA—The Kansas House tentatively approved Wednesday legislation abolishing the requirement for liquor pools in private clubs, but not before clamping a hefty 10 percent excise tax on alcoholic beverage sales.

Tentative approval on the amended Sente-passed bill came on a vote of 68-45.

The financial impact of the measure with House amendments is to raise the taxes paid by private club customers for their drinks by an estimated annual total of $3.5 million.

The House amendments also cost the state treasury an estimated $1.5 million annually because of the way the excise tax provision was worded.

The House amendments also earmark the proceeds of the excise tax—figured at about $5 million annually—for funding of state and local alcohol treatment programs.

Court charged with mismanagement

TOPEKA—Attorney General Robert Stephan has agreed to meet with members of the House Ways and Means Committee to determine what action lawmakers may want to take concerning a possible probe into allegations of mismanagement of state funds by personnel of the state Supreme Court.

The discussions are part of the continuing controversy surrounding a legislative post audit report released earlier this year, claiming the Supreme Court is not properly disbursing state funds earmarked for salaries for the 1,350 nonjudicial court employees in the state court system.

Soviet invades embassy, kills himself

MOSCOW—A young Soviet seaman—who said he "hated Brezhnev" and wanted to go to America—holed up in the U.S. Embassy for eight hours Wednesday, then killed himself by exploding a bomb strapped to his waist when Russian security men tried to force him out.

U.S. Ambassador Malcolm Toon, who gave the Russians permission for the operation, said the man was taken away in an ambulance and a spokesman at Sklifosovsky Emergency Clinic said he was dead on arrival.

The 27-year-old merchant seaman walked into the embassy at 2:30 p.m., described himself as a dissident and said he "hated Brezhnev," referring to Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev.

Toon said there was no breach of security and, "since it was apparent that the man was unbalanced, and since he appeared in our view to present a threat to the safety of American personnel and property, and since he was a Soviet citizen, we called upon the Soviet authorities for help."

The ambassador said he believed it was unprecedented for American officials to give Soviets free rein to carry out an operation of this kind in the U.S. Embassy, but the Russians were invited "to handle it as they saw fit."

Toon said the Soviet officals entered the drama at 4:30 p.m. and negotiated with the man for the nxt six hours, trying to persuade him to give up and leave the embassy peacefully.

When that failed the Russians either used force or threatened to use force. Two popping sounds were heard at 10:47 p.m., which Toon said could have been pistol shots.

That reportedly was when the man pulled the ring on the small gray metal box attached to his body detonating the bomb.

China: Cancel that order, please

WASHINGTON—China has canceled orders for 300,000 metric tons of U.S. wheat which were to have been delivered in the new 1979-80 marketing year beginning June 1, the Agriculture Department said Wednesday.

Officials said the cancellation was reported by private exporting companies.

No official explanation was provided for the canceled orders, but one source said that China may have been able to get a better price from another supplier.

With world wheat stocks up, international export trade is highly competitive, and it is not unusual for a foreign buyer to cancel contracts if better prices are available elsewhere.

Bridging listening gap

For a welcome change, K-State's Long Range Planning Committee's voice is being heard within a short range—as far as the offices of President Acker and Vice President for University Facilities Gene Cross.

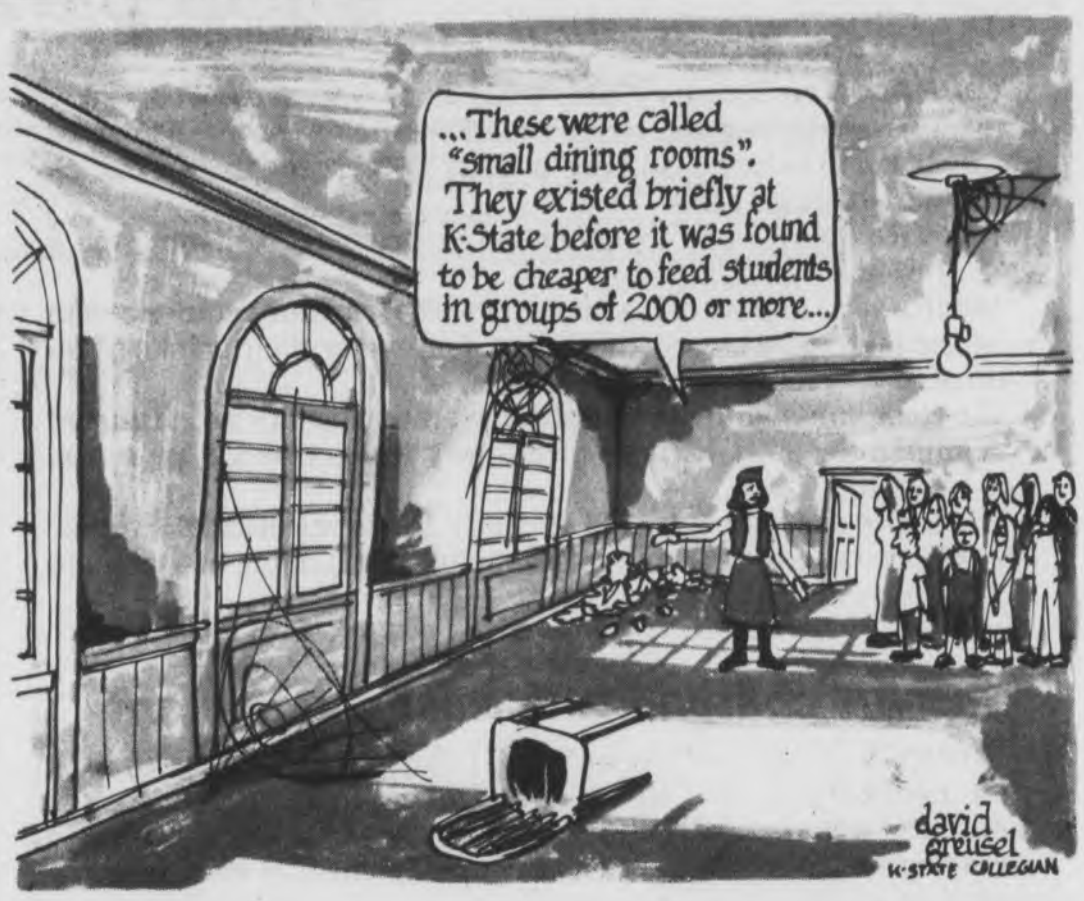
Long Range Planning Committee is an advisory group to Acker on the location and environmental guidelines for campus projects.

At least it was set up to issue recommendations. In the past, however, it has been little more than a scapegoat for unpopular decisions.

Members have complained they weren't notified of the meetings, didn't have enough information to make solid recommendations, and ended up "rubber-stamping" decisions made by administrators.

Before Cross became vice president, he indicated he wanted the committee to play a larger role.

And things have changed, although not as much as some members would like. Members now are usually notified of the meetings in time to attend, have more information than before, and can see some of their recommendations taken seriously.



The coal-fire plant site is one time Acker listened to the recommendations of the committee. Although he didn't choose the first site recommended, he chose the alternative site.

The easy thing to do would have been to ignore the committee and build the plant on campus—forcing K-State to cope with the smell and mess.

It is hoped this is the just the beginning for administrators to tune up their senses and listen to the recommendations.

Short-range audibility isn't much for a long-range committee, but it is better than the silence preceeding it.

Robbing the small halls

Editor,

This is an open letter to all student senators and the campus community so they will fully understand how we feel about the non-financial aspects of this issue. It is from the residents of Van Zile Hall.

Eric Friedli

Senator,

We would like to take this opportunity to urge you to pass this resolution in support of the Strong Complex. For years K-State has had the best residence hall system in the country.

We say this because it has consistently been full to capacity (while other universities such as KU have not) and our delegations have always been well received at National Conferences of Residence Hall Associations. We urge you to pass this resolution to give a sure sign to the Housing Council that the student body, as represented by you, does not want any cuts in services in the residence hall system.

The specific case is food service in the Strong Complex. By removing these services the Housing Council would be removing them from the list of real choices the system has to offer.

Why is it important to us to keep our food services? The most obvious reason is convenience. Nobody likes to go outside in below freezing weather three times a day just to eat a meal. Our food is better-tasting than the larger complexes. Our special dinners are a lot more special and our lines are faster and shorter than at the larger complexes.

If the food services are taken away, the convenience, good food, special dinners and shorter lines would all disappear—along with them so would the residents. We already have no air conditioning, no social areas on the floors; no in-room phones and the quality of our public spaces are somewhat less than desirable.

We are, however, willing to live with these inconveniences but we can stand no more. With the loss of our food services there will be no new students moving into the Strong Complex willingly and many veterans will find arrangements elsewhere.

It has been said in three or four years no one will know the difference. THERE WILL BE A BIG DIFFERENCE. The quality of the system will suffer as will the residents of the Strong Complex. There will always be the question of why we don't have our own food service. It is like being born without a right arm—you may not have it, but you will always miss it and wonder what it's like to have it.

Please help us in our quest to conserve the integrity and personality of Van Zile, the Strong Complex and the residence hall system.

74 residents of Van Zile

No food service? No way

Editor,

Re: Strong on Small Halls (March 26)

After stagnating for two and one half years in one of the newer dorms, and eating and working at Derby Food Center, I finally wised up and began searching for an alternative to the institutional environment.

I was a nobody. I lived with 665 guys but actually knew or socialized with very few. My air conditioned room was the same as the approximately 340 other double rooms and 19 single rooms.

At dinner I was served food cooked by giant machines. It was no use to even look for friends with whom to eat because the cavernous dining room was a sea of faceless robots. Perhaps this lifestyle is OK for some people, but not for me.

Upon the advice of a friend I moved to a new environment—a fine old castle-like, ivy-covered building with a front yard full of trees, a cozy home-like interior and 155 crazy but friendly people. During my residence at Van Zile Hall I had many bad times as well as good times, but I know for sure I lived, learned and grew up more there than would have been possible anywhere else. Without that experience, I feel I would be four years behind in life.

Edwards Hall lost their food service because they were new in the residence hall system and didn't know how to deal with the bureaucratic powers that be. However, Boyd, Putnam and Van Zile have experience.

Every couple of years or so Thomas Frith tries to take something from the small halls. He got away with taking the social rooms and converting them to sleeping rooms so the older halls could hold more residents, and thus be more "efficient." He did not get away with moving Van Zile's 50-year-old grandfather clock to Derby Food Center.

I'm sure the residents of the Mabel Strong Complex are not going to let him also get away with "moving" them over to Derby Food Center for their daily meals.

I am no longer a full-time student so I do not live on campus. However, for those who do have the opportunity to take advantage of the many benefits of residence hall living I sincerely hope there can remain a real variety and choice of lifestyle and environment.

Lowering everyone to the lowest common denominator may be Mr. Frith's idea of financial responsibility and efficient management but it is not going to win him—or K-State—any awards for providing creative and positive alternatives to an otherwise inherently institutional system.

Strong on small halls? You Bet!

Flying the lawless skies of Anarchy

The topless stewardess made her announcement from the front of the plane:

"Good evening ladies and gentlemen, welcome aboard Anarchy Airlines, Flight 009. Please keep all seatbelts fastened and cigarettes extinguished until we are out of Kansas air."

"Thank you and have a lawless flight."

Most states are satisified with defining land borders. But Vern Miller, as attorney general, decided Kansas could claim the air above it too.

Kansas, he reasoned, extends into the air so planes, satellites and extraterrestrial aircraft flying over Kansas must abide by Kansas law.

Because of Miller's offered opinion, airlines will not serve liquor while flying over Kansas. This, among other things, has caused Kansas to be the butt of many jokes across the country.

It is absurd to suppose Kansas (and its laws) extend unlimited into the atmosphere. It doesn't make much more sense to think of defining an upward limit to Kansas influence.

THE KANSAS SENATE is now considering backing off from the former attorney general's stand and allowing airlines to serve liquor—as long as they are in the air.

This makes sense but isn't much fun. Maybe instead, the Legislature could agree on an altitude to be the territorial limit of Kansas. (This would be similar to territorial rights of the sea.)

Such a move would set the stage for ventures such as Anarchy Airlines.

The beauty of this idea is if a certain altitude above Kansas, say 40,000 feet, was set as its border, then anything above this height would be lawless air.

Once this altitude was reached, people really would be "above" the law. A variety of laws could be broken—especially while flying over Kansas air.

Passengers could depart for a joyride above Kansas with plans for indulging in all kinds of vices. There would be no final destination, just a direction—up.

WHILE ON board, passengers could buy liquor by the drink, have adulterous relations with the neighbor, slander the boss, or even smoke marijuana. The possiblities are as endless as Kansas legislation.

One flaw in this plan is as soon as the federal government got wind of it they wouldn't stand for being left out. They would have to set national territorial limits, enclosing any state limits, and raising the lawless altitude. Where the state intervenes, the feds must soon follow.

Besides that, it's an idea which could really take off.

Back on Flight 009, the stewardess, now completely nude, makes the closing announcement:

"Attention all you deviants, we are about to enter Kansas air. Please end all lawless behavior and prepare yourself to abide once more by Kansas law. On returning to Kansas remember to confine previous onboard behavior to the privacy of your homes."

"Thank you for flying Anarchy Airlines. It's been a pleasure to let you do want you want."

Rhein parallels Jeffries

Editor,

I believe Ms. Rhein would be surprised to discover just how closely her opinion parallels that of Mr. Jeffries if she would simply step down from the soapbox of defending special interests.

I was in attendance at Mr. Jeffries' presentation March 24 and found no evidence he was using either government or feminist groups as scapegoats for the "deterioration of American values." As I see it, his argument was we as individuals have placed too much blind faith in government to solve problems beyond the scope of its ability.

Government is not some all-seeing, all-knowing, personal entity with all the answers. It is composed of very fallible, human individuals who, despite special training to cure the ill of the world, are just as susceptible to error as the rest of us.

Thus we need to bring our personal responsibilities home from Washington and make them just that—personal. In this thinking I see little substantial difference in the opinions of Rhein and Jeffries.

You will also remember, Ms. Rhein, Mr. Jefferies did not oppose intervention of any form of government in these affairs, but rather of the much distant federal government in Washington. He did say if counseling or legal intervention were necessary beyond family and church groups, local, not federal, government should be employed as long as necessary. His thesis remains, in my view, if the sentry of self fails, no amount of policing from government will be able to restore lost self-control.

No, Ms. Rhein, this world isn't perfect, but it's a shame those who are trying to improve it must come under such continuous attack. Mr. Jeffries and those of his genre are trying to get us to stop surrendering our liberties to bureaucratic organizations which only tend to misunderstand and abuse them. May we listen lest in some awful not-distant day we be crushed by remonstrance.

OAS calls Israeli-Egyptian peace a 'war treaty'

Organized Arab students at K-State are dissatisfied with the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

In a low-key expression of their dissatisfaction, members of the Organization of Arab Students (OAS) manned a booth in the K-State Union Concourse Wednesday.

The OAS' major contentions with the treaty are ones of "legality and honesty".

The treaty, hailed as the end of bloodshed in the Mideast by the three leaders concerned—President Jimmy Carter, Egyptian Prime Minister Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin—has been redefined as a "war treaty" by the OAS' official statement.

The treaty guarantees self-rule for Palestinians living on the West Bank and Gaza Strip, yet this self-rule will be under Israeli military occupation, the OAS' statement claimed.

While signing a treaty of peace with Sadat, Begin swore to wipe out Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) terrorists operating in the Mideast, an OAS member, who wished to remain anonymous, said.

The PLO was recognized as the only legal representative of the Palestinians in 1972 by the United Nations and the Arab Summit in Rabbat.

But as OAS points out in their statement, the treaty which affects the Palestinian people was negotiated without representatives of the PLO.

"The Egyptians and Israelis negotiated a peace which they claim has ensured the rights of the Palestinian people. Yet, they excluded the legal representatives of the Palestinians from the negotiations."

"The peace treaty did not include the human rights of the 4 million Palestinians throughout the world," said Kamel Mahadrin, senior in architecture and OAS member.

Referring to a speech by Begin before the Israeli Parliament on March 20, in which Begin vowed "never to withdraw from the occupied territories, never to give up control of Jerusalem, and never to allow the establishment of a Palestinian state," the OAS statement claims the treaty was "designed to legalize Israel's occupation of Palestine."

The OAS official statement states that the treaty does not insure self-determination or independence for Palestinians; the right of Palestinian refugees to return to their homes occupied in 1948 and 1967; withdrawal of Israeli troops from occupied Arab lands, or the return of occupied Jerusalem to Arab sovereignty.

The treaty strengthens Israel's political standing, the OAS claims in their statement, by "securing formal recognition of Israel from Egypt."

And further asserts the treaty allows Israel freedom to attack Arab countries not involved in the treaty, while using Sadat's commitment to not assist Arab nations engaged in war with Israel.

The OAS warns in their statement that "peace can come when the national rights of self-determination and independence of the Palestinian people are realized through return to their homeland. Any treaty that does not guarantee these rights is void of substance and will not lead to peace but can only lead to further hostility and bloodshed."

SO, YOU have decided that smoking tobacco is bad for your health, and you changed to one of the rabbit-food coffin nails to beat bad old respiratory tract damage. Sorry.

The AMA reported in 1974 that products using tobacco substitutes such as; ginsend root, coltsfoot, yarrow, clover and lettuce leaves are as harmful to the smoker's respiratory tract as tobacco. If you don't care about harmful effects and simply want to wage a personal war on the tobacco giants, then these are your answer.

CALIFORNIA, FAMOUS for the Gold Rush of the 1840s, has now given us more gold. This time though, it's in the form of a chain letter called "Circle of Gold."

The chain promises to turn a $100 investment into $100,000.

It works like this: for an "investment" of $100, the buyer gets a list of 12 names. The seller keeps $50 and sends $50 to the person at the top of the list. Then he scratches off that person's name and adds his own at the bottom.

The buyer is then supposed to sell two copies of the list within the next 24 hours (which may be harder to do than he thinks) to get his $100 back. If the "Circle" is broken, the buyer's name will eventually reach the top of 2,048 lists, and if he is sent the $50 for being at the top of each list, he will net $102,400.

However, as with all get-rich-quick schemes, there is a small problem. If the "Circle" grows at the rate it's supposed to, the number of people involved would exceed the world's population by the 33rd day. It's hard to believe 4 billion people are suddenly going to strike it rich.

Besides that, there's no guarantee the seller won't do a little getting rich on the side by embezzling the full $100 from each buyer and adding his name to the list anyway. It's one of those "do unto others before they do unto you" deals, and not a good way to pick up couple of extra bucks.

Proponents of the letter say it is legal because it's being passed hand-to-hand rather than through the mails.

Not so, R.L. Schleuter, San Francisco Postal Inspector, says. Schleuter is gathering evidence to take to the U.S. District Attorney to prove the mails have been used to continue the chain.

Halls pitch in again to clean-up campus

University sanitation workers will have some help today as residents from the nine K-State residence halls participate in a campus clean-up project.

The clean-up, sponsored by Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls (KSUARH) is an annual event held prior to the all-University Open House.

According to Michelle Klaumann, clean-up chairman, KSUARH sponsors the clean-up as a contribution to Open House.

The clean-up begins at 3 p.m. and will continue until all trash on campus has been collected.

One bag of trash bearing a sign identifying it as part of an KSUARH clean-up project, will be placed on display at the Union, Klaumann said.

An award will be presented to the residence hall with the largest percentage of student participation in the project during the opening ceremony for Open House at 11:30 a.m. Friday in the Union.

'Welcome to L.A.' easy film to forget

Good acting doesn't save plotless movie

EDITOR'S NOTE: "Welcome to L.A." will be shown today at 3:30 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

By LUKE BROWN
Collegian Reviewer

Robert Altman's name is generally associated with fine motion pictures. Robert Altman is the producer of "Welcome to L.A." Therefore, "Welcome to L.A." is a fine motion picture, right?

Wrong.

"Welcome to L.A." suffers from just one thing, actually, but it's so apparent and distracting it ruins the rest of the movie.

It does not have a plot.

At the beginning of the film, everyone is partying and cheating on their spouses. In the middle of the film, everyone is cheating on their spouses, and at the end of the film, everyone is still fooling around.

Keith Carradine, as Carroll Barber, plays the son of a self-made millionaire. Barber returns to Los Angeles from England to write songs for an allegedly talented singer.

Upon his arrival, he asks his father's secretary if she is going to welcome him to L.A. She does by hopping in the sack with him. That is certainly one way to make him feel welcome.

Sissy Spacek is hired as his housekeeper. She doesn't do much cleaning; she earns her money other ways.

Lauren Hutton plays a photographer who is also quite promiscuous.

This is not to say the film shows a lot of sex. It just barely earns its "R" rating. It does a lot of hinting.

Towards the end of the film, one looks for everyone to show up at the same place at the same time with their dates. While not terribly original, it would have at least been something happening. But it doesn't.

The film does feature exceptionally good acting. Each member of the cast which includes some "big names," such as those mentioned before plus Sally Kellerman and Geraldine Chaplin. Less well-known names—John Considine, Harvey Keitel and Richard Baskin—turn in excellent performances.

Carradine, Chaplin, Hutton, Kellerman and Keitel give the outstanding performances of the cast.

Kellerman plays the wife of Considine, a salesman. She has probably the most emotional role and a smile perfect for the part. It reveals her frustration, agony and loneliness.

Keitel and Chaplin are Jack and Karen Hood. Keitel plays a hardworking executive who works his way into a partnership in a large company. In his climbb to success, however, he grows away from his wife. She feels abandoned and tries to hold on to him in different ways: by reminding him of his past and who he really is, by telling him she is dying and, ultimately, by having an affair.

Seeing the cast alone is worth the $1.25. However, they are not good enough to make up for the lack of a story.

A line from a song in the film that is repeated endlessly says L.A. is the city of the one night stands. "Welcome to L.A." doesn't advance much further than that. It is a film mercifully easy to forget.

K.C. Republican wins despite 50-year odds

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Richard Berkley defied the odds Tuesday and became the first Republican mayor in this heavily Democratic city since 1925.

The 47-year-old businessman was swept into office via the largest voter turnout in 37 years, snaring 58.1 percent of the 128,000 votes cast. The race, which was rated by some to be a tossup, wasn't even close. Berkley won 73,358 to 52,798 over Bruce Watkins, who had hoped to become the city's first black mayor.

"I'm not bitter," Watkins said in a concession speech. "I'm sad. Kansas City, being the heart of America, I thought would have a bigger heart. Maybe it takes more money and a different color to win."

Watkins, 55, had finished first in six-man primary Feb. 27 with Berkley close behind. Incumbent Mayor Charles Wheeler Jr. finished fourth in the primary, out of the running.

Berkley stressed the non-partisan nature of the city election and attacked Watkins for bringing Vice President Walter Mondale to the city March 20 for a campaign boost. He charged the trip cost taxpayers more than $70,000.

REFLECTING ON the election Wednesday, Berkley said he thought Mondale's visit may have cost Watkins votes.

"I have a great deal of respect for the Vice President as an individual and for the office," he said. "But I do feel his trip to Kansas City was counterproductive. Many Democrats contacted me and said the trip was very inappropriate."

Many other prominent Democrats, including Sen. Thomas Eagleton, also campaigned for Watkins, a former county clerk and outgoing city councilman. The Kansas City Star also endorsed him.

Berkley, who is Jewish, played down religion in his highly organized, well-financed campaign.

Local help available to fill out tax forms

With the April 15 deadline only 2½ weeks away, it's time to get those income tax forms ready to mail.

For those who can't or don't want to fill out their own forms, professional tax preparers will do the short form federal return for $10 to $12 and the state return for $1 to $3, depending on the preparer.

Out-of-state returns cost more, depending on the state. Charges for preparation of the long form are based on the amount of time and work required.

A free service is available to non-English speakering, low-income and elderly people. The program, called Volunteer Income Tax Assistance VITA), is provided by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS).

The program was initiated by Congress in 1969, came to Kansas in 1972 and was made available in Manhattan in 1977 by the Area Center on Aging.

According to Betty Grimsley, state coordinator for VITA, while the IRS provides materials, the local organizations provide volunteers for the program.

But the Manhattan VITA center, in the Public Library on Juliette and Poyntz, may not be able to handle problems with student tax forms.

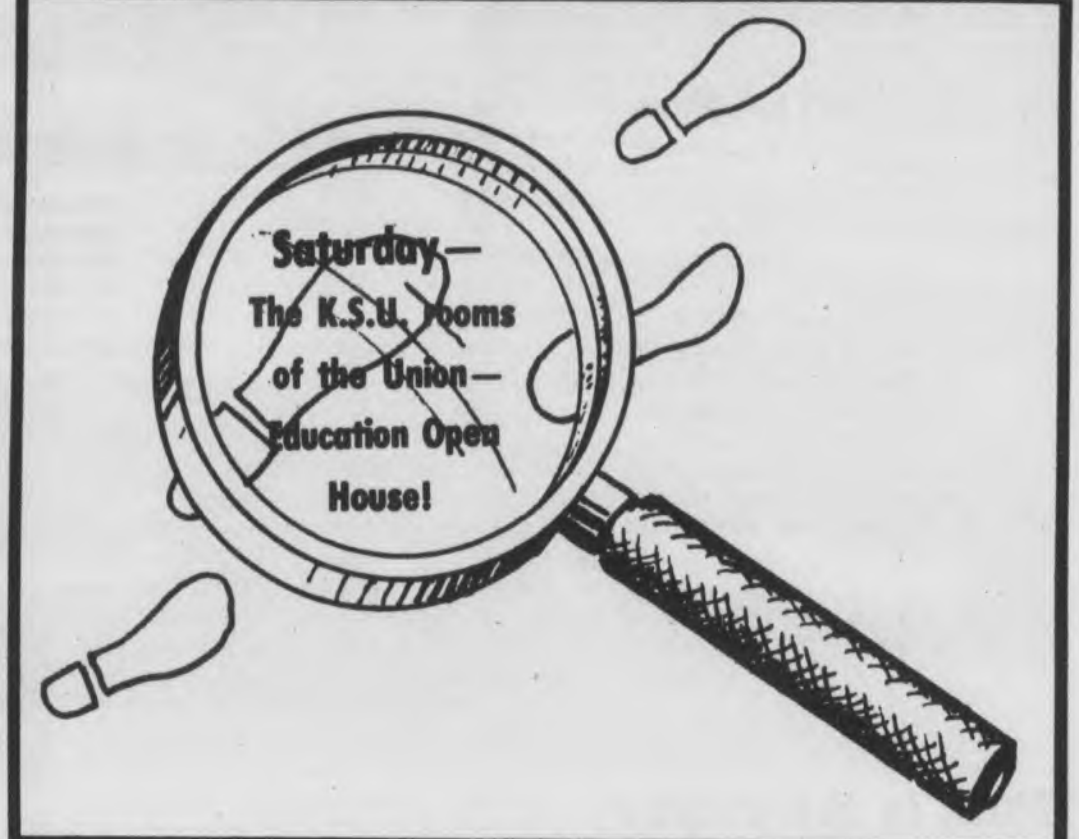
"We won't turn anyone away, but we more or less discourage anyone but older people from using the VITA program," said Rhoda Cavett, an employee at the Center for Aging.

"We tried back in November to get students to volunteer so we could service low-income students, but we couldn't get anyone," she said.

The VITA center will be open Monday through Thursday, from 9-12 a.m. and 1-4 p.m. until April 5.

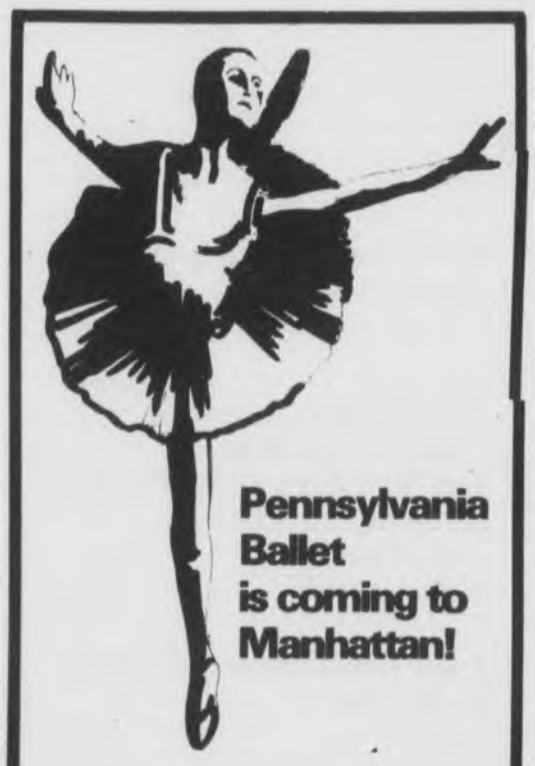
Campus car overflow angers businessman

Tired of circling the Union parking lot looking for a place to land your coupe? Well don't try parking in the lot of the Ramada Inn; it may cost you $2 to "unpark."



According to Bill Richards, general manager of the motel and restaurant across from the University, students and other University personnel are really creating problems lately.

"We don't like to be hard on anybody, but when we run out of parking spots, that gets to be a problem," he said. "It's getting to be really bad in the past two weeks."



He said in the past when people not staying at the motel have used the lot, the management has simply taken down license tag numbers and sent them a warning asking them not to park there anymore or they would call the police.

"But this time we've had a meeting and decided to block the entrances to the parking lot and we aren't letting them out unless they pay $2. Students, faculty, teachers, we don't care. If they're not using the motel, we don't want them to park here," Richards said.

Stuck in the middle

It just wasn't Kim Janne's day. Janne, a busdriver for the Abbott Bus Company, tried to squeeze by a mail truck and a state van on Mid Campus Drive near Kedzie Hall Wednesday. Much to Janne's dismay, there wasn't enough clearance. After a few slighty scraped fenders, Janne was rescued by the driver of the mail truck who managed to drive himself and Janne out of the dilemma.

Committee revisits visitor parking

K-State parking problems have resurfaced but this time the concern is for campus visitors.

The Long Range Planning Committee (LRPC) has made three recommendations for possible visitor parking locations on campus.

According to Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities and chairman of the LRPC, the primary purpose of visitor parking is to provide parking space for prospective students, parents and those invited to the University.

"It's been an on-going need for a long time," Cross said.

Larry Wilson, director of Landscaping and Campus Planning and member of LRPC, proposed the three sites for the visitor's lot.

The first location is at the south end of the East Stadium; the second is near the K-State Union south entrance and the third is at the southwest corner of the Union parking lot.

The advantages and disadvantages of each location were cited in a study by the LRPC.

Advantages of the site south of East Stadium are that it's easier for visitors to find and there would be no reduction in student parking. A drawback is its distance from the Union, usually the first stop for visitors.

The report cited the location near the Union entrance as the most convenient for visitors but this location would reduce student parking.

Although the southwest Union lot site would be difficult to find, the report said it would be the least disruptive.

The LRPC is recommending the first location but "the decision as to the actual location hasn't been made yet," Cross said. "The recommendations will ultimately go to the president, and he will approve the final recommendation," he said.

"We want to have something done by September at the latest," Cross said, "but I hope we will have something done by the end of this fiscal year, which is June 30th."

Funds are available for the project although no specific cost estimates have been made, he said.

Don't be fuelish.

Kassebaum, Clydesdales to open Open House

Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum (R-Kan.) will participate in the opening ceremonies of the all-University "Rendezvous with KSU" Open House at noon Friday in front of Seaton Hall.

As part of the ceremonies, Kassebaum will crown two students to reign over the Open House weekend as St. Patrick and St. Patricia.

Other opening activities will include the unveiling of architectural displays at 2 p.m. and the College of Engineering displays at 6 p.m., both in Seaton Hall.

Evening activities include a student talent showcase at 8 p.m. in McCain and a disco dance at 9 p.m. in the Union Catskeller. Saturday's events will begin at 9 a.m. Individual colleges will hold a variety of activities, including films, fashion shows, a Little American Royal livestock showing contest, an egg launcher-lander contest for visiting high school students and a visit from the Budweiser Clydesdales. The horses will be on display at the School of Veterinary Medicine at 10 a.m.

More than 15,000 visitors from all parts of Kansas are expected to attend the open house weekend. Admission to all events is free and open to the public.

Bikini Islanders may be packing bags due to radioactivity

HONOLULU (AP)—The people of Bikini Island, forced to move twice from their native land because of radioactivity, may be packing their bags once again.

They may be interested in moving to Hawaii, but no definite plans have been made for a move from Kili Island, where more than 500 of the Bikini islanders are now living. A d there seem to be complications in such a move for the forced nomads.

The tale of the Bikinians' travels begins in 1946, when the United States moved them from their island, part of the Marshall Islands 2,300 miles west of Hawaii, to conduct nuclear tests.

In July 1946, two nuclear bombs, each equivalent to 20,000 tons of TNT, were exploded over the island and underneath the waters of a 25-mile-long lagoon. In 1954 another nuclear device was exploded there and in 1956 the island was used for the test of the first hydrogen bomb dropped from a U.S. airplane.

The islanders—of mixed Melanesian-Polynesian stock—wound up on Kili Island.

Small halls call for senate support

Support for residents of the Strong Complex (Boyd, Putnam and Van Zile Halls) will be voted on by Student Senate during their meeting at 7 tonight in the K-State Union Big 8 Room.

The students are asking for support "in preserving the quality of their living situation."

University Housing is considering closing the food services at the three small halls for financial reasons.

"I think the issue warrants Student Senate's attention," said Greg Musil, student body president and co-sponsor of the resolution.

"The issue is important to a lot of people—not just the 650 students in the Strong Complex, but the students in the Derby Complex as well," Musil said.

Eileen Eggleston, agriculture senator and co-sponsor of the resolution, said senate's support would show concern by students notliving in Strong Complex.

"I support the resolution because I feel without the food service we (University Housing) are not offering a service that we offer at the other halls," Eggleston said.

"I'm not really against supporting the resolution but I think the senate is deciding prematurely—without all the facts and figures in, "John Martin, agriculture senator, said. "Possibly going against the findings of the Housing Council when they (the council members) haven't reached a final decision."

"I think senate's support would have some impact on Housing Council's decision but I'm not sure how much," Eggleston said.

"I have no idea whether or not Student Senate's support will have an effect on the decision (of Housing Council)," said Chet Peters, vice president for Student Affairs and chairman of Housing Council.

Peters said although the Student Governing Association (SGA) is represented on Housing Council, most of the council members are directly involved with housing.

"The 4,500 students who use the (housing) facilities pay for them; SGA puts no dollars into the system," he said.

Senate will also consider approval of student members of the Traffic Appeals Board and the allocation of $120 for a Consumer Relations Board (CRB) computer survey.

Finance Committee will meet before tonight's senate meeting to decide whether to recommend passage of the CRB bill, Patrick Miller, committee chairman, said.

'Preaching isn't a one-way street'

Religion: helping people grow

By JACKIE MARTIN
Collegian Reporter

"That's what church is all about—to help people grow and become what they want to be."

Ever since Rodney Saunders can remember, religion has been a crucial part of his life.

Growing up in a small mountain town in West Virginia, Saunders' life centered around the church fellowship he shared with his family and friends.

Rodney Saunders

Saunders, new minister for the Ecumenical Christian Ministry Inc. at 1021 Denison, said his closeness to his hometown clergy was one factor that influenced his decision to become a minister.

Saunders began assuming leadership roles in church early in his life, starting with high school youth groups.

As a minister to K-Staters, Saunders believes his mission goes beyond just preaching. He said he wants to start a worship service in which students can participate.

"I would expect this to be a flexible service," he said. "I'd like to see everyone participating. In other words, preaching isn't a one-way street."

Saunders is developing a schedule of programs for next fall, which will probably include a Sunday night supper program where students could discuss books, films or anything on their minds, he said.

Saunders said he also would like to offer retreats, and workshops on topics such as death and dying, human sexuality and alcohol abuse.

In the meantime, Saunders said his office is open to any student wanting counseling or just someone to talk to.

Oswald's mother sure her son was framed

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—The mother of Lee Harvey Oswald says a recent statement by a retired FBI agent that Dallas police ignored a warning Oswald would be killed two days after the assassination of President John F. Kennedy confirms her belief in a plot.

Mrs. Marguerite Oswald, 72, in a telephone interview from her home in Fort Worth, Texas, copyright Wednesday by the Kansas City Star, said, "There most certainly was a conspiracy. I don't know whether Lee was involved, but I do know he was framed."

"I have a feeling that no one knows who killed President Kennedy," she said. The Warren Commission concluded that Oswald was the assassin, and fired the fatal shot Nov. 22, 1963, in Dallas.

She described the Star story on retired FBI agent James Hosty Jr. as "most interesting."

Hosty, who conducted a precautionary investigation of Oswald before the assassination, said the FBI and the sheriff's office in Dallas were tipped by an anonymous telephone caller that Oswald was marked for death during a jail transfer on the Sunday it occurred.

Little American Royal: beauties shine forth

With their hair combed and nails polished these beasts will be viewed as beauties at 3 p.m. Saturday in Weber Arena for the 51st annual Little American Royal.

The Diary Science Club and Block and Bridle Club will be sponsoring the show in connection with Agriculture Science Day, which is a part of the all University open house.

There will be categories for showing beef and dairy cattle, swine, horses and sheep.

Judges for each of the five categories will be K-State graduates that have performed in the Little American Royal in past years.

Awards will be given for the grooming of both the animal and the exhibitor as well as the exhibitor's ability to show the animal in the ring.

"This will not be judged on the conformation of the animal. Each contestant will be judged on his fitting and showing of the animal," Earl Farmer, professor of animal science, said.

Any undergraduate student is eligible to compete. This year there will be contestants representing each of the eight colleges.

Unused loans to be scholarships

Interest from private loans will be used for new scholarships next fall.

Students have not used private loans because they are offered federal loans at a lower interest rate, K-State President Duane Acker said during a press conference Wednesday.

The private loans, totalling $150,000, will be deposited in a bank and that interest will become scholarship money. At present interest rates, approximately $7,500 will be available each year.

Both individual curriculum or college and general scholarships will be offered because of restrictions specified on the loans. The number and amount of scholarships is unknown.

Students applying for scholarships should contact the Office of Student Financial Assistance.

'We are the losers in corporate America'

By LISA SANDMEYER
Staff Writer

American agriculture has fallen victim to the corporate structure, according to three panelists who spoke Wednesday in the K-State Union on "Corporate America: What Can Be Done?"

It was always assumed that increased technology was the way to increase farm profits said panelist Jim Converse, assistant professor of sociology and anthropology.

"We need to look at other problems of farmers, beyond just increased productivity," said Converse, who was once a farmer. "We need to develop an agricultural technology not dependent on corporations."

"We've been as stupid as we've been called," said J.C. Lewis, a national spokesman for the American Agricultural Movement (AAM). "We've put 100 percent effort into production and none into marketing,"

The panel sponsored by Union Program Council (UPC), Issues and Ideas committee, the University for Man and Students for Political Awareness discussed the corporate role in American agriculture.

"Without 100 percent parity soon, all farming will be in corporations and the prices will go sky-high," said Phillip Althoff, associate professor of political science.

"Labor, minorities ... we are the losers incorporate America," Althoff said.

"We told farmers to get big or get out," Converse said. "Young farmers can no longer get in; old farmers are too busy worrying about their large operations. No one's having a good time."

I see a bunch of desparate people losing everything they have," Lewis said. "When you control food, you control people. When the same people who control energy control food, the ball game's over."

MONOPOLY IS the result of capitalism, Althoff said—doing better than your competitor means putting him out of business.

Something must be done about the corporate structure, Lewis said.

"We need to change the nature of the people who are in Congress," Althoff said. "They represnt special interests, most of which are corporate interests. "Neither political party is going to do anything about corporations."

"We have basically good competition when the enterprisers aren't in government," Lewis said, drawing applause from the audience.

All panelist agreed people need to be more involved in the democratic process.

"There's little doubt that if we're organized we can take control," Althoff said. "We haven't done that. The key is controlling political power. We're going to have to use the legitimate methods."

"A democracy can't work without knowledgable participation," Lewis said. "You've got to fulfill your responsibility."

LEWIS WAS asked by a member of the audience about the role of religion in the AAM.

"You can't separate religion," he said. "Christianity made this country great. You've got to put your own priorities straight before you can ask your state and national governments to."

Converse said there is a religious crisis in the highly-mobile American society.

"We've cut people off from their roots," he said.

"People have to believe in themselves first," Althoff said. "If faith in self comes through religion, fantastic. If it comes from somewhere else that's right, too,"

"It's in our interest to get the government to do something," Althoff said. "The government has to do some things for us. If we're going to survive as a nation, we're going to have to participate."

"I have faith in the democratic system," Lewis said. "The American people will make good judgment if they know."

Bahamas' sun and surf await 'Cat Superstars

By BETSY DONNELLY
Collegian Reporter

The lure of the sun and surf has reached collegiate athletics.

Eight K-State athletes are bound for the Bahamas this spring to participate in the National College Superstars Competition.

Athletes chosen to represent K-State are football players Tony Brown, Dan Manucci, William Fisher, Ray Butler, Mack Green and Charlie Green and track team members Frank Perbeck and Doug Knauss.

Sports

Football Coach Jim Dickey selected the K-State athletes for competition, which will be held in Freeport, Grand Island, one of the famous ports of the Bahamas.

The National College Superstars Competition is being sponsored by Myriad Productions, formed specifically for the event. It is open to all major universities in the United States.

"The regulations for the competition state that all athletes must be seniors in order to participate," said Don Bocchi, academic counselor for the Wildcat football team. "K-State is being represented by some fine talent."

PRELIMINARY competition is scheduled to begin on May 14.

"We've had some difficulty with some schools due to the timing of the event. There are a lot of graduations and required final exams we have had to schedule around," Bob Stevens, spokesman for Myriad, said. "But it looks like everyone who wants to attend can attend."

Stevens said graduating seniors from 110 universities will attend the national competition, with eight athletes competing from each school.

Some events included will be an obstacle course, 100-yard dash, 880-yard run, weight lifting, bike racing, swimming and a mental test.

The athletes must compete in at least four events, with the mental test and the obstacle course being compulsory.

"I am concerned mostly with the weight lifting, swimming and bike racing," said Perbeck, senior in health, physical education and recreation (HPER). "I am excited about it. It hasn't really hit me that I'm going all the way to the Bahamas."

The preliminary competitions will be during four consecutive weeks. Two athletes will represent their respective schools each week, and the winners will advance to the conference title and eventually the national title, according to Stevens.

THE COMPETITION is scheduled to be televised nationally, he said.

"So far, 85 percent of the network stations have agreed to sponsor the competition," Stevens said.

Negotiations are underway with several hotels in the Bahamas to house the athletes, he said.

Prizes to be awarded total $380,000. Stevens said these awards are being paid by various sponsors.

This is the first National College Superstars Competition, but plans are already underway to make it an annual event.

"In the future, we hope to have women competing also. We have had many requests for this," Stevens said. "Everything is really pulling together so well. We have had a great response and enthusiasm from everyone involved."

Dickey's optimistic 'Cats begin spring football today

By CINDY FRIESEN
Asst. Sports Editor

When it was announced that Jim Dickey would take over as head coach of Wildcat football early last year, many people thought it might be the start of a new era at K-State.

Coming off the best K-State season since 1974 (4-7), and big wins over Colorado and Kansas, the Wildcats enter spring ball today with a valid spirit of optimism.

"I think the best part (of last season) is that we won our last two games. Our players felt like we were respectable and we finished on a good note," Dickey said.

That "good note" encouraged many of the players to stay in shape during the off-season, he said.

With the addition of Bill Allerheiligen, K-State's new strength and conditioning coach, and a new weight room, Dickey said the Wildcats now have one of the best organized strength and conditioning programs in the country.

DURING the next four weeks, Dickey and his coaching staff will be busy determining how to fill the void left by the graduation of last year's starting seniors.

The biggest hole they will have to patch is the one left by quarterback Dan Manucci.

Of course, the quarterback candidates will be examined for leadership abilites and execution of offensive mechanics, but "the bottom line is getting the ball down the field," Dickey said.

"He has to have the ability to stand there and not worry about getting hurt. As most people know, Dan took a lot of hard hits," he said.

Leading the field of six players who seek the position is 6-3, 205-pound senior Sheldon Paris, who was Manucci's fill-in on several occasions last season.

"Sheldon has more experience than the others: two years in juco and a year as backup quarterback to Dan," Dickey said. "He's by far the more experienced player and has had success."

DICKEY will also survey the quarterbacking of Paul Hobbs, his freshman son Darrell, juco transfer Bob Daniels and walkon Mike Kopsky.

Another objective of spring training will be teaching K-State's systems of offense and defense to the players, he said.

"Most people are operating on the theory of keeping their players healthy for Saturday's games, so spring ball is the time they work hard," he said.

Last year, due to a spring training violation, the Wildcats weren't allowed the benefits of spring ball and had only a short time to become acquainted with their new coach's system.

Although the offense had no major problems, the defense didn't get settled for most of the season.

With the advantage of a year's experience for many of the returning key defensive players, including safety Brad Horchem and linebacker Tyrone Crews, Dickey has a better idea of what his team is capable.

"We hope to be able to field a much better defense than last year. I think we led the world in giving up points," he said.

DICKEY also said spring ball allows the luxury of experimenting with players in various positions.

"We want to make sure we evaluate our entire squad during spring ball," he said. "That's one of the things we didn't get accomplished last year.

On the offensive side, the 'Cats might have the potential to become one of the schools' best ever with the aid of experienced lettermen and juco transfers.

Two of the most solid spots in the offense are the backfield and receivers, including wide receiver Eugene Goodlow, The Associated Press' Big 8 Newcomer of the Year in 1978.

'We've got a nucleus of good, experienced players," Dickey said.

Intramural sign-ups

Today is the last day to sign up for intramural badminton, water volleyball and tug-of-war.

Badminton competition will have both singles and doubles categories; water volleyball is co-rec only and tug-of-war has men's, women's and co-rec categories.

The deadline is 5 p.m. in the Recreational Services office in Ahearn Field House.

Superstars...

"I think the competition is great," said Brown, senior in HPER and fullback for the Wildcat football team. "It is a real privilege to be chosen to participate in this. I would like to see K-State have a really good showing. With the athletes we've got, we'll be able to compete with anyone else and do well."

"The size and magnitude of this whole thing is just overwhelming," Bocchi said. "To be able to fly these athletes down, house them, feed them, award prizes and still make this a profitable venture means that this is going to be a very big operation."

Bocchi said he is very optimistic about the K-Staters' chances in the competition.

"Whether our athletes win, lose or draw, the whole experience should be fantastic for them," he said.

Baseball team smashes Benedictine

By NANCY ZOGLEMAN
Collegian Reporter

It was baseball, hot dogs and sunny skies Wednesday as K-State got their 14th and 15th wins of the season by beating Benedictine College in a doubleheader, 5-3 and 12-0.

In the first game, saw freshman pitcher Doug Hoppock improved his record to 2-0. The 'Cats got three runs in the first inning while Benedictine scored two. K-State scored twice in the second inning and Benedictine got another run in the third.

The second game was all K-State with the 'Cats getting four runs in the third and eight runs in the fourth to go ahead of Benedictine 12-0.

The game was stopped after five innings because of the 10-run rule. Pitcher Don Waller moved his season record to 3-0.

Coach Dave Baker said he thought the team did well but needed to hit the ball throughout the batting order.

This weekend, the 'Cats will play a five-game series with the University of Iowa. They will play seven-inning doubleheaders Friday and Saturday and a single nine-inning game Sunday.

"This is the first time we have played this many games in a row this year. This is a big series before we go into league play," Baker said.

'It was a barrel of fun'

Staff photos

By KENT GASTON
Sports Editor

Jari Wills found out it's hard work to push a wheelchair.

James Bailey found out it's impossible to dribble a basketball between his legs while he's in a wheelchair.

And, the K-State basketball players found out they were the ones who were handicapped as the Shawnee County Chairmen wheelchair team destroyed them 68-62 last night in Ahearn Field House.

'Getting up and down the court is the hardest thing, and once you get going, you can't slow down.'

Destroyed is the right word, because the Chairmen led at halftime 52-12 but switched scores with K-State to begin the second half.

So, K-State really lost 108-22.

While everybody knew the game was a showcase of the Chairmen's talent and a money-raiser for a shuttle service for K-State's handicapped students, it was obvious that the game was also some good fun.

K-State's honorary coach, Mark Jensen of KMAN radio, capsulized the game by saying, "It was a barrel of fun. Those guys are amazing."

No one in Ahearn felt sorry for the Chairmen. In fact, they probably felt sorry for the Wildcats.

THE SYMPATHY for the floundering 'Cats was even felt by the Chairmen.

"They're not too bad," Libby Peters of the Chairmen conceded. "They have the basics of basketball."

Those basics of basketball didn't include much defense or shooting abilty for K-State, except by Tim Jankovich, who had 10 points.

However, the hopelessness of Jankovich's effort was shown by the scoring of the Chairmen—Ted Decker had 35 points, Royce Miller had 27 points and Chuck Gambill had 24 points, while the entire K-State team had only 22.

It's not that K-State didn't try. They tried several methods of keeping up with the Chairmen. When the Chairmen used only two players, they still beat the 'Cats. In the last 10 minutes, the K-State cheerleaders pushed the Wildcats' wheelchairs, but the Chairmen still blazed past them for easy points. And, in a last-ditch effort, the Wildcats pushed the cheerleaders. But, all they got was a nasty two-chair pile-up with one second left.

"It's a lot of fun," Wills said. "We're just trying to help somebody out."

HOWEVER, "it's hard, very hard work," he said.

Wills saw the writing on the wall early in the second half, despite the score-switching.

When asked if K-State had a chance to hold its 40-point lead, he said:

"You wanna know the truth? Hell, no. We'll score 10 points—maybe. Getting up and down the court is the hardest thing, and once you get going, you can't slow down."

The zaniness included K-Staters falling out of their chairs, K-State's errant passes and an extremely crowded wheelchair as Ed Nealy carried cheerleaders Wendy Phillips and Susie Volker on his lap while he was pushed around by yell leader Tim Strobel.

"Hey, I couldn't ask for anything better," Nealy said about his passengers.

Chairmen honorary coach Ed Sorensen of KTSB-TV in Topeka also had a good time.

"My reversing of the scores at halftime was a big gamble," Sorensen said. "but, it reflected my extreme confidence in my own coaching ability. What I've done here is molded a pretty adequate bunch of individuals into a finely honed basketball machine."

The Chairmen are finely honed, but most fans could tell it had little to do with Sorensen's adequate coaching.

Salina youth gang-raped

SALINA (AP)—The Saline County sheriff says he believes prisoners in the county jail gang-raped a 17-year-old youth to punish him for allegedly molesting a 4-year-old girl.

Nine prisoners have been charged with a total of 17 counts of aggravated sodomy, six counts of aggravated battery, two counts of misdemeanor battery and a misdemeanor charge of unlawful restraint.

The charges say the young inmate who is awaiting transfer to the state prison following conviction as an adult on a charge of child enticement, was attacked by other inmates during a five-hour period March 17.

Death penalty pros, cons discussed

Death penalty proponents and opponents will confront one another in a forum at 7:30 tonight in the Union Little Theatre.

Forum panelists will be Robert Stephan, Kansas attorney general; Merrill Werts, state senator from Manhattan and Junction City; Donn Everett, Manhattan's former state senator, and John Exdell, assistant professor of philosophy.

"The issue of capital punishment is before the Kansas Legislature right now," Exdell said. "It is a topical, political issue that raises important moral issues that the Legislature and citizens must face up to."

Capital punishment legislation is being discussed in a conference committee of members from the House and the Senate.

The purpose of tonight's panel discussion is to clarify the various views, re-examine arguments for and against, and to point out the complexity and signifigance of the problem.

The forum is one of a series of discussions on philosophical issues, sponsored by the Department of Philosophy.

'Lovable charming man'

Emmitt Kelly dies at 80

SEDAN (AP)—Sedan, a small town in the Chautauqua Hills country of southeast Kansas, was saddened Wednesday by news of the death of native son Emmett Kelly, the world famous circus clown.

Seasonal opening of the Emmett Kelly Museum in Sedan will take place this weekend on schedule, and as he would have wanted it, said curator Modena Lewis.

The curator described him as a "a lovable, intelligent and charming man," and said he was expected to try and visit the museum later this year.

Kelly, 80, was born Dec. 9, 1898, and lived in Sedan until he was 7, when the family moved to Missouri. He still has relations in Sedan, and was on hand to help dedicate the museum in 1967.

There is also a park named after Kelly in Houston, Mo., where he grew up. Lane Davis, a Houston newspaper man who had known Kelly for 25 years, said Wednesday he was anything but a clown in real life.

"He was a solid, straight-thinking man," Davis said. "Emmett kept abreast of everything. He read all of his life. It was a habit he acquired while he was in the circus. The entertainment world has really lost something."

Mayor Ernie Meadows of Sedan said he recalls Kelly's visit in 1967 when he spent three or four days, spoke to the chamber of commerce and drew cartoons for the kids in grade school.

Meadows said the city will send some kind of remembrance for the funeral. Kelly's death, he added, was "kind of a surprise."

Velma Lowry, a former curator of the Sedan museum, said she, too, was surprised. "As far as I knew he has always been in excellent health."

Publisher convicted; 11 years or $27,500

ATLANTA (AP)—District Judge Nick Lambros ordered Larry Flynt to pay a $2,500 fine on each of 11 misdemeanor counts—a total of $27,500.

Lambros also sentenced the magazine owner to a total of 11 years in jail, to be served consecutively, but the judge said the jail terms would be suspended on payment of the fine and under the condition that Flynt did not again violate state obscenity laws.

After the guilty verdict was returned, Lambros said he would delay sentencing.

He went ahead with the sentencing after Flynt rose and asked that it "take place today."

Judge Lambros told jurors Tuesday that Flynt could be convicted under the obscenity laws only if the average Fulton County resident would think his publications appeal primarily to a prurient interest in nudity, sex or excretion.

Answer to yesterday's puzzle.

CRYPTOQUIP 3-29

K B - K B K G U V K G K K V S L X L N S V V X L N U G K K V S L

Yesterday's Cryptoquip — SPRING THAWS WILL ENCOURAGE RICH TULIP GROWTH.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: L equals S

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Death penalty: debate hones two-edged sword

By SCOTT STUCKEY
News Editor

"Death is the most emotional issue that any of us will ever contemplate," said Manhattan's state Senator Merrill Werts. "All of us will experience it first hand."

Werts is one of 21 state senators who voted Thursday to send back to the House a bill that would reinstate the death penalty in Kansas.

Werts participated in a death penalty panel discussion last night in the K-State Union, as part of a program sponsored by the philosophy department.

He said he has contemplated the death penalty for years, and "was ready" to cast his affirmative vote Thursday.

"I voted for it. I don't say it proudly; I don't say it ashamedly," he said.

Werts said the greatest reason for capital punishment is the protection it affords society.

"Man has the right to protect himself," he said. "Society should have the right to forever be protected from the criminal (who commits a heinous crime)."

WERTS SAID he would've preferred that the bill give the convicted murderer a choice between life imprisonment and death, but committee discussions determined that such a provision would be impractical.

"It would be less inhumane to execute him than to leave him in a hole to be slowly driven mad," he said.

"I'm distressed that the Senate approved the bill today," said panelist Donn Everett, former senator from Manhattan. "Yet, it still has a long way to travel."

The version passed by the Senate Thursday by a two-vote margin was broadened to apply to persons convicted of murder in the commission of a felony. The version passed in the House earlier this session applied only to premeditated murder.

This change may cause difficulties in the House, but Everett said the bill will probably pass. It may, however, meet further opposition from Gov. John Carlin, he said.

EVERETT SAID although a vast majority of Kansans support the death penalty, the state's judicial system is inequitable and shouldn't be entrusted with such a responsibility.

He said the quality of judges, prosecutors and defense attorneys varies greatly in different parts of the state.

"I would hate to defend a member of a racial minority (charged with murder) in a rural county in this state," Everett said. "We (Kansans) have one of the sloppiest systems of law enforcement."

Citing his experience as a defense attorney, Everett said the death penalty places a tremendous responsibility on the defender of an accused murderer.

"My mannerisms, the way I dress or one statement I make may affect a person's right to live," he said, adding that a defendant's, ability to articulate his story can determine whether he will die.

"It's not with great pleasure that I speak as a proponent of capital punishment," said Kansas Attorney General Robert Stephan, another of the panelists. "But I have an obligation to represent a majority opinion of the people of the state."

STEPHAN SAID most Kansans favor the death penalty and U.S. Supreme Court studies show that the attitude prevails nationwide.

He said the death penalty legislation has adequate provisions to safeguard the accused. The bill requires separate trials for establishing guilt and setting the sen-

'Strong' support given in Student Senate vote

By THE SGA STAFF

Student Senate supports the Strong Complex residents.

After much discussion and little dissent last night, senate cast a unanimous vote in support of a resolution backing complex residents.

The resolution asked for senate support for residents of Strong Complex (Boyd, Putnam and Van Zile halls) in "preserving the quality of their living situation."

"To maintain and to preserve is our goal," said Mike Murphy, senior in business and Van Zile resident.

Included in that goal are staff-to-student ratios, lobbies and phone and food services at the small halls, said Greg Musil, student body president and co-sponsor of the bill.

Housing Director Thomas Frith said the problem with the complex is it has higher expenses than income.

A Housing Council ad hoc committee has been studying maintenance, operations, staffing and food services to determine where money could be saved in the Strong Complex, and will submit its findings to the council today.

FRITH TOLD the group more than $250,000 would be required to keep the small hall kitchens running, replace old equipment and meet fire codes.

Strong Complex has run in the red more than $750,000 during the last 10 years, Frith said, adding that he didn't think any of the large halls had run with a deficit.

The residence hall system receives no money from the state and must finance itself, Frith said. Renovating the small hall kitchens through the sale of bonds has not been considered, but "it's worth looking into," Frith said.

A Boyd Hall resident said without food services, the small halls have nothing in which to draw people.

"We're losing much more than a food service," said Nancy Olsen, senior in natural resource management and Putnam Hall resident. "We're losing four dieticians on work-study programs, a guest room and a meeting and study room. We would lose our personalities as a small hall."

Dana Foster, junior in political science, and Isaac Turner, arts and sciences senator, said they wished the resolution was more specific.

"If we're going to do something, we should get behind it 100 percent and not just say we support it," Foster said. "I think there are a lot more things to be said than the resolution states."

Foster said senate exists to listen to what students want, rather than what administrators want.

John Martin, agriculture senator, said the legislation is premature because Housing Council has not met or made any decision.

Senate's passage of the resolution could possibly determine Housing Council's decision, Chuck Banks, agriculture senator, said.

IN OTHER senate business, senate allocated $120 by a vote of 31 to 7 to pay computer programming costs for a survey to be used by Consumer Relations Board (CRB).

A portion of the survey, completed by 9,721 students during spring registration, was to determine which students are not being reached by CRB's public information programs, according to CRB Director Melanie Stockdell.

She said the survey information is "of primary importance" to CRB.

The CRB bill was sent from Finance Committee with a recommendation for senate to not pass it.

"$120 could be spent in a better way than on survey and samples," Finance Committee Chairman Patrick Miller said.

"We don't want to set a precedent for groups," said Angela Scanlan, agriculture senator and committee member.

Scanlan said Finance Committee didn't think it necessary to fund a study for one social service when a composite of all services could be done.

Miller said senate could conduct a more accurate survey by questioning about 200 students as they walk through campus.

"The survey is done, but Finance Committee is recommending the completion of a different survey—it's ridiculous," Curtis Krizek, arts and sciences senator, said.

Farris stands trial for murder; police recount victim discovery

By DAVE HUGHES
Staff Writer

Witnesses from the Emporia Police Department led the jury, in the murder trial of Marvin Farris, through the first hours of the incident leading to the trial which began Thursday in Riley County District Court.

Farris, 23, is charged with second degree murder in the Oct. 28 shooting death of Floyd McSpadden, 23, of Emporia. McSpadden's body was found Nov. 7 locked in the trunk of his parents' car parked near his Emporia home.

Officer William Lewis, who accompanied the body to the Shawnee Mission Medical Center and witnessed the autopsy, told the seven-woman and five-man jury he observed six wounds of entrance and one of exit. Five bullets were recovered from the body and sent to the Kansas Bureau of Investigation for ballistics tests.

In his opening statement, prosecutor Charles Ball said he would show, through testimony, that the bullets taken from the body would match with the gun and other bullet found at Farris' apartment Nov. 13, the day he was arrested.

Defense attorney Dan Myers said, however, the defense would produce another ballistics expert who would contradict the state's witness.

Ball said the state witnesses would show Farris shot McSpadden and drove the victim in his car to Emporia, where he left it.

Myers countered that the state will be able to produce only circumstantial evidence.

Detective Michael Lopez said he had initially discovered McSpadden"s body after Joseph McSpadden, Floyd's father, located the car while searching for his son. Lopez opened the trunk because he and McSpadden had detected a "peculiar odor" eminating from the car.

All the witnesses said the body was in the advanced stage of decomposition, but none could say, under cross examination, how long the car or the body had been at that spot.

When Detective Steve Miltz arrived on the scene that night, he said he collected samples of vegetation and leaves clinging to the body. The importance of these specimens has yet to be established by testimony.

Detectives Larry Adams and Lopez further examined the car when it was moved to the Emporia Police Department early on Nov. 8.

Adams said blood was found around and in the trunk, but none was detected near the driving area of the car.

Death...

tence, and the courts are obliged to consider any mitigating circumstances—such as the influence of emotion, age and the defendant's history.

"I can't say there's concrete evidence that capital punishment will deter crime," Stephan said. But retribution and the prevention of crime through the incapacitation of the murderer are enough reason for the death penalty, he said.

"It is a legal constitutional sanction," he said.

"I think the arguments against the death penalty are airtight," said panelist John Exdell, assistant professor of philosophy.

EXDELL SAID states that have the death penalty assume the risk of killing people "unjustly, capriciously and arbitrarily."

He said proponents of the death penalty cannot provide the proof that death is a "greater good" than life imprisonment. Dozens of innocent people have been convicted of first-degree murder, he said, and some have been put to death.

"If we have the death penalty, mistakes will be made," Exdell said.

Racial and class prejudice make blacks and poor people more vulnerable to the death penalty, he said. Recent studies show that, even with the modernized death penalty bills of the '70s, convicted murderers are more likely to be on death row if their victims were white.

"Studies show that killing whites is a worse crime (than killing non-whites)," he said.

Proponents of the death penalty have rejected the principle that human life is sacred, Exdell said.

Problems flow at nuclear plant

HARRISBURG PA.—More than 400,000 gallons of contaminated water from the disabled Three Mile Island nuclear power plant are being discharged into the Susquehanna River, federal and state officials said late Thursday.

The discharge can be made without harmful radioactive pollution of the river, said Clifford Jones, head of the state Department of Environmental Resources (DER).

"There is an urgent need to begin discharging," Jones said.

The water is contaminated with a very slight level of xenon, a low-level contaminant, according to DER officials.

Officials from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the federal Department of Energy said such diluted waste water is discharged routinely from the plant under normal operating conditions.

Jones said plant officials fear that unless the diluted water is discharged, holding tanks would fill up and undiluted waste water would run directly into the river through storm drains.

"Most of it (xenon) will be dissipated like bubbles in soda pop," said DER spokesman Dave Milne. He said the gas decays after a few hours.

"The problem is that 400,000 gallons of the waste water have accumulated in the sump of the plant's turbine building. The water apparently became contaminated because of radioactive gases released into the plant," Jones said.

The NRC said it expects no detectable levels of xenon in the river a few miles downstream of the discharge.

Canadian air crash kills 16

QUEBEC—A Quebecair passenger plane crashed into a hill and burned shortly after taking off from Quebec's Ancienne Lorette airport early Thursday night. Hospital officials said 16 of the 24 persons aboard were killed and the other eight were injured, two of them critically.

The twin-engine turboprop F27 plane had just taken off for Montreal. An airline spokesman said the pilot "reported a defect in one of his engines. He asked to return to the airport, but he didn't have time."

Witnesses said one of the plane's engines was blazing before the crash. One witness, Guy Gilbert, said he was the first person to reach the plane, and pulled three seriously injured passengers from the wreckage.

He said the aircraft broke into three parts and seat cushions were scattered across the hillside. Rescuers and ambulances had trouble getting near the crash because of the terrain.

Irate ex-employee charged with arson

BOSTON—An 18-year-old former employee of two posh Boston hotels was charged with arson late Thursday for setting fires that seriously injured 13 persons and drove almost 2,000 people into the streets early in the day, police said.

Police Capt. David MacDonald said the suspect, Julio Rodrigues of Boston, was taken into custody at a bus station, where he had purchased a ticket for New York City.

George Regan, a spokesman for the mayor's office, said he understood that Rodrigues had been fired from the Sheraton Boston and the Copley Plaza, the hotels that burned early Thursday.

Rodrigues was to be arraigned today in Boston Municipal Court, McDonald said.

Mayor Kevin White had said earlier in the day that police were investigating the possibility that someone might have had a grudge against one or both hotels.

Right to demonstrate defended at KU

LAWRENCE—An official at the University of Kansas Thursday defended the right of students to demonstrate with marches such as one Wednesday which resulted in several fights and two arrests.

David Ambler, vice chancellor for student affairs at the university, said student rights would be protected at KU.

"Groups have the right to assemble and to demonstrate as they did Wednesday," Ambler said. "And we are going to continue our efforts to protect that right."

Ambler said he would prefer that students discuss their viewpoints in a more academic setting and warned that the university would take appropriate measures to avoid violence on the campus.

Weather

Good morning. Be careful where you walk this weekend—the Clydesdales are on campus. Well, anyway, the weather for "Rendezvous with KSU" should be quite nice. There will be decreasing cloudiness today with highs expected in the mid 60s. Saturday should be another mild day, with highs in the upper 50s to low 60s.

Opinions

Dogs deserve better

The cocker spaniel stares at me with distrust. His companion voices his complaints by barking and throwing himself against the fence.

Every day I walk by these two dogs in their jail-cell-size enclosure. It makes no difference what time of day or what day of the year it is, there they are and there they remain.

I want to reach over the fence and pet them, comfort them, but I think they must be soured on human friendship.

Everyday I ask myself the same question: Why do people want to own dogs only to confine them in box-like areas soon piled high with feces, mud and misery?

What is worse is to see dogs chained.

No matter how long the chain is, it is an unbearable restriction for a dog. Usually the chain gets tangled. Sometimes the dog gets strangled.

It's no way to treat an animal. It's no way to treat a pet.

A pet is meant for pampering.

The dictionary defines pet as an animal kept for amusement or companionship. A dog kept full-time on a chain or in a cage is not amusing and keeps only passers-by company.

If someone is going to own a dog, they must at least provide it with habitable, healthy living conditions. At the most, they must provide it with love.

A light shines on smokers

Are you one of those disco drones who returns home from Aggieville every Friday night with blood-shot eyes and smoke-smelling clothes?

Do you complain to the docs at Lafene that you're suffering from repeated nervousness?

Do you bang your head against the wall trying to figure out why you always have splitting headaches?

If so, you're a victim of the "Flic the Bic" dilemma—cigarette smoking.

Why do YOU smoke?

Is it worth the added expense of Visine, Tide, Valium and Bufferin? More importantly, is cigarette smoking worth dying for? That's right, dying, as in 10 feet under.

Think about it: cigarette smoking is responsible annually for more deaths than guns. More people die from lung cancer attributed to smoking than do those who die from incidents involving Saturday Night Specials.

CIGARETTES ARE Every Day Specials. They may kill you, they may not. No one can ever tell, until it's too late.

Walk into the doctor's office one day and he says you're fine.

Two months later, the same doctor has to find some way to tell you that you smoked one cigarette too many. It's called cancer with a lowercase 'c' and it comes in black, tar and nicotine. It can't be cured.

Have you ever seen what a cigarette-tarred lung looks like? Have you ever known anyone who has had lung cancer?

A member of my family has lung cancer. He's the nicest guy in the world, easy to get along with, living life to its fullest. But this same guy used to smoke three packs a day. He'll probably never get to smoke another cigarette again. No one knows.

IT'S DISMAL enough that he's a victim, but it's also eerie watching others puff and puff, wondering who's next in line.

It's similar to an episode on the Twilight Zone, where a lieutenant in the Korean War predicted future casualties. A halo appeared over the victim-to-be.

OK, look around. Do you see any of your friends with that shining light? Is someone you know walking around campus smoking their last butt? Look closely now.

And while you're at it, better find a mirror pretty damn quick and check yourself out. You may see the light shining over YOU.

Editor,

Your March 28th edition of the Collegian carries a response by Professor James Armagost to Bo Rader's photograph published the preceding day depicting Arne Richard's body being removed from an east side drainage ditch.

Armagost describes the picture as "junk," claiming it des not "contribute to an understanding the situation" and that it is "trash rather than giving us one last look at the real Arne."

Unfortunately, the real Arne was dead that day. The job of journalistic photography is to report the news in visual terms and fortunately Bo Rader is a sensitive photographer who did not give us "one last look " at Arne. As to whether the photograph "contributes to an understanding of the situation" is a moot question.

I didn't know Richards even remotely, yet the photograph, without a detailed visual description of who exactly is being carried, suggests that it is one who had sought commerce with the experience of expansive space and personal isolation frequently described honorifically by dedicated runners.

Does this photograph "contribute to an understanding of the situation?" I think it does in a quiet and poetic sort of way. Let's look at it again.

Extreme views confuse

Editor,

For students of varied cultural backgrounds the International Student Week provides a time for a healthy exchange of ideas.

We must therefore emphasize this kind of intercourse rather than the controversy and window dressing that marred the week some two years ago. (One recalls that two years ago the Collegian staff displayed a picture of a remote African village. Then an African student bluntly told them what he thought about the picture. And at the African stand that year, one saw numerous pictures of modern African cities, pictures of many people; in fact, a colorful facade that tempted you to believe that Africa is that Utopia they say is somewhere on this planet).

The week must not be blotted with such extremes. What is needed is a continous appreciation of the value systems of other societies.

In this regard one commends the organization known as American Students for International Awareness for providing the right forum.

Many students would also like to take formal courses that teach the history, geography, folkways, norms and mores of other societies.

In particular, as an African, I have often wished we had an African studies program here. One course or two of Swahili or Arabic would be great electives for me.

I am not alone in this. Numerous American love to live and work in Africa. They are eager to apply their skills toward improving agricultural and industrial yield, toward better health and educational programs, and ultimately, towards a better life for all.

To attain these noble ideals, a knowledge of the people and the environment helps.

If you want an African studies program here, if you think it is also a healthy way of enhancing better communication and understanding among people, if you think it will enhance the course of knowledge and truth, then write the Dean of Arts and Sciences.

Your letter will help.

Treaty 'blind man's bluff'

Editor,

While Sadat, Begin and Carter play Blind Man's Bluff, the only "peace" that has come is the "piece" of American dollars coming from the pockets of blind men.

Perhaps a Nobel prize or re-election can be bought, but not peace (at least, not with money). There can be no real peace in the Middle East until the real problem is confronted—the plight of the Palestinian people.

The Palestinians are 1) a displaced people scattered throughout the Arab world in refugee camps and ghettos living at the mercy of sometimes coldly tolerating governments; and 2) a repressed people deprived of their rights in their own homeland by the conquering Zionists.

It is Palestine which has been torn from her people and the rights of the Palestinians which have been trampled and scorned—these are the central issues that must be faced before the subject of peace can ever be thought of. All other Arab-Israeli problems are merely off-shoots of these.

We, the Arab students at K-State, stand behind the struggle for a democratic state in Palestine where any man; Moslem, Christian or Jew, may live and work in peace.

Morals need regulation

Editor,

Re: "Morals can't be regulated" March 28.

Should we as human beings and Americans have the right to do what we want at the expense of others? Should alcohol and pornography be available to anyone who wants it, even if they are only children? Whether we are willing to admit it or not, we are living in a society of declining morals. Let's face it, we are indeed going downhill. This is all quite evident by the increase in suicides, alcoholism, crime and the illegitimate birth rate.

Morals, as defined by Webster, are, "those things of or relating to principles of right and wrong." That is, the standards by which we live.

There is nothing more disgusting or seemingly a waste of time than to see someone so bombed out of their mind that they cannot even walk or act in a responsible way.

There is nothing more nauseating than seeing someone with their nose buried in a pornographic publication. We must try and deal with life's situations and not simply waste precious time seeking ways to escape them.

In trying to deal with this issue ourselves we have made a pretty big mess of things. I'm not saying that the government should rule over our very existence, but it is clearly visible that we cannot all have different opinions—havng no set standard by which to live and get along with one another.

The sooner that everyone realizes the need for higher moral standards, the sooner the government can get off our backs with laws and regulations.

Until such a time when every person, every American in this "nation under God" decides to adopt a higher set of moral standards by which to conduct themselves that will be for the good of all and not just themselves, then and only then, do I want these laws and regulations set up to protect me against the selfish and uncaring to cease.

The next time that you decide to go to your favorite tavern and drown your problems, or buy that pornographic magazine for your reading leasure, stop and think about your moral standards. Are you proud of them? Are you willing to die by them?

Richards service today

Arne Richards will be honored in a memorial service at 4 p.m. today at the First Congregational Church, 700 Poyntz Avenue.

Richards, documents bibliographer at Farrell Library, was found dead Monday afternoon in a flooded ditch on the east side of town.

The acting Pottawatomie County coroner, Dr. Lou Borgendale, said the final results weren't in from the laboratoy in Manhattan that performed the autopsy, but that Richards' death appeared to be due to a heart attack caused by a dysrhythmic action.

Three memorial funds are being established in Richards' name. An Arne Richards' Memorial Scholarship Fund will be set up at the school of library science at Emporia State University.

The KSU-Manhattan Track Club is planning a fund through the KSU Foundation to further track-related activities and a memorial fund in the Richards family name is being established for the Village United Church of Christ in Blue Springs, Mo.

Standing in lines getting to be a drag? Enroll for fall early

Students don't have to camp out to enroll in classes for fall, but they may have to stand in lines if they wait to turn in their pre-enrollment forms.

During fall pre-enrollment last year, 9,675 students enrolled—3,000 of them on the last day, Don Foster, director of records, said.

"This creates lines that students have to wade through to enroll. Students should come to the library (Farrell Library) as soon as they see their advisers," Foster said.

Fall 1979 pre-enrollment will start Monday in the basement of the library and will continue until April 13. The tables will be open from 8:15 a.m. to 4:15 p.m., he said.

Enrollment permits are available at the advisers' offices for students in agriculture, education and home economics. Students in architecture and design, or arts and sciences, should check in their departmental offices to find out where to get their forms.

The College of Business Administration will be advising students 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., April 2-13, on the first floor of Calvin Hall.

Engineering students should go to the Student Affairs Office in Seaton 163 and graduate students should go to the graduate school office in Fairchild 102 to pick up their permits.

AFTER PRE-ENROLLMENT is completed, a count of the students requesting each class will be sent to each department, Foster said.

To meet student demand, departments will take a week to make adjustments in the capacities of their classes. Changes will be made if possible, and students will then be assigned to classes, he said.

The more credit hours completed, the higher priority a student is given when classes are assigned. This eliminates the need to be the first person to enroll, Foster said.

Instead of being mailed out, class assignments will be handed out in the basement of the library in about a month, he said.

Students who receive incomplete schedules will be given priority when drop-add begins. Drop-add will run from May 7 to May 11.

Those who do not pre-enroll by April 13 can turn in their enrollment forms during new student enrollment, June 5 to June 30.

'Government's handling was inept'

Shenkel: Oil crisis no hoax

By GREG HENDERSON
Collegian Reporter

The oil and energy crisis is a hoax, or so 68 percent of Americans believe, a recent Associated Press and NBC news poll showed.

But a K-State professor of geology who once worked for Mobil Oil said Wednesday there is no question that there is a severe oil shortage.

"Our government has been inept in handling the oil crisis," Claude Shenkel said. "Government loopholes (in regulations) have caused many problems, such as windfall profits (for oil companies)."

The U.S. produces about 8.6 million barrels of oil per day, while consuming more than 21 million barrels. More than 12 million barrels a day have to be imported.

Shenkel said if imports to the U.S. were stopped, our total known oil reserves would last only four years at the current rate of consumption.

He said oil reserves worldwide total about 642 billion barrels, which will last only 30 years at the present rate of consumption.

SHENKEL SAID automobiles use about one-fourth of the oil consumed.

Lowering the speed to 50 miles per hour would save 250,000 barrels per day, according to an Associated Press story.

The AP also stated that if the average number of passengers in cars on the road were raised from 1.3 to 2.3 through the use of car pools, 780,000 barrels a day would be saved.

The story said if the thermostats in every American home were set back 3 degrees an additional 550,000 barrels of oil would be saved per day.

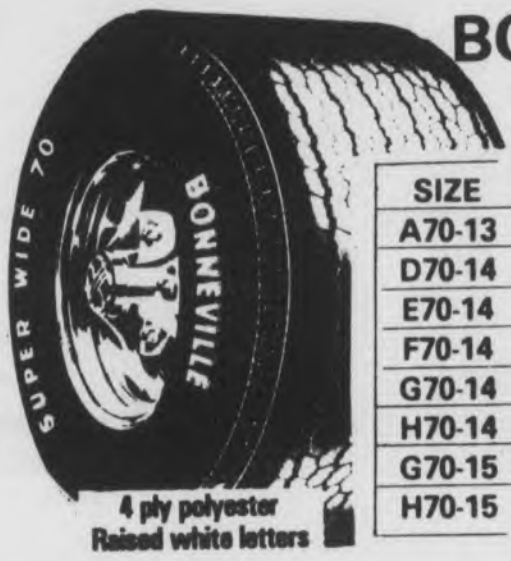
Another factor contributing to the oil shortage was a lack of economic incentives for gas and oil exploration in past years, according to Shenkel.

Until 1973, the federal government clamped a lid on gas and oil prices, causing oil and gas exploration to bog down as the cost of drilling new wells rose. Between 1956 and 1971, drilling costs rose 85 percent despite the fact that average prices for oil increased only 17 percent.

SHENKEL SAID the United States, representing 6 percent of the world's population and consuming 30 percent of the world's oil, shouldn't depend on nuclear power to solve the energy problem. Technical problems, licensing and financial problems have continued to retard the growth of the nuclear industry. The long term practicality of nuclear power could be limited by uranium availability, he said.

America could benefit, however, from the expanded use of coal as an energy source, Shenkel said. Coal reserves are abundant, accounting for 90 percent of all known U.S. fossil fuel resources. America has enough coal reserves to last for centuries, but there are environmental concerns limiting its use.

Strip mining of coal destroys the topsoil and often leaves land unusable. Acid mine drainage with its accompanying aquatic plant and fish kills, is a common strip mining sequel.



Another concern is the high sulfur content in many remaining coal deposits. It is estimated that 60 percent of the 14 million tons of sulfur dioxide belched from smokestacks in 1971 had come from coal.

Congress braces for shifts

Census to track U.S. population migrations

WASHINGTON (AP)—Come the 1980 census one year from this April, the federal government will start counting people. The result will launch a congressional sweepstakes.

Some states, like New York, Ohio and Illinois, will be the losers.

The reason is that they have lost population since the 1970 census was taken. As a result, they are likely to be electing fewer representatives in the November 1982 congressional election.

New York and Ohio will each lose two congressmen and Illinois will lose four, advance census estimates show.

If the government's 1978 estimates of population growth don't change, Michigan, Pennsylvania and South Dakota will each lose one.

The winners will be sunny states like California, Texas and Florida, where so many Americans have moved in the last decade that each state will pick up two more representatives, 1978 estimates show.

Each of these states has gained more than 1.5 million people since 1970, averaging more than 200,000 people per year.

ARIZONA, Oregon, Tennessee, Utah and Washington each will gain one congressman, the same studies show.

Donald Starsinic, a demographer who has chronicled America's growth for the last 22 years, said people are leaving large industrial cities like New York and Chicago because costs of living and doing business are cheaper elsewhere.

"They are expensive areas to live and invest in," said Starsinic, whose official title is chief of the Census Bureau's state and national branch. "As plants become old, companies have to decide whether to renovate or to rebuild in an area where the land and labor are cheaper."

What's happening, Starsinic said, is that many companies are moving to less populous areas, taking jobs and people with them.

After results of the 1980 census are in, the federal government will inform state legislatures whether individual counties in their states have gained or lost population. To account for the population shifts, state legislatures will redraw the lines that make up congressional districts.

THIS REDISTRICTING is necessary because the House of Representatives is limited to 435 seats, and each district must contain about the same number of people.

By 1980, each congressman will have about 510,000 people to represent, compared to 500,000 people in 1978 and 465,000 in 1970.

As southern states gain representatives and northern and midwestern industrial states lose them, there is likely to be a philosophical impact on the House, where the character of the nation is reflected in those elected.

"I imagine that there will be a more conservative trend," said Rep. Robert Garcia, (D-N.Y.), chairman of the House subcommittee on census and population. "For instance, most of the southwestern states have voted for a constitutional convention and for a balanced budget.

"Urban America will lose if the Northeast continues to lose population. Cities in general cannot gain if (Americans move to) suburban settings."

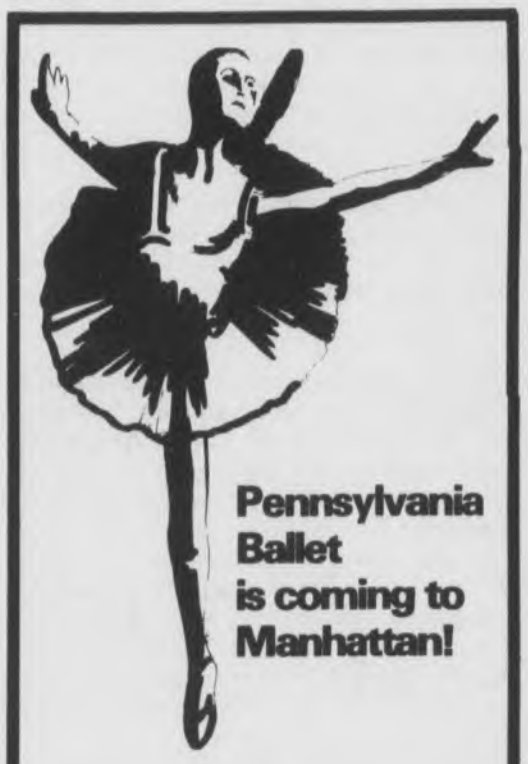
Another result might be that since many blacks and Hispanics live in the South and Southwest, Garcia said, they will have a chance at more representation in the House if their numbers are counted more accurately than they have been.

Winners and losers may change after the 1980 census because no matter how precise the formula for projecting trends and estimating population, no one can predict the future, particularly where fertility is concerned.

DURING THE 1970s, the nation grew at a slower rate than it did in the 1960s mainly because women were choosing to have fewer children, Starsinic said. He believes the economy plays a major role in this choice.

The large number of people born during the post-World War II baby boom are now in prime child-raising years. If they follow past trends, the women will have three or four children each, Starsinic said.

"But they're finding their economic situation is not rosy," he said. "This is not the land of plenty they expected. They're not earning as much as they expected; they can't support children as they expected.



"So they've had to lower their aspirations or lower the number of children they have. My impression is that they have chosen to have fewer children."

Religious theater

Seeing is believing

By KRISTI WALTER
Collegian Reporter

Religion is a way of life to Norman Fedder, professor of speech and theater. It has been since he was a child in New York City.

He attributes his interest in religious theater to his strong Jewish upbringing.

"I have always taken theater seriously," Fedder said. "It is a way to get people to live better. I have always been interested in goodness and values and trying to live a life of love.

"There was a time when I thought that it would be best if you didn't have any religion. That came to be empty without any roots."

The initial factor which influenced Fedder's interest in religious theater was developing and directing a play at K-State about the prophet Jeremiah. The play written by a minister, depicted Jeremiah as a Christ-like figure, but to Fedder, the play was about the Jewish people.

"We had a dialogue between Christians and Jews after the play and I really felt that I had come home," Fedder said. "It was a very exciting experience for me."

AS A result of directing the play, Fedder was asked to have his students write some plays in religious theater.

Then he was commissioned to write a play about Easter; the result was "The Betrayal."

"'The Betrayal' is a sympathetic view of Judas," Fedder said. "It shows him as a human being. It is based on the gospels. Nothing is changed except the point of view."

Judas was a person who felt himself betrayed by Jesus, according to Fedder. He expected Christ to be a political Messiah and drive the Romans from Judea. When Judas discovered that was not Jesus' purpose on earth, Judas betrayed him in an effort to force Jesus into revolution.

Judas is rejected by Christ's followers. The only one who understood and forgave Judas was Jesus, Fedder said. Judas finally admitted he betrayed Jesus out of anger and jealousy; then he hanged himself.

"The point of the play is that Christianity has been a religion of hating Judas and not loving Jesus," Fedder said. "It (the play) gives the idea of loving your enemy.

"I'm not trying to convert anyone," he said. "I am merely trying to make a statement about love in terms of Christian experience and here I am not even a Christian, but I can relate to it.

"The people during the time of Jesus were Jewish. I feel very much at home in that period," Fedder said. "I am interested in the relationship between Judaism and Christianity. I believe everyone has a right to their religious beliefs."

FEDDER'S INTEREST in religious drama prompted his interest in the religion and theater program of the American Theater Association of which he is chairman. Fedder also is president of the Ecumenical Council for Drama and other Arts.

For some, the purpose of religious theater is to save souls. Others define it as drama

'Slaughterhouse Five'

Emotional film effective

By JANET DAVISON
Review Editor

"Slaughterhouse Five" is a complex film which puts you through the emotional wringer.

The film is diverse, and so are the viewer's reactions. You laugh, you grimace, you feel sick and you want to cry.

Collegian Review

Filmed in 1972, based on the book by Kurt Vonnegut, Jr., the movie is an effective statement against war.

"Slaughterhouse Five" is the story of Billy Pilgrim, a man who has "come unstuck in time." He can travel forward, backward or to a planet called Tralfamadore, where there is no time. Most of the film deals with trips to this strange planet and World War II Germany where he was a prisoner of war.

Director George Roy Hill is to be commended on the continuity he maintains with all the jumping back and forth through time. In some movies this effect is confusing, but Hill manages to hold your interest and keep the story easy to follow.

The makeup is phenomenal. Billy ages from a young man of about 19 to an old man about 75 or 80. He also is seen at several ages in-between and the effect is natural. He never looks made-up.

THE CINEMATOGRAPHY is well done. There are some breath-taking shots of the German skyline above Dresden as the POW's arrive; a stark contrast to later scenes when Dresden has been fire-bombed and the entire city is a desolate wasteland.

The destruction and waste of war are displayed in graphic detail—from the anguish of a young SS officer whose girlfriend is killed in the bombing, to a pile of bodies doused with gasoline and set afire as part of cleanup procedure. This is what makes the movie such a strong statement against war.

The senselessness and stupidity of the situation also is portrayed. A middle-aged American soldier is killed by SS members for picking up a china figurine from the rubble because it is considered contraband. He is given no chance to explain, they just kill him without asking questions.

The film has its comic moments, subtle little things like a plane full of bespectacled optometrists, and the omniscient being who first brings Billy to Tralfamadore presenting him with Montana Wildhack, a sexy film starlet wearing next to nothing, and commanding them to "mate."

But this is not a funny film. It is sad and depressing, and it is a film people should go see. There are no big name actors, unless you want to count Valerie Perrine. This was made before her starring role in "Lenny" and she doesn't do much besides smile and run around naked most of the time.

The acting is high quality, though—controlled and low key. Aside from some offensive language, it is tastefully done and well worth the time spent seeing it.

Jazz artists enjoying height of popularity

By SCOTT FARINA
Collegian Reviewer

Jazz currently is enjoying its greatest popularity since the Swing Era, when jazz was THE popular music of the day.

Particularly gratifying is the fact record companies release not only the lightweight quasi-jazz which sell the most—artists like Bob James and Grover Washington—but all styles of jazz.

Among the oustanding recent releases are:

Janne Schaffer, "Earmeal" on Columbia. Using rock rhythms as a base, Swedish guitarist Schaffer goes far beyond the fusion limits to create a "world music" sound, showing such diverse elements as rhythm-and-blues, Oriental music and symphonic serenity.

Schaffer's playing is uncluttered, which is not to say simplistic. He has an individual style—he enjoys playing with harmonics—and substance to his solos. He rates even with Pat Metheny as the best young guitarist today.

His sidemen also are fine musicians, more than capable of handling all the nuances of the Schaffer-penned tunes. It's to everyone's credit all the elements blend smoothly.

"EARMEAL" IS a notch below Schaffer's American debut, "Katharsis," only because there is less variety between each song on the new LP. As with the earlier album, the final track on "Earmeal" is a reflectve, acoustic piece which complements rather than contradicts what went before.

Michael Franks, "Tiger in the Rain" on Warner Brothers. In his fourth album, singer-composer Franks continues to mine gold in the vein of mainstream jazz. The nine songs contained herein feature intelligent lyrics, a laid-back feel and superb arrangements by producer John Simon (although I could do without the string section, which fortunately is used sparingly and tastefully).

Some top-flight musicians back Franks, among them Ron Carter, Kenny Barron, Bucky Pizzarelli and vibist Mike Mainieri. They are not relegated to a supportive role; they get a chance to solo and add effects. Check out Mainieri's sensitive work and the way Carter makes his bass "growl" on "Tiger in the Rain."

Franks has a thin, wispy voice perfectly suited to his lyrics. His voice conveys the warmth of a tender, caring lover in a candlelit room. It's personal without becoming cloying.

ONLY ONE song fails to meet the standards set in the other grooves. "Lifeline" has a commercial pop sound and an awkward double-time passage. Oh well, you can't strike gold every time you pan for it, I guess.

Richie Coles, "Alto Madness" on Muse. Bebop lives in the person of this young alto saxophone player who has a gutsy, rich sound in the tradition of Bird and Phil Woods. The only fault with this record is it's on a small label which might be hard to find in this burg, but look for it!

This is toe-tapping music—if you can move your foot fast enough. In particular, "Last Tango in Paris" goes with the speed of a runaway locomotive on a steep descent, but never gets out of control.

In a more relaxed manner are "Island Breeze," with a soft Latin touch; "Big Bo's Paradise," a bittersweet ballad which keeps shifting into a swinging blues; and "Remember Your Day Off," reminiscent of Dizzy Gillispie's Carribean excursions.

This album is a must for jazz fans.

International Week to acquaint K-Staters with other cultures

A fashion show, films, a potluck supper and workshops will help K-Staters learn about the cultures of the University's 680 international students during International Week, today through April 7.

International Week is sponsored to provide better international understanding, said Romeo Saplaco, vice president of the International Coordinating Council.

K-State's African students will demonstrate native dances and serve African dishes at 6 p.m. today at the Ecumenical Christian Ministry Building at 1021 Denison, Saplaco said.

Saturday's field trip to an organic farm will help International students learn about small-scale farming that is more practical to their native countries than American corporate farming, he said.

The Low Capital and Small Mixed Farming workshop at 9 a.m. Saturday at the International Student Center will include discussions about aquaculture, buyer's cooperatives, uses of wild plants and biological control of pests.

"Hunger affects people internationally," Saplaco said. That's why International Week will include John Denver's "I Want to Live" film Monday and Roy Prosterman, law professor at the University of Washington, speaking on "Ending Hunger in This Century: A Strategy for Global Self-Sufficiency" at 3 p.m. Friday in the Union Little Theater.

Activities for Home Economics Day in Justin Hall Thursday will be based on the International Year of the Child. The International Fashion and Variety Show will be at 7 that night in the Union Little Theater.

An international potluck supper with native dishes from the countries of people attending will conclude the week's activities in Cico Park on April 7.

Theater...

which is seriously concerned with how to live. And finally, some define it as theater which relates to the nature of God.

"I am concerned with drama as it relates to traditional religions," Fedder said. "I like to work with theater that works with some type of organized religion.

"There are churches and synagogues all over the country that are interested in theater," he said. "I work with theater that relates itself to the Christian and Jewish experience.

"The importance of using drama in relation to worship is the same as using drama in relation to anything," Fedder said. "A picture is worth a thousand words.

"It makes much more of an impact when you see what you are being told," he said. "People are much more convinced when they see something actually occur in front of them."

"It makes much more of an impact when you see what you are being told," he said. "People are much more convinced when they see something actually occur in front of them."

Presently, Fedder is writing a play about the relationship between Harry Truman and Eddie Jacoboson, Truman's life long friend.

Truman called Jacoboson "the next thing to kin folk," according to Fedder.

"I am thinking about calling the play that (the next thing to kin folk)," he said. "It's how I feel about Christians."

Fedder considers the subject of the play to be religious. Jacoboson played a major role in Truman's actions with Israel. It shows America's relationship to Israel.

"It is the kind of subject I like to work with," he said. "I am interested in heritage or 'root' type playwriting.

"I like to work with our heritage as Jews and Christians."

Witness allegedly stoned; so judges order retrial

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP)—A second trial has been ordered for a 40-year-old man whose 1974 murder conviction drew national attention when the case was the subject of a nationally televised news program.

The Second District Court of Appeal here Wednesday reversed another judge's ruling that re-trying Delbert Lee Tibbs would be double jeopardy. The Florida Supreme Court had overturned Tibbs' original conviction for lack of evidence.

The justices said the prosecution's star witness, a 16-year-old girl, was not credible because she had been smoking marijuana before and during an alleged ride in a truck which led to the murder of her boyfriend, Terry Robert Millroy, 27, of Key West.

Folksinger Pete Seeger had written and recorded the song, "Ode to Delbert Tibbs" to help finance the hitchhiking vagrant's defense.

CBS's news show "60 Minutes" at one time aired a mock trial based on the case at Fort Myers.

Nichols

'Lack of impetus' thwarts decision

By SUE FREIDENBERGER
Staff Writer

A lack of "impetus to rebuild" Nichols Gymnasium is a stumbling block in making a decision about the building, according to Sen. Wint Winter (R-Ottawa).

Winter, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, is serving on the K-State subcommittee investigating Nichols Gym.

"When the committee talked to President Acker, there seemed to be a lack of direction as to the practical use of the building," Winter said.

Since the Dec. 13, 1968 burning of the 57-year-old building, several feasibility and architectural studies have been proposed. Concern for Nichols has remained on or near the surface for the last decade, but to date, nothing has been resolved.

It seemed, however, that something substantive would occur when on July 1, 1978, $45,000 was appropriated by the Legislature for a feasibility study on the rehabilitation of Nichols.

According to Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities, the bidding laws for architects were changed on Sept. 1, 1978 and the bill's wording had to be changed and the entire bill resubmitted.

"We went to the state attorney and he told us we couldn't contract for the study the way the bill was worded. He said it would not allow us to expend the money previously allotted," Cross said.

THE APPARENT ambiguity was between bidding for an "architect" and a "consultant." The bill used the word "architect" and, under the revised bidding laws, was inaccurate.

"We want to find someone knowledgeable in the field of restoration of historic buildings," he said. This person might be an architect, Cross said, but he would be serving the project in the capacity of a consultant.

Of the original bill, Cross said, "The intent was there."

The revised bill is now in the state Senate subcommittee, and Winter said he feels they will report to the committee that either a maximum $10,000 be appropriated for a feasibility study or nothing will be appropriated. If this happens, the committee would wait for the University to come up with some "affirmative recommendation," Winter said.

The October 1978 issue of "Dimensions," devoted to the subject of Nichols, listed some of the reasons there are problems in settling anything decisive.

Vincent Cool, acting state architect, was chosen to be a member of the committee on feasibility. He named two major reasons for the problem.

FIRST IS THE expensive reconstruction process, should it be decided that Nichols be renovated.

"The walls as they stand will have to be stabilized by an additional structure on the inside," he said. "As they are, they have little ability to meet existing codes."

Another difficulty associated with the cost is the expense in actual reconstruction.

"There is also the difficulty in working around the walls in getting the materials inside.... This is an expensive process," Cool said.

The second disadvantage is in the commitment that must be made to work out the program.

"It was built as a gym and not considered for other functions," Cool said.

Cool predicted that it would be at least three years before something is stucturally done with Nichols.

Paul Young, former vice president for University Facilities, said in "Dimensions" that, accounting for inflation, it would cost close to $4.5 million to completely renovate the gym.

One of the options is to go to the University, alumni and community for donations. But the project has been estimated to cost several million dollars and, Winter said, apparently there is no support for that option.

"I have an idea, but nobody seems to like it," he said. "I think it should be landscaped and preserved. When you think of Missouri University, you think of all those columns down there. That's what the University stands for—those columns."

Tracksters head south after 3-week layoff

Although three weeks have passed since its last meet, the K-State women's track team will open its outdoor season today at the Texas Women's University Invitational in Denton.

Those three weeks have been busy ones for the Wildcats.

"I've been very pleased with the progress of our workouts since Nationals (in which the 'Cats took fourth at Columbia, Mo.)," Coach Barry Anderson said.

The preliminaries at Denton begin today at 9 a.m., and the finals will begin at 11 a.m. Saturday.

Other teams at the meet will be UCLA, Minnesota, Texas-Arlington and Texas A&M.

"It's hard to find an easy collegiate meet anymore, and this one won't be one of them," Anderson said. "The competition is very good, which is what we want for the squad.

"This will be a very difficult meet to win. Basically, we need to take a look at what we have now in comparison with the indoor season," Anderson said.

The sprints are expected to be the highlight of the meet, and K-State has three strong sprint relay teams (440, 880 and mile).

Renee Urish, first-place finisher in the 3,000-meter last year, is expected to place well in the 1500-meter and 3,000-meter this weekend.

IAC changes policy of football ticket sales

When students buy season football tickets for next year, that's all they will have to buy to be assured of a seat.

The Intercollegiate Athletic Council (IAC) voted do away with the K-block section, making all student season seats reserved, Veryl Switzer, IAC chairman said.

In the past, students were required to purchase a K-block in addition to a season general admission ticket to reserve a seat in the student section.

During the game against the University of Kansas last season, problems arose between students and reserve ticket holders. Seats which were generally open to students without K-blocks were sold as reserve for the sellout game.

"We had quite a major problem at the KU game. We wanted to avoid this in the future," Switzer said.

TICKETS WILL go on sale April 9 in the ticket office in Ahearn Field House. Student season tickets will cost $20 for five home games.

General admission tickets for $5.50 will be available for home games not sold out. Switzer said he doesn't know if general admission tickets will be available for the Oklahoma and Nebraska games.

Toronto's comeback too much for Royals

FORT MEYERS, Fla. (AP)—Dave McKay singled home two runs in the fifth inning Thursday to lift the Toronto Blue Jays to a 5-3 victory over the Kansas City Royals in an exhibition game.

Toronto took a 2-0 lead in the second after Otto Velez walked, moved to third on Roy Howell's single and scored on Bob Davis' ground out. Howell scored on a single by Rick Bosetti.

The Royals got the runs back in the fourth on singles by Darrell Porter, Steve Braun and Frank White and a double by Al Cowens.

Toronto came back with three runs in the fifth, and McKay came through with the game-winning hit.

Pro basketball is undergoing an identity crisis, or so the papers say (and who can trust them).

Now, I read that pro golf is also having an identity crisis, because these nobodies are winning while the big names wallow in mediocrity. Face it, when Fuzzy Zoeller beats the daylights out of Jack Nicklaus every week, people begin to wonder.

Golf is a funny sport. What can Nicklaus do to break out of his slump? Football players can try harder or work harder. It's not cool for a golfer to run around the links and sweat himself into a coma, even if it would help.

Very few golf coaches work their players into a frenzy and release them onto the course with a rousing "win one for the G(r)ipper!!!"

That would be an interesting development. Golfers should get into the animal mentality of the less gentlemanly sports.

I want to see Kermit Zarley charge onto the course, yelling at the top of his lungs, and swing at the ball like he wants to knock it to China.

IF A GOLFER had an important, $100,000 putt, he could jump up and down with his caddy, yelling, "Go-Go-Go-Go-Go!!!" Then he'd charge out and putt the stupid ball off the green. I guess that wouldn't work.

On the other side of things, boxing is thought of as a rough, animalistic sport by some people. (Roping off an area so two people can beat each other up is animalistic? Obvious Communist propaganda).

However, boxers like Duane Bobick and Ken Norton are doing their best to apply the golf mentality to their sport.

Bobick has twice been knocked out in the first round recently, and Norton was knocked out by Ernie Shavers in the first round of their fight last week.

Norton and Bobick have instilled a refined flavor to their technique. They simply walk out, touch gloves with their opponent and say politely, "ready to give it a go, ol' chap?" and the fight commences.

NORTON and Bobick's problem is caused by the low class boxers who haven't become gentlemen yet. These guys snort, wheeze, slobber, curse and then knock their opponents heads off for about $1.47 million an ear.

Of course, the mixture of boxing and golf mentalities could lead to some disturbing trends. It's very difficult to punch a golf ball around the Pebble Beach course.

And, the names would be all goofed up. Sugar Ray Trevino and Muhammed Snead just don't make it. How about Chi Chi Ali?

A more distressing development would be the use of golf clubs in the boxing ring. It's just murder on a three-wood to have it wrapped around someone's head, not to mention replacing head divets.

And, some of the more violent boxers would probably hit their opponents with a five-iron—mash them with a mashie, as it were.

Judges won't order umps back to work

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—With the start of the major league baseball season just a week away, a federal judge Tuesday refused to order the game's umpires back to work, saying he lacked the authority.

"There is no question in my mind they are entitled to bargain as individuals," ruled U.S. District Court Judge Joseph McGlynn, who has been trying to untangle a legal rhubarb between the umps and baseball which began last summer.

"I have no authority to order them back to work," he said. "They are no longer employees of baseball because they have not signed their contracts."

The judge had been asked by both the American and National leagues to find the 51 umpires in violation of a preliminary injunction issued last Sept. 25 preventing a work stoppage pending resolution of the dispute.

The umpires staged a one-day strike last Aug. 25, and they have not reported to spring training this season.

First practice draws 115 prospects

Spring football practice kicked off yesterday with 115 prospects reporting. The players worked for a little more than two hours in full pads, doing mainly drills with minimal or no contact.

"It's a good day to practice," Coach Jim Dickey said of the weather. "But it's a little windier than we'd like. It's definitely not a good offensive day."

Dickey said the spring's first practice was not crucial by any means. It was a day of adjustment for players and coaches.

"We're just trying out our equipment, looking at different players and getting used to things in general," he said.

Many new faces showed among the first day's prospects, including eight juco transfers, sophomore sprinter Ardes Gardner (9.2 in 100-yard dash and former basketball player Steve Soldner.

The team was split during the workout, with receivers, defensive backs and quarterbacks practicing on the synthetic turf at KSU Stadium while offensive and defensive linemen, linebackers and running backs worked out on the grass field south of the complex.

Soccer Club opens season with Iowa State, Kansas

The Budweiser K-State Soccer Club opens its spring season this weekend with an optimistic coach and a lot of traveling.

K-State will play Iowa State in Ames Saturday at noon, then come back to play the University of Kansas at 2 p.m. Sunday in KSU Stadium.

"It looks like we'll have a pretty good team," player-coach Ken Butler said. "We've got just about everybody coming back and some new people who look good."

One of the key people is right insideman Duane Schaad, the team's leading scorer "the last few years" Butler said.

Butler also said he'll be "counting heavily on" right wingman Kurt Krusen, forward Tom Thomas, left inside Chip Crawford, freshman halfback John Caston and goalie Clay Ross.

Butler is confident about Saturday's game with Iowa State.

"We expect to win that one for sure," he said.

However, the outcome of the KU game is less certain.

"I don't know much about KU," he said. "They're pretty organized, and from the way the coach talks, they should be pretty good. It'll be a good game."

"We always have a real good game with KU," fullback Art Chartrand said. "It's always full of excitement."

The KU game is the only scheduled home game for the K-State Soccer Club. Most of the other games are out-of-town tournaments, Chartrand said.

Next weekend, the club will play in a tourney in Lawrence which will include Rockhurst and Benedictine, which are "nationally-known" teams, according to Chartrand. KU will also play in the tournament.

No. 1 prep player signs with Kentucky

LEBANON, Pa. (AP)—Sam Bowie, the nation's most recruited high school basketball player and the NCAA's choice as the outstanding schoolboy player this season, has decided to attend the University of Kentucky.

Chick Hess, Lebanon High coach, said Wednesday the 7-foot-1 Bowie had picked Coach Joe Hall's Wildcats from among more than 400 colleges and universities that attempted to recruit him. The University of Kansas was reportedly among the final three or four schools Bowie considered.

Hess said Bowie would sign a letter of intent with the Southeastern Conference school on April 11, the national signing date.

What wears 4 white stockings and eats a bale of hay a day?

By CHRIS MCKEE
Collegian Reporter

The word "horsepower" takes on a totally new meaning when viewers come face to knee with the Clydesdales.

"Oohs" and "aahs" poured from the crowd as the van's doors were opened and people got a glimpse of the massive equines.

Parents and grandparents clung to their children who tried to rush and pet the beasts.

The gentle animals stood patiently while being groomed and harnessed as curious onlookers milled around.

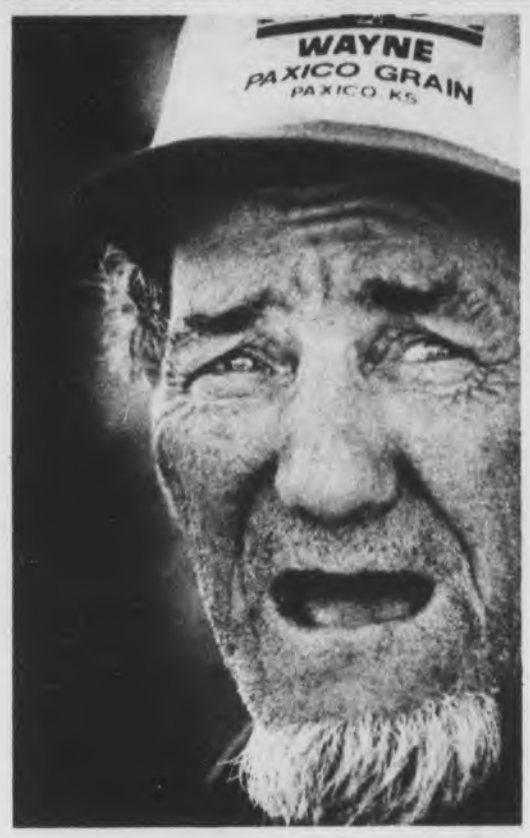
The horses' patience seemed equal to their size.

Averaging 2,300 pounds and standing between 17 and 19 hands at the shoulder (a hand is four inches), each giant consumes 15 pounds of crimped oats and a bale of hay per day, according to a company spokesman.

The clacking of 32 4¾-pound shoes, used to shoe each of the Clydesdale's massive hooves, will herald their arrival as the team and an Anheuser-Busch wagon thunder through campus Saturday.

The horses will be on display from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Veterinary Medicine Complex Saturday to give crowds a closer look at the mammoth draft horses.

THE CLYDESDALE herd of Anheuser-Busch, located in St. Louis county, is the largest in the world, according to a company spokesman. It is operated to preserve and protect the breed which originated in Scotland to be used as work horses.



To qualify for the Clydesdale team, the horse must be bay in color and have four white leg stockings and a white face.

A spokesman said training begins at age 2, if the horse qualifies.

At age 3, a Clydesdale is old enough to join the hitch team.

Traveling with the horses on their annual 40,000-mile appearance circuit are a driver, who puts the team through their turning, stopping and backing exhibition, an assistant driver and four chauffeur grooms who care for the horses.

Each horse at birth is worth between $600 and $1,000, and once trained for the eight-horse team, is worth almost $30,000, a company spokesman said.

Sheriff hopes illegal aliens learn their lessons, leave

ROCK PORT, Mo. (AP)—Atchison County Sheriff Jack Millsaps said Thursday he hoped the capture of nine illegal aliens near Rock Port would prompt other illegal aliens in the area to leave.

Millsaps said he believed some 20 other illegal aliens still were employed in the northwest Missouri community.

Agents of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service apprehended three of the aliens late Wednesday at the MBPXL Corp., Inc. meat packing plant. The others, who also worked at the plant, were caught when authorities conducted vehicle registration checks on area roads.

Richard Henshaw, spokesman for the immigration service in Kansas City, said five of the aliens have agreed to be sent back to Mexico voluntarily to avoid formal deportation proceedings.

K-State puts out the welcome mat

Business

Business games and computer shows will among the activities sponsored by the College of Business Administration during the all-University "Rendezvous with KSU" Open House beginning at 10 a.m. Saturday.

Included in the activities will be the election of two ambassadors, a first for the college. The representatives will be chosen at 10 a.m. Saturday in the Calvin Hall reading room.

"It will be advantageous to have people represent the college of business," said Duane Webber, sophomore in accounting and coordinator for the college's open house. "They will serve much like the K-State ambassadors."

The ambassadors' responsibilities will include teacher selection and the representing the college at various activities, he said.

Other plans for the open house include displays on opportunities in business and will be presented today in Calvin's reading

Arts and Sciences

Merits of "A Liberal Education" will be discussed as part of the activities to be presented by the College of Arts and Sciences at the all-University "Rendezvous with KSU" Open House.

A one-act play and a film also will be presented at the open house from 9:30 a.m. to 4:10 p.m., Saturday in the K-State Union.

The videotape, produced by Lois Korbe, senior in radio-TV, and the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications, gives an overview of the college. The 10-minute film will be shown throughout the day.

The one-act play, "Typist," will be presented by the speech department at 11 a.m. in the Purple Masque Theatre.

Presentations will be made by all arts and sciences departments by either song, dance or demonstration.

According to Lynn Graham, senior in pre-vet, the purpose of the open house is to give a favorable image of and introduce high school students to the college.

Engineering

Can you throw an egg on a cement floor without breaking it? Students competing in the chicken egg launcher-lander contest will be trying to do just that.

The contest, which is part of the all-University "Rendezvous with KSU" Open House, will begin today at 10 a.m. in Seaton 163.

The purpose of the contest is to acquaint high school students with engineering problem-solving techniques and to introduce them to the engineering field, Ray Hightower, assistant professor in nuclear engineering, said.

According to Hightower, 40 Kansas high school students will participate in the annual engineering contest.

Participating students will design, construct and operate a launching machine and an egg carrying vehicle which must safely throw and land a chicken egg on a specific target, Hightower said.

The launcher, which must fit into a 2 foot by 3 foot launching area, must be mechanically powered, he said.

The egg container must leave at least one-half of the egg surface visible. The eggs may not be packed in tissue, gels or any other packing material.

According to Hightower, the egg launchers will be set up 30 feet from a bullseye target.

Prizes will be awarded to the top five students. The first place winner will receive $100 and a plaque. Second and third place winners also will receive plaques and $50 and $25 respectively.

Home Economics

Clothes reflecting the social, political and religious attitudes of the 19th century will be shown as part of all-University "Rendezvous with KSU" Open House.

The fashion show, to be presented at 9:30 and 11:30 Saturday morning in Justin 251, will consist of a 30-piece collection of women's and children's clothing from the 1800s and 1920s.

The show will illustrate the cycles of clothing through the years, according to Margaret Ordonez, assistant professor in interior design and fashion show coordinator.

Clothing of the early 1800s was pencil-slim and gradually became fuller. The bustle came into style in the 1850s and, today the fashions are reverting back to the slim line, Ordonez said.

The collection, compiled by the Textile Conservation group, contains almost 1,000 articles and represents 70 years of collecting.

Clothing used in the fashion show will not be worn; instead it will be carried through the audience on padded hangers and displayed on dress forms.

"The fashions will not be worn because of all the strain on the old fabrics," Ordonez said. "Perspiration and soil that would get on the fabrics would be very detrimental to them," she said.

ACCORDING TO Ordonez, some of the fashions from the 1800s are unusual. An 1800s maternity dress reflects that most women of the period apparently didn't have a social life during pregnancy.

Another old outfit has a bustle made from whalebones.

"For many centuries, children have been little adults," Ordonez said. "Several of our fashions from the 1850s are for an adult and little girl, both made from the same design," she said.

According to Ordonez, most of the clothes used during the 1800s were remade from other dresses. When one outfit went out of style, the material was used to make another outfit. A green plaid wedding dress from 1860 will be used in the show as an example of this construction method.

"Our show is to reflect the liberalization of women in 100 years," Ordonez said. "In the 1800s women's clothes hindered them as far as freedom of movement was concerned.

"The fashions of the '20s show that women had not only received the right to vote, but their clothes also became shorter and freer," she said.

Khomeini views 'no' votes as act of treason

TEHRAN, Iran (AP)—Iranians vote today and Saturday on whether to transform their troubled land into an "Islamic republic," a vaguely defined idea that comforts some with its promise of a return to traditional values and worries others with its uncertainties.

Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, the 78-year-old holy man whose Islamic revolution toppled Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's regime last month, says all Moslems must vote "Yes" in the nationwide referendum—that to do otherwise is treasonous to the principles of Islam.

But ethnic and religious minority groups and leftists, fearing domination by Khomeini's conservative Shiite Moslem sect, have called for a boycott of the voting. Their spokesmen say the referendum "jams an Islamic republic" down their throats.

Armed members of one of the dissident ethnic groups, the Turkomans, rebelled in northeast Iran this week, and government negotiators Thursday were struggling to end the bloody fighting. Officials said government troops had moved into the city of Gonbad-e-Qabous, focus of the rebellion.

REBELLIOUS Kurdish tribesmen of western Iran, like the Turkomans seeking greater autonomy from Tehran, battled government forces for several days before a truce took effect last week.

Religious leaders expect an easy victory. They say, in fact, that anything less than 80 percent approval would be a disappointment to Khomeini. There has been no visible campaign to vote against an Islamic republic.

All Iranians above the age of 16 are eligible to vote—a total of some 18.7 million—and government officials say they expect about 12 million to do so.

Deputy Prime Minister Abbas Amir Entezam said Thursday a simple majority vote will be required to establish an Islamic republic. If a majority is not attained, he said, another alternative will be offered to the public in a later referendum.

If the proposition is approved, a draft constitution for the country will be released to the public, he said. A constituent assembly would then be elected and meet within 30 to 50 days to approve the final draft.

Details of the draft constitution have not been fully disclosed, but government officials have said it provides for a single-chamber Parliament, a president as chief executive and equal rights for minorities and women.

Open House...

Architecture and Pre-Design

What do solar energy and stained glass have in common?

Both are exhibitions to be given during "Rendezvous at KSU" Open House at the College of Architecture and Design.

Exhibitions will be given in the afternoons today and Saturday in Seaton Court, Allen Chapman, assistant professor of pre-design, said.

"Each department will have a separate display so that the public will know what each does," Chapman said.

A special exhibition on the utilization and integration of solar energy also will be presented both days, he said.

Another feature will be an exhibition on the environment's preservation. The use of computers in dealing with environmental design problems also will be demonstrated, Chapman said.

One display features the study of wind environment as it relates to mobile homes, and the best way to secure these homes to the ground.

"There is concern and controversy over the security of mobile homes and it is to study the situation and know what velocity won't blow off a mobile home," Chapman said.

The Department of Regional and Community Planning will simulate a zoning meeting Saturday afternoon in Seaton 109 to aid audience understanding of issues involved in zoning, he said.

Architecture and design students will use Seaton 112D to demonstrate how they work in a typical studio. Chapman said there also will be a furniture show.

Another event, design week, is an exercise in which a problem in design will be solved in a short time.

"Teams of architects handed the problem on Thursday will return solutions to the problem on Saturday evening," he said.

Education

K-State visitors will have an opportunity to discover biofeedback Saturday as part of the College of Education's "Rendezvous with KSU" Open House.

Biofeedback demonstrations and displays on elementary education, special education, secondary education and other programs will be presented from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. in the K, S and U rooms of the Union.

"There is a very strong interest in the biofeedback area at the present time," Mary Harris, assistant professor in curriculum and instruction, said. "We want them (the visitors) to be able to try biofeedback for themselves."

Other activities include presentations by Tom Parish, associate professor in administration and foundations, and Jim Akin, associate director of Career Planning and Placement Center.

Parish, 1978 "Teacher of the Year," will speak on "What it's like to be a teacher." Akins will discuss job placement and opportunities for teachers.

Although the open house is aimed towards prospective students, K-State freshmen and sophomores are encouraged to attend, Harris said.

K-State Mania (kā′stāt mā′nē ə) an inordinately intense enthusiasm;
craze of Kansas State University.

In our endeavors to receive a college education, we can easily lose sight to what K-State is. We fail to take time to learn about the University—its existence, its atypical features and its people.

With the commencement of K-State's All-University Open House, we offer you the opportunity to read 'behind the scene' highlights of K-State: where it has come from, where it is now and where it is going.

As brain replaces brawn and knowledge replaces skill, people will enjoy many benefits in a society which will be dominated by a higher level of technology. These benefits include high income, high standards of living, better medical facilites and higher social interaction.

Such benefits cannot be achieved by individuals of groups without the sound education that begins at a college. This is why college education is vital and inevitable in any developing nation looking forward to both human and technological development.

It is becoming clear that in most developing nations like my own country, Nigeria, people cherish college education. The time has come for those without college education to change or to risk a betrayal of their early accomplishments. There is less salary for the fewer positions available to them. In fact, at present in Nigeria, there is an academic race. To use American slang, it is to 'do or die'.

College education helps bridge the gap between school and the world of work by blending meaningful job experiences with related educational courses. College graduates will have lower unemployment rates because they will have developed marketable skills and knowledge.

In addition, modern technologies place greater educational demands upon workers than have ever before been required, in order for them to have a solid foundation in the skill areas.

Because many developing countries cannot provide for all their educational needs within their countries, it is inevitable that education be provided somewhere else. The choice of selecting a place of study depends partially on an individual, but primarily on the government.

As for Nigeria, the United States receives overwhelming support from the government, private organizations and individuals

Many factors determine the choice. One is the economic ties and diplomatic relationship between the two nations. Another is the good system and high standard of education in the United States. It is estimated that over 25,000 Nigerian students are in the United States today. The number is expected to continue to rise.

Unlike our colonial system of education where a college student concentrates on one subject, taking a few subjects in necessary related topics, the American system requires and encourages college students to get as broad an education as possible while studying for their first degree. With this system, students are exposed to a wider academic horizon for good self development.

The U.S. Agency of International Development, Peace Corps and student exchange programs (introduced into Nigeria about two decades ago) marked the beginning of our country's interest in the American system of education. Today, despite the fact that there are 13 universities in Nigeria, both government and individuals are eager to send students to the United States. Nigerians believe the United States is blessed with colleges and universities offering hundreds of courses from general humanities to highly specialized scientific pursuits with adequate facilites and qualified human resources.

As a foreign student, I have the opportunity to gain knowledge of a subject not available in Nigeria, which will better equip me in my future career. In addition, I have the obvious benefits of getting to know the customs and people of a another country. Of course, all foreign students have this advantage.

However, some problems confront foreign students in any United States college, especially when they first arrive. The first problem is how to adjust to both social and climatic factors.

Other problems and probably the two most important, are the language and academic problems. The foreign student may not be understood by his American student counterparts because of the way he speaks. Likewise, he may not be able to understand them. As a result, the foreign student becomes embarrassed when people express that they cannot understand what he is trying to say.

This causes some foreign students to hesitate in expressing themselves. This hesitation extends itself to the classroom. They do not ask the teacher questions because they think the teacher will not understand them either. After some time the situation comes under control.

Once they have adjusted, some students may wish to stay on due to factors such as easy life, equal rights and job opportunities with better pay. This is, however, not a welcome idea to others because many are home-conscious. In addition, those sponsored by various governments must go back to serve their govern ments.

As for me, Rome was not built in a day. Hence I must go home after graduation, to contribute my part in the development of the nation. There is no place like home. It is necessary to go and build our home countries with knowledge and experience gained here.

There is no doubt: education in the United States is worth receiving, no one should forget the financial aspect. It is estimated that the money used to train me here is enough to train seven students in a college at home.

Therefore, it is more beneficial for students to come to the United States for their post-graduate training unless they are undergraduate students in specialized courses. Others should try to do their bachelor degrees in their home countries.

It is nice to come to the United States and it is also a blessing to be trained at K-State. In fact, I have learned to appreciate the American system of education and its economic, social and technological benefits.

What will the student remember about K-State after he graduates?

Flowing trails of ivy that cling to limestone buildings? Hot, intolerable days spent in Seaton Hall? Or the largest voter turnout in K-State's history to pass a referendum for a new fieldhouse?

These memories hold significance for today's students, but what about the student a century ago? What would he remember about K-State?

Possibly his strongest and fondest memories would be of Anderson Hall, the main college building, where he spent much of his time each day. He might faintly recollect Farm Machinery Hall, the first building on the campus, or the stone fence surrounding the tract. Or he might remember the College Building when K-State was known as Bluemont Central College.

With the exception of Anderson Hall, these other architectural features have lost their significance in K-State's history.

Farm Machinery Hall was demolished in 1963, replaced by Cardwell Hall. The rugged stone fence still exists, standing obscurely along Manhattan and Anderson Avenues and north of Waters Hall. The Bluemont Central College building also remains, lost among the bull barns along Claflin Ave.

K-State owes its original location to the pioneers of Manhattan. In 1857 an association was established to build a college in or near Manhattan to be called "Bluemont Central College." The charter was granted on February 9, 1858, and a site of 100 acres was selected which was about one mile west of town at that time. Today the bull barns occupy the spot where Bluemont Central College stood.

Construction of the first College building took place in 1859. It was a large three-story building with the name "Bluemont College" cut in a stone arch over the window in a gable.

In 1861 an effort was made to get the legislature to locate the state university in Manhattan. On February 28, 1861, the trustees of Bluemont Central College passed a resolution "that we donate to the State of Kansas our College building, library and apparatus, together with 120 acres, more or less, of land continguous, as a college site, on condition that the legislature locates here permanently the State University."

The bill met considerable opposition but was passed. However, Gov. Charles Robinson vetoed it.

Congress passed the Morrill (Agricultural College) Act on July 2, 1863. This created another opportunity for Manhattan to secure a state institution.

The legislature accepted "100 acres of land with a plain three-story stone building containing a chapel, library and some illustrative apparatus," according to "History of the Kansas State College of Agriculture and Applied Science," writted by Julius T. Willard, K-State historian.

The act was approved February 16, 1863, and became effective February 19. Kansas State Agricultural College became the nation's first land-grant institution.

During the first 10 years, the college grew slowly. Up to 1873 only 14 students had graduated, and the number of students in any one term never reached 125.

It became apparent to the Board of Regents that the dry and stony piece of upland upon which the college building stood was unsuited for conducting agricultural and horticultural experiments.

In July, 1871, the township of Manhattan voted bonds in the amount of $12,000 for the purchase of a college farm near the town, which eventually became the present site of K-State.

A solid stone fence was built around the tract, with an opening for the main entrance to the College grounds. On this farm, as the campus was referred to then, one wing of an ambitiously planned barn to house cattle was constructed.

The barn was never completed and the finished west wing served its purpose for only a short time. In its incomplete state it lacked greatly in serviceability, but was used as the barn until 1875, when it was remodeled and became the chief college building.

After the erection of the north wing of Anderson Hall, the barn served as a classroom building and later a drill hall and museum, known as the Armory. The name eventually changed to Farm Machinery Hall.

In 1878 the north wing cornerstone of the main college hall (Anderson) was laid and part of the building completed in February 1879. In 1882 the central part of Anderson Hall was finished, in 1884 its south wing and in 1887 its chapel addition.

The 1906 Banner yearbook described the hall as "a long, two-story building, the center of activity during the college day. In it may be found the executive offices, the post office, the old chapel and Janitor Lewis, when he is not elsewhere.

"Its front is covered with trailing ivy vines which have at last reached to the eaves of the high tower."

Anderson Hall has been the university's main attraction since 1878, and maintains many of its Victorian qualities today. One feature of Anderson hall—today, as well as in the past— was its chimneys, which have been cased-in and no longer in use. Other distinctive facets of the building were a balcony, porches and the straight, structural steeple. The balcony no longer exists, and the porches were removed to make way for office expansion on the front of Anderson Hall.

James C. Cary, in his book "Kansas State University—The Quest for Identity" said Anderson Hall "commanded the respect of faculty and student males, who removed their hats while walking through and passing in front of the old portraits of Presidents Denison, Anderson and others."

The campus grounds have changed considerably over more than a century, from a barn on a small plot of land to 93 buildings expanding 315 acres today.

The Bannner describes the 1906 campus, with fewer than 20 buildings: "From the Main entrance to the college grounds one is struck with the artistic arrangement of the same and the imposing prominence and grandeur of the buildings which top the hill. Few colleges in the State can boast such a campus as is ours. Each year with its increasing wealth of leaf and foliage is serving to make the grounds more beautiful."

The early campus was landscaped in a crescent shape, which has since lost its form through the construction of new buildings.

But one can visualize what the campus must have looked like at the turn of the century.

"All living things grow, and growth produces change," the 1905 Bell Clapper yearbook states.

"For abundant evidence to substantiate this...one needs only to take a stroll over the campus. The 'crescent' has perceptibly lengthened.

"To the extreme left, as one comes up the main driveway, stands the Auditorium whose virgin walls have resounded again and again...and have sheltered for the first time a graduating class. The 'crescent tip to the right is, as yet, but a patch of blue in horizon.'"

...Building a future for K-State

Setting: March 1999, K-State Campus.

Scene One: Graduate of 1979 returns to K-State to show his son, a prospective K-State student, where he spent his class time as a business student at K-State — Calvin Hall. The two walk south, to the side of the Union on Mid-Campus Drive. Cars, which at one time drove down this street have been banned throughout campus for pedestrian safety. They reach an open field — Calvin Hall is not there.

Graduate: (stunned by what he doesn't see stops a passing student) "No! It couldn't be. It seems like yesterday when I was sitting in Auditing in Room 209."

Student: "What rock have you been hiding under? Calvin was leveled last year after being condemned and construction for the new business building will begin as soon as the weather warms up."

Graduate: (looking at Nichols) "I see it's still here."

When you as students return to K-State as alumni, your memories of the campus outlay will be archaic and outmoded. That building you have spent and are spending hours in — slaving over projects, snoozing during lectures and taking tests after all-night study vigils might not be there or could house another college upon your return to the University. Or, a new building could sprout up in that open field you used to go to — just be be alone.

K-State is constantly changing and growing to meet the needs of its students. This is exemplified by the present construction of the general classroom and office building.

Also under construction is the recreation complex, located west of the Washburn Complex tennis courts. These buildings didn't germinate overnight. Their existence as well as other changes on campus are a long and tedious process.

K-State's initial physical developmental decisions rest upon the University's Long-Range Planning Committee (planning committee). The planning committee establishes physical development guidelines for campus, reviews building sites and sets priorities among buildings and campus development projects.

A 5- to 10-year building program, a total projected need, is formed setting priorities for campus. The program, reviewed and evaluated annually by the committee, changes from year to year because of changes in needs at the University and the fluctuation of student enrollment.

"We may feel that certain things are viable in the needs of buildings and other changes, but maybe there is a legislature or a special interest group on campus that has a personal interest and push it," Gene Cross, Vice President of University Development, said. "Then we develop what we feel are the things we want to ask for."

Recently, several groups have worked to start renovation of Nichols Gymnasium which burned down in 1968. Nichols reconstruction is still under consideration in a feasibility plan to see if renovation would be advantageous.

The bureaucracy continues as the planning committee submits and presents to the state legislature a program stating the type of building useage and office and classroom space needed along with funding requests.

If the plan is approved, the University receives planning money. An architect is selected to put thoughts into pictures — design plans for the building.

According to Cross, capital requests are into the legislature for Engineering Phase II as well as the projects requiring planning and designing next year.

Engineering Phase II, the second of the three-phase engineering project is in the design phase — an architect has recently been chosen for designing the building.

Not quite as far along in the program process is the Plant Science Phase I project which will house the Agronomy Department. Bid opening took place March 8 for the building to be located and connect south of the Old Dairy Barn on Denison.

When planning committee makes a recommendation to the legislature it is set as priority for that year.

"When we ask for funding, that is our priority for that year. We have a long-range 10-year program of what we anticipate our needs will be for that 10-year period and each year we firm it in — one year ahead of time," Cross said.

Cross said that if K-State is asking the legislature for funding for a two-year program, the legislature looks at it in comparison to other requests across the state. They shuffle K-State's request among the others in the state, setting their priorities.

Cross also said that it could take two or three years before K-State receives funding — depending on how the legislature appropriates the funds.

"We have a plan but it's not a plan for the future. It has to be able to move with all the elements," he said.

"Check your bloomers with your coat, Ma'am?"

"Get that lizard out of the mashed potatoes!"

"All the toilet paper has frozen in the trees—guess we'll have to wait until spring!"

Underwear, small reptiles and toilet paper are basic equipment for jokes played by members of college fraternities and sororities nation-wide and the greek groups at K-State—10 national sororities and 26 national fraternities—fit the accepted pattern.

Greek pranks can be destructive, messy, (see "Animal House) mean and dangerous—the hazing that was part of fraternity pledge training 20 years ago is an example. But greek pranks can also be truly funny, creative and a good reflection of the times for sociologists and historians.

One reflection of the times was the great K-State bloomer war which began before Christmas in 1926. K-State's dean of women, Mary Van Zile, sent letters to all the sororities asking girls not to go out with bare knees. The styles that fall called for very short skirts and stockings rolled below the knee. The Dean said, in a typical letter to Alpha Xi Delta sorority, she was sure none of the girls would "want to be embarrassed by bare knees." So she was asking the girls to wear bloomers which met the tops of the stockings—where ever the tops might be.

Dean Van Zile concentrated on the sororities because the residence hall system at K-State was still on the drawing board and girls who were not in sororities lived in boarding houses or at home. They were not under her direct jurisdiction.

The girls complied. Housemothers agreed to check appearances before the girls went to parties. Dean Van Zile, presumably, relaxed and enjoyed the holidays.

However in January, word got back to her that the coat check rooms at all the fraternities' Christmas parties and dances had been full of coed coats with bloomers hanging out of the pockets. Bloomers had decorated the chairs, tables, Christmas trees, light posts, bannisters and door knobs at fraternity houses.

Dean Van Zile acted quickly. She cancelled privileges, assigned a representative to all college-sanctioned parties and she and Kansas State Agricultural College made most of the big newspapers in the country. The Chicago Herald Examiner ran a front page story telling about the struggle Manhattan merchants were having to keep bloomers in stock. The Kansas City papers featured front page pictures of girls with bare knees or with bloomers hanging below the hems of their skirts.

Many other pranks also grew out of efforts to circumvent University rules. From the earliest days, girls had to observe "hours" and be in at a certain time. In the 1920s, girls had to be in by 8 p.m. on weeknights, 10:30 on Sunday, and an hour after any University sponsored dance or party was over on Friday and Saturday, according to Mary Frances White, a Kappa Kappa Gamma alumna who retired recently from the K-State faculty. In the 1950s, hours were 10 p.m. on weeknights, midnight on Friday, 1 a.m. on Saturday and 11 p.m. on Sunday night. Mary-Ethel Ball, then dean of women at Colorado University, was quoted in a 1952 article in that school's newspaper as saying college and university authorities believed if the girls were locked up by a certain time, it was all right for the boys to stay out as long as they wanted.

Ways to avoid hours ranged from the relatively simple expedient of having one's roommate open the back door to the more creative one of taking pajamas or nightgown and robe along when leaving for the evening. When the housemother opened the door at 7 a.m. she would find several of her charges sitting on the fire escape or back steps in nightclothes, apologizing for having gotten up so early and going outside—"but we hate to miss the sunrise!"

Now, when there aren't many rules to avoid, this sort of joke has been reduced to driving small cars across footbridges. One group, told to be available for Royal Purple yearbook casual shots at the sorority house, greeted the photographer in high top tennis shoes and bathing suits.

Why are the greek students usually the ones thought of when college practical jokes are the subject? Don't other students have a good time and play tricks on each other, too?

"Sure they do, but greeks are very visible and easily identifiable," said Jerry Lilly, assistant to the vice-president for student affairs and K-State's adviser to fraternities. "The greek houses are like a family with ongoing traditions and interested alumni," he said.

"Also at K-State fraternities and sororities are integrated into the community—they're not off by themselves on a greek row but are in Manhattan neighborhoods. People in town know them as neighbors, unlike the students who live in residence halls."

When greek groups harass each other, toilet paper is one of the most valuable and visible tools, outranking other necessities such as Saran Wrap (properly placed between toilet bowl and toilet seat can be an invisible barrier); spray paint (used to decorate everything from coed jeans to whole hillsides); and Super Glue (used, for example, by Sigma Phi Epsilon members to glue the track shoes of a brother, who is a compulsive runner, to the ceiling of his room.)

TP-ing seemed to begin in the late '50s and has evolved into an art, with trees and buildings festooned with toilet paper in places that look impossible to reach. Colored toilet paper can be used for dramatic effect or all-white for a pristine look. Cleaning it up is never easy—throwing the rolls to get it in place is nothing compared to removing each shred—but it is terrible after a rain or a freeze.

One of the most novel TP-ings occurred a few years ago when the members of Delta Upsilon fraternity, who were entertaining their mothers, took the moms along to TP the trees around the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority where a Moms' Weekend was also in progress. Later the Thetas, minus moms, added insult to injury when some of the girls unobtrusively removed toilet paper from the bathrooms at the Alpha Gamma Rho (AGR) fraternity house and TP-ed the AGR's trees with their own paper.

Members of Delta Tau Delta fraternity set a new high in exterior decorations last year when they snowed the Chi Omega sorority lawn with millions of tiny computer punches.

'While he was away one weekend, his friends took the car apart...'

Sigma Nu fraternity members take a dim view of people who defile their front lawn, either with paper products or by rolling down Sigma Nu hill in front of the house. Those who are caught horizontally challenging the hill are taken into the house and showered and floured in a painless but sticky imitation of tar and feathers.

Beta Theta Pi fraternity members used to spend a lot of time fighting off attacks on Beta Rock, which was a stone barbecue chimney in the Beta parking lot with the Beta name plate on it. Other fraternity members, decorating the rock with spray paint, had their heads shaved by the Beta brothers. Girls who wanted a piece of the rock were showered or sometimes swirled—a process which involved holding the back of the victim's head in a toilet bowl and flushing it.

It all came to an end last year when the rock was knocked over and crumbled. A new "slab" in the parking lot now holds the name plate and one of the Betas said, "we just call the police now if anyone bothers it. Shaving heads can be dangerous."

Although Beta rock was not portable, other greek treasures are, and for years greeks have been stealing each others' trophies and picture composites, with ransom taking the form of serenades or parties. In the '50s, girls underwear replaced trophies as the things to steal and panty raids were born. Large groups of male students would rush a sorority house, usually just as the housemother was locking the front door for the night, and race to the off-limits bedrooms or sleeping dorms. A feminine undergarment from each room or closet was usually the goal, and the group would leave as fast as it had arrived. Panty raids disappeared, for the most part, in the solemn '60s.

"The '60s were a more serious time due to the Vietnam war," said Jan Ray, Manhattan resident who was a Chi Omega undergraduate from 1966 to 1970. "Also, things were changing so fast we didn't play elaborate pranks. We were too busy keeping up with what was going on. When I was a freshman there was an all-University rule we weren't allowed to wear pants to school unless it was really cold. When I was a senior we could wear anything we wanted.

"We went through three changes of hours," she said. "When I was a freshman, girls' hours were the same everywhere in the University. Then the Univeristy became more liberal about hours in the residence halls but it took the sororites a few semesters to change their hours to agree with the halls. By the time I was a senior, hours had been abandoned altogether."

Jerry Lilly said, "The '60s moved from one crisis to another, as did the '40s. There was an abrasive air on campus in the '60s, although fraternity and sorority membership did not significantly decline at K-State as it did at some other schools." Lilly said he believes the '70s "have a lighter air to living," which, along with the nostalgia craze, is bringing back the atmosphere of the '50s.

The teens at K-State had a light air also as the local groups affiliated with national fraternities and sororities, but "things were much more formal then," said Mrs. E.L. Holton, who helped install Pi Beta Phi sorority at K-State in 1915.

"The girls entertained the boys at dances and teas and, occasionally, someone would stay out too late and be severely censured by having to stay in for the weekend."

Ivy Fuller Olds of Manhattan was initated into Eta Beta Pi, local sorority which became Delta Delta Delta in 1915. "The girls had me in a back bedroom while they planned my initiation. I ran out the back door to the old Palace Drugstore downtown and got something to initiate them," she said. She sprinkled sneezing powder on the active members during initiation, but "the girls let me join anyway."

Jokes on members of their own houses have always been a staple of greek life. Martha Kellstrom, also of Manhattan, was a Kappa Delta at K-State in the '50s and has continued her interest in the greek system. She is currently Kappa Delta national alumnae vice-president.

"I was the pledge trainer one year," she said, "and it was the assignment of the pledge class to leave different things in my bed, usually depending on their majors. I got used to it after awhile but I was always happy when it was the home ec majors' turn rather than the biologists'—they ran to turtle innards and the like." It was at the Kappa Delta house where one of the pledges placed a small live lizard under a covered dish to be served by the housemother, to the accompaniment of screams and great consternation.

Other pledge pranks revolved around sneaks which began in the '30s when the pledges sneaked out to avoid attending a meeting and have a party with another pledge class or crash a local theater. (Crashing involved walking into the theater in such a big group it was impossible to sell or collect tickets, much less remove the offenders.)

By the '50s it wasn't just the pledges who were sneaking. Sneaks sometimes lasted overnight. Certain groups of sorority or fraternity actives (all the sophomores, for example) would walk out of a meeting or dinner, kidnap several of the other active members, and, in the case of the girls, stay out past hours or spend the night at the home of a local girl.

In the '70s sneaks are weekend long affairs with the kidnapees often having to be let in on the secret so they can be prepared to be gone for several days. Those leaving on a sneak often take something with them such as all the house silverware or the mouthpieces off the telephones.

In addition to sneaks, most groups have in-house traditional ways of playing tricks on each other. Anyone annoying his brothers at the Lambda Chi Alpha (Lambda Chi) fraternity house may come home some night to find the Stone Virgin in his bed. She is a 200-pound statue who spends most of her time gazing into the Lambda Chi sleeping dorm. Occasionally she is deposited in a bed by several men. Getting her out takes several men, too, many of whom may not be willing to help when it is the middle of the night and she is resting comfortably in the top bunk of a three-bunk stack.

One of the sororities has a fertility doll who lives in the room of the girl staying out the latest that weekend.

Many fraternities, including Beta Sigma Psi, Delta Chi and Sig Ep celebrate members' birthdays by turning the hose on them in the yard. Clothing for the Sig Ep celebrating depends on the weather, but the Delta Chi's have the birthday boy in the buff, rain or shine.

Probably the epitome of brotherly concern was demonstrated in the '50s in a classic greek prank by members of Alpha Tau Omega fraternity. One of the brothers owned a small, elderly car which he hated to leave parked on the street unprotected. While he was away on a debate trip one weekend, his thoughtful friends took the car apart, carried it to his room piece by piece and reassembled it next to his bed, where he could keep an eye on it.

Greek pranks are as diverse as the people who play them and the times in which they are played. Many years and a lot of technology separate the girl who threw sneezing powder at her sorotiy sister and a boy who helped decorate a sorority house lawn with computer card punches, but there is a commonality of spirit that insures each would have known exactly what the other had in mind.

Believe it or not

Is K-State haunted by its past?

by
Carol Holstead

It was early October. All was still in the K-State Phi Gamma Delta fraternity house. Don Clancy, intent on his studying, stopped momentarily to glance at the clock. 1:30 a.m. Suddenly Don shivered. The temperature in his room had dropped noticeably. Don heard a crunching noise. Someone shuffled through leaves as they walked down the outside stairway. In the fall, the huge elm tree in the backyard dumped its leaves onto the stairwell, making it easy to hear people as they walked.

Don opened the door to his room and looked out into the hall. No one was there, but the sound of crunching leaves persisted. Don went outside and took a close look at the stairs. No. It couldn't be, but it was. Someone, or something, was coming down those stairs, and it was leaving the definite impression of bootprints in the leaves on every step as it approached.

Don ran back into his room, slamming the door.

"It couldn't be a ghost," he thought. "I am only a pledge, and it's probably someone playing a trick on me."

Don crept back to his door and eased it open just enough to take a peek into the hall. He was convinced. The ghost was actually checking each door along the hall by turning the doorknob. Then it was gone.

Duncan is the name of this ghost. Don Clancy, senior in elementary education, first encountered Duncan in 1976. However, he is not the only member of Phi Gamma Delta fraternity who has met the ghost.

Two stories have evolved as to how Duncan came to reside in the Phi Gamma Delta house. Both involve a Theta Xi initiation ceremony, a fraternity which formerly occupied what is now the Phi Gamma Delta house. One story says that during the ceremony the pledges were being paddled, and when it came to Duncan's turn he raised up and was struck in the head with a paddle and killed.

The other story says Duncan died of a heart attack, because he was extremely frightened when he was forced to climb into a coffin during the initiation ceremony.

The first indication there was a ghost in the house occurred when an attempt was made to paint what is now the house's library, according to Rick Lawrence, senior in family and child development.

"When we bought the house, two paddles were still hanging on the wall of what is now the library. One of them had Duncan's name on it. We threw the paddles away, but when we started painting the wall the image of Duncan's paddle kept reappearing," Lawrence said. "We finally had to panel the wall."

Five years ago some members of Phi Gamma Delta held a seance to try to call Duncan back.

"One guy started yelling and screaming, and then the tips of his fingers turned green," Lawrence said. "Supposedly, the spirit of Duncan was inside of him when he was sitting there."

According to Dennis Eagan, sophomore in business administration there was another startling encounter with Duncan. While studying in his basement room, Rod Smith, alumnus of Phi Gamma Delta, heard a noise outside his door. When he opened it Smith saw a "ghastly face staring at him." He slammed the door and never saw the face again.

The Phi Gamma Delta fraternity is not the only place in Manhattan that has reported the presence of ghosts. Members of the Delta Sigma Phi fraternity claim they have a ghost named George Segal living in their house.

According to Scott Cummins, senior in business administration, what is now the Delta Sigma Phi house used to be an annex of St. Mary's Hospital where elderly people were housed.

"The legend is that while the people were being moved from St. Mary's, George Segal rolled down between his bed and the wall. When the attendants checked his room, he was not on the bed, so they assumed he had been moved. Supposedly, George lay there and died," he said.

Cummins has not really seen much evidence of George, aside from lights going on and off and doors slamming on the third floor, where George supposedly died.

It is reported, however, that George is a "Star Trek" fan. Cummins explains:

"There was an ice storm in 1973. The electricity was off all up and down the block, but every day at four in the afternoon the electricity would come back on just in our house, long enough for 'Star Trek.' So we figured George wanted to watch it."

Kappa Sigma fraternity also has a ghost, according to Mike Dahl, senior in finance.

"Years ago, supposedly, one of our pledges hung himself in what is now the file room. Since then people have heard sounds like someone jumping on the roof. One guy actually pulled himself through his window onto the roof as soon as he heard the noise, but no one was there," Dahl said.

Several years ago, one of the members of the fraternity actually saw the ghost, or rather a white haze which he thought was the ghost, at the top of the stairs of the Kappa Sigma house, Dahl said.

"There were four or five guys playing cards in the housemother's room, which is close to the stairs and the front door. They heard a noise upstairs, and since it was a vacation and no one was supposed to be in the house, they ran upstairs to see who it was," Dahl said. §"When they got to the top of the stairs, Tom Vera, Kappa Sigma alumnus, saw a white haze, and he thought it was the ghost."

Another one of the more documented ghosts is in the East Stadium's Purple Masque Theatre.

East Stadium was at one time the campus athletic dormitory. The theater itself was the cafeteria, and the rooms above it on the second floor were the men's quarters. Legend says the ghost is a football player who got hurt, and was carried inside and placed on one of the cafeteria tables where he died. The ghost's name is Nick and is reported to have been a very active spirit between 1964 and 1969.

Dave Laughlin, once a foreman for the theater, is said to have had several encounters with Nick. One of these took place while Laughlin was alone taping sound cues. He was making a tape and when Laughlin replayed it, a voice came over the tape saying "Hi, Dave." Laughlin replayed the tape a second time, but the voice was gone.

Another encounter with Nick supposedly took place during the production "American Yard." The building was closed and locked after rehearsal. However, the next morning a stage hand found the chairs from the set in the hallway, with the theater doors still locked. He put the chairs back in their place. That night at rehearsal after the houselights were dimmed, the actors tried to make their entrance, but the same chairs were mysteriously in the door blocking their way.

Some of the cast members of "From Heaven to Hell," a play done last fall, believe they saw Nick.

Patty Wirtz, sophomore in theater and journalism, said she might have seen Nick while getting rehearsal notes for the play.

"We were getting notes for 'From Heaven to Hell' when I looked up and saw someone staring at us through the slats at the back of the stage. I said 'there is someone watching us through that door,' so another cast member (Mark Pennington, senior in theater) got up to see who it was," Wirtz said. "He looked behind the door and saw a man standing there. Mark asked him what he was doing there, and the man said, "I'm just watching.'

"Mark came back and told us what he said, so we decided to find out what the man was doing in the theater. We grabbed a prop Bible, frying pan and rifle and ran out into the hall, laughing, thinking how we were going to freak this person out. When we got into the hall there was no one there, and we heard no footsteps or doors opening or closing when he tried to get out. It was as though he had disappeared.

Tales about ghosts may seem hard to believe, but these ghost stories are certainly nothing to boo at. Who is to say, anyway, whether ghosts really exist?

Alumni reminisce on highlights over past 6 decades

by Judy Weltsch

Thoughts of college life are timeless. Although the faces changed through the century, students have concentrated their efforts in the same directions—studying, working their way through school...and of course, socializing.

Teens and 20s

'Smoking was a custom banned from campus until mid-century'

"Aggieville was headquarters then as it is now," Orville Burtis, 1916 graduate in Animal Husbandry said. Dancing was "in."

According to Burtis, Johnny Harrison's Dance Hall (where Flanagan's Club is now located) was novel and "the place to go."

Why?

The dance floor had big springs underneath it, and when the floor was full of dancers, their weight caused the dance floor to bounce up and down, he said.

But Aggieville was not the only source of socializing; there were also dances held on campus. The class of 1916 held the first dance on campus in Anderson Hall, which at that time housed a recreation center (located where Admissions and Records is now). Prior to 1916, no dances were allowed on campus.

"It took quite a bit of jockeying of politics to get it on campus," Burtis laughed.

The fun didn't end when the music did.

Mary Francis White, 1928 graduate in English and alumna of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority, said serenading was a popular activity after sorority and fraternity dances.

"We used to get a truck and put a piano in the back and we would go serenading," White said.

It was not uncommon to have two dates in one night—one date to dance and the other to serenade or socialize at the Last Chance Cafe, on Fourth Street after the dance.

White also said literary societies were another form of social activity that began before sororities and fraternties were established on campus.

"Literary societies, there were eight of them, met every Saturday evening, Earl Teagarden, 1920 graduate in Agronomy, said. "We'd have 40 or so in attendance every evening we met."

Literary societies, for the most part, died out in the 30s because of new student interests, White said.

As must as students were part "of the system" they found ways around it.

Smoking was a custom banned from campus until mid-century. No matter. The students merely went to the wall marking the border of campus, hid their cigarettes in the cracks of the wall and then went off-campus (the other side of the wall) to smoke them between classes.

30s, 40s and 50s

'Dime dances with canned music were held in the recreation center in Anderson Hall'

The Depression, World War II and the Korean War were national crises that helped to mold the ideas of students during the 30s, 40s and 50s.

"Keeping body and soul together and keeping in school," concerned Chester Peters, 1947 graduate in Business as well as many other students.

"Many students were here on a shoestring," Larry Wisdom, 1937 graduate in Business Administration said. "Kansas State was more of a Kansas school in those days."

According to Wisdom, students were not nearly as vocal then. They accepted regulations more passively than students today.

"There was more of an attitude of less blatant kinds of behavior," Ben Duerfeldt, 1957 graduate in music education, said. "Back then, we stll felt we needed to apologize."

Duerfeldt said the pursuit of most students was "getting a job and getting started." He added, "the hazards on the horizons were not quite as bad as today."

Also during this time period, the independents on campus began to organize and gain power. Peters said there was "intense rivalry" between the "political parties"—the greeks and independents.

Dime dances with canned music were held in the recreation center in Anderson Hall; the recreation center was the social center for independent students.

Socializing at the Canteen, a snack bar located south of the campus on Anderson, where it "was always so full you couldn't get in the door" and the nationally ranked basketball team are two of K-State students fondest memories of this time.

60s and 70s

'There was a war right here on K-State's campus'

Marred by the Vietnam War, the 60s and 70s brought a new realm of thinking; it was a time of student unrest and a time of change.

During this time, the Administration relaxed its attitudes and policies towards students.

"The Administration, 20 years ago, operated on the idea they were guardian angels to the students while they were at school," Charles Hostetler, 1960 graduate in pre-law and history said. "When I was in school, it had to be below 32 degrees for women to wear pants to class."

"There was a continual conflict, a running feud between President McCain's office and the student body. Now, there is a much more mature approach — a warmer feeling and better communication."

Hostetler also said there was less emphasis on grades when he was in school.

"One could get into graduate school, law school or professional school in the 60s with fairly average grades — a 2.5 or less."

Tom Farmer, 1972 graduate in education said there was a lot of questioning in students' minds.

"It was a turmoil time," Jan Ayers, 1970 graduate in education, said. There was apathy on campus. It was really restless."

Ayres said there were two groups on campus — the "All-Americans who did what they had to do and the protestors."

"I cared. I didn't like seeing people go to Vietnam," she said.

"I look back on it and can't believe it happened, Steve Snodgrass, 1970 graduate in HPER and biology, said. "There was a war right here on K-State's campus."

Buildings were burned — not only at the University but also in town. Manhattan's Country Club burned as well as the Auditorium and Nichols Gymnasium.

"I think maybe it was our generation that brought the movement of independence," Snodgrass said.

"Today's students seem to be more committed to social problems and freer to convention," Duerfeldt said.

Ayers believes there was a societal change, but not towards any cause.

'I wanted to be me after that. Look out for yourself," she said. Ayres added the idea of working as a group, although lost at one time, has come back. Now students want to be associated with a group.

"Today's student is more like 10 years ago — caring, strong ties, looking for the future and serious about a purpose," she said.

Thoughts of K-State are as numerous and varied as the people who have them. While time spent at K-State has been a variety of things to a host of people it has been a time of questioning one's own life, and a place where close friends and memories were made as well as an institition of learning.

Traditions are a tradition at K-State

by Karen Houston

In an atmosphere of diversified goals and attitudes, it is easy to lose contact with the enjoyable aspects of college life. Traditions are what bond students to the past, to their school and to each other.

Though the beginnings of many traditions have faded into the haze surrounding K-State's early social events, other traditions have been formed in recent years in hopes of rekindling school spirit lost in the turmoil of the 1960s.

One of the earlier known traditions, the Shepherd's Crook, has a vague beginning. The crook was originally a spade that the senior class passed down to the junior class. A ribbon with the date of graduation was tied on by each class.

It is not known exactly which year the tradition ended, but it has been revived throughout the years only to die away again. The last time the shepherd's crook was presented to a junior class was in the early 1960s.

Other traditions that have died and been brought back to life are those associated with supporting K-State's athletic teams. Bonfires, pep rallies and the school's mascot, Willie Wildcat, are coming back with apparent student interest.

Homecoming and the K-State-KU rivalry are traditions that have never faded—they've just changed form. Instead of Homecoming queens, there are now Homecoming ambassadors. And, although competition with KU is intense, reports of purple paint pranks and Jayhawk counterattacks are not as prevalent as in the past.

Activities designed to unite groups of students are also traditional ideas. Greek Week and Spring Fling are events held annually for Greek living groups and residence hall dwellers that began over 20 years ago. They were created with "fun in mind" and still include activities such as bed races and other contests to give students a break from the grind of school.

In K-State's tradition of traditions, students have been the continuing force. Because students take time to enjoy their college days, it is unlikely that these customs will fade.

FROM TOP TO BOTTOM: Willie Wildcat, as popular then as now is K-State's mascot. Roughneck Day, 1920—Advocating an Easter vacation, students forced classes cancelled for a day and dressed in costumes. Those not abiding by the rules published in the Collegian were subject to ridicule. Freshman Class, 1921—Designating heir status, freshmen were required to wear caps. Shephard's Crook 1938. Greek Week, 1961—A king and queen were chosen to reign over the annual event. May Day Fete 1925—K-State's annual spring festival.

Nuclear chiefs caught off-guard by lodged bubble

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)—In an industry devoted to stringent safety features and voluminous contingency plans, the dangerous bubble lodged in the roof of the stricken Three Mile River nuclear reactor is one emergency the emergency planners didn't anticipate.

The crisis caught nuclear technicians off guard. They had not anticipated such a bubble, had not designed the reactor to handle it, and had not planned how to deal with it.

"It's a new twist...It is not a standard assumption," conceded Harold Denton, Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) reactor operations chief, in discussing the accident with reporters at Harrisburg, Pa.

"We've not rigorously analyzed the situation previously," Denton said, but added that engineers were working overtime to analyze the situation now.

The bubble was thought to contain hydrogen gas, which can burn or even explode in the presence of sufficient oxygen.

THE CONCENTRATION of oxygen was too low to allow an explosion. But oxygen was trickling into the bubble slowly as the normal radioactivity in the core split molecules of water into hydrogen and oxygen gas.

Denton estimated it might take about 12 days for the mixture to become inflammable, and perhaps twice as long to become explosive.

Even if an explosive concentration were reached, it would take a spark to set it off and there was no ready source of spark inside the core, he said.

But because the bubble cannot be measured directly and its presence and composition can only be inferred from other measurements, the NRC and company are treating the problem with urgency.

An explosion in the reactor vessel could blow the lid off the vessel, releasing radioactivity into the reactor building surrounding the vessel. The reactor building would still be sealed, thus this should not cause any release of radioactivity to the air.

But if the force of the explosion cracked the four-foot thick reactor building walls, the radioactivity could escape. NRC officials have no estimate as to the probability of this happening.

MOREOVER, several methods for removing the bubble contain risks of their own, and the possibility of a melt-down—with a spread of radioactive materials over a wide area—could conceivably be triggered either by removing the bubble, or failing to remove it.

Weighing the possibilities suggested so far, one engineer said: "If there was a clear choice, it wouldn't have taken us this long to figure out which one."

The radioactive fuel of the nuclear reactor is contained in rods suspended inside a thick steel tank about 56 feet tall which should be filled at all times with water, circulating to carry away the heat.

During Wednesday's accident, a chemical reaction between the metal of the rods and the water allowed the bubble to collect in the top of this sealed vessel. It occupies an estimated 621 cubic feet of space despite a pressure in the reactor of almost 1,000 pounds per square inch.

BOB LENGEL, licensing engineer for Metropolitan Edison Co., the plant's operating company, said the bubble might fill roughly the top three feet of the reactor vessel. That would leave the fuel still safely submerged under more than 20 feet of water.

But if the high pressure in the vessel was reduced, the bubble would expand—perhaps enough to expose the tops of the fuel rods and make them overheat.

Housing Council vote to decide fate of small hall food services

By LISA SANDMEYER
Staff Writer

K-State's residence hall system goes on the line Wednesday when Housing Council decides whether the three small residence halls should be allowed to keep their in-hall food services.

The University's Department of Housing has pegged Boyd, Putnam and Van Zile Halls as the sore toe of the residence hall system.

Collegian Analysis

What Housing Council will decide is whether to risk the whole system to save money. Before them are four proposals from a council subcommittee which has been studying the small halls deficit.

The majority (four of seven members) proposes that no change be made. The three other members have proposed three other alternatives:

1) Move all food service from the three halls to Derby Food Center;

2) Feed all small hall residents in Boyd Hall;

3) Cook all food in Derby and serve in small halls.

The three halls in the Mabel Strong Complex have been losing money for several years, according to Housing's fiscal reports. Housing as a whole was in the black just more than $10,000 in fiscal 1978. Small halls spent about $86,000 more than they took in last year.

The only income small halls have is what is paid in by each of the 600 residents—$640 per semester. Other halls have additional income from summer conferences (residents pay the same). Small halls close in the summer because they have no air conditioning.

While the other halls in the system help cover the small halls' deficits, residents of the small halls are helping to pay off the bonds on the newer halls.

A student committee studying Housing budget figures for a nine-year period (1968-1978 with one year missing) found that during that time, small hall residents contributed $763,172 to bond debt retirement and had a total deficit of $556,058. In fiscal 1978, however, small halls lost about $10,000 more than they paid toward bond retirement. At $10,000 per year, it will be 20 years before they're even.

THE STUDENTS have done their homework. Studies done in preparation for the fight with Housing show it is cheaper to house a student in the small halls on a nine-month basis than in Kramer or Derby complexes.

But Housing doesn't buy the proposal that small hall residents are giving their fair share. The small halls have been losing things for nine years.

To cut costs, residents eat weekend meals in Derby and breakfasts in Boyd.

Staff positions have been cut—where there was a director in each of the small halls last year, there are now half-time assistant directors in Van Zile and Putnam, and the Strong Complex coordinator, Pat Magerkurth, doubles as Boyd Hall's director. Several student staff positions have been cut over the years, as well as maintenance positions.

A SURVEY taken by Magerkurth under the direction of the Center for Student Development showed the students in small halls are more satisfied with their living situation than students in other halls.

But if residents of Boyd, Putnam and Van Zile are forced to go across the street to Derby Food Center for every meal, fall, winter and spring, they won't be back to those halls. The halls will become dormitories for freshmen and transfer students who didn't know which halls to request when they applied for housing. When their contracts run out, so will they.

The whole system suffers. K-State's residence hall system is founded by the returning students—hall governing boards and Association of Residence Halls (ARH) officers are elected in the spring from those who intend to return to the system.

Current small hall residents are holding off sending in their housing contracts for next year. If they lose Wednesday, they won't be back. They'll move out of the system entirely.

ARH knows this will happen if small hall food services are lost, and when its two representatives go to Housing Council Wednesday, they will cast two votes for the small halls, for the entire residence hall system, and to keep an alternative living situation available. They will not compromise.

Kassebaum says she favors draft registration of men, women

By LUKE BROWN
Staff Writer

A bill requiring both men and women to register for the draft is favored by Sen. Nancy Kassebaum (R-Kan.), she said Friday at K-State.

On campus for Open House ceremonies, Kassebaum said the proposal is one of several draft bills before Congress. The bill would require compulsory registration, but there would be no draft until the threat of a national emergency.

"I think it would be helpful if we could have the men and women registered so that if we had a national emergency, we would be better prepared," Kassebaum said.

The compulsory registration would cut between five and seven months off the time it would take the United States to prepare to defend itself, she said.

The volunteer military isn't working because the quality and quantity of recruits was declining, she said.

Kassebaum said she was opposed to the drive for a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget.

"While we are all concerned about restoring some fiscal responsibility to our government, we must do it in a responsible manner," she said.

"It seems so simple to require it with a constitutional amendment, but it really isn't," she said.

She said loopholes would be created to get around it and items would be hidden to escape the balanced budget.

"Now it is right there where we can see it, and I'd rather have it that way," Kassebaum said.

The Kansas Legislature has passed a bill calling for a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget.

ALSO DURING her visit, Kassebaum said she had not made a decision on the Amtrak cutback proposal.

The proposal, as released by Secretary of Transportation Brock Adams, would cut almost 50 percent of Amtrak's rail mileage. The rerouting would send a line through Manhattan on a route from Kansas City to Denver. It also would take away a line running through southern Kansas.

Kassebaum sits on the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee, which has been studying the proposal. She said she was concerned with the cost of upgrading the track and signals along the northern route.

"It is my understanding that the track along the northern route is not in nearly as good shape as the southern track. Many of the stations on the northern route have deteriorated and signaling along the northern route is not adequate for passenger service," Kassebaum said.

The Union Pacific is scheduled to test the track early this week to see if it is in good enough condition for Amtrak passenger service.

Tickets to Billy Joel on sale Wednesday

Grammy-winning musician Billy Joel is coming to K-State on April 28, and so is the old system of standing in line fo. concert tickets.

Union Programing Council (UPC) received confirmation last Friday that Joel would be here, according to Myron Molzen, UPC concerts coordinator. UPC waited until after open house to release the Joel concert information because University officials wanted to avoid the congestion of people standing in line for tickets and attending open house events, Molzen said.

Seats for the 8 p.m. show in Ahearn Field House will be reserved and tickets will go on sale at 6 p.m. Wednesday in the Union ticket office. Ticket prices are $8, $7.50 and $7.

"Because of the short time between now and the concert, we won't be able to handle tickets by mail order system," Molzen said. "They will be handled by a day line."

The day line will begin at 7 a.m. and end at 9 p.m., Molzen said. Roll call will be taken at both times and places will remain the same overnight.

UPC will begin to recognize a line sometime today, Molzen said. Tickets will be sold Wednesday until the line runs out. After Wednesday, tickets will go on sale daily at the Union and at seven outlets.

There will be a limit of 10 tickets sold to each person in line payable by one check with identification or cash, Molzen said. The only place for the line to form is outside the Union Little Theatre. No one will be allowed to form a line inside the building.

UPC will institute roll calls, hand out Billy Joel IDs and have sign up on the roll call sheet Molzen said. A person not present at the time of roll call will have 15 minutes to report or his place in line will be cancelled.

Red Cross is counting on you.

Texas A&M halts Iranian admissions

COLLEGE STATION, TEXAS—Disturbed by political upheaval in Iran, Texas A&M University officials said the school has decided to temporarily halt admission of some Iranian students.

"We are holding off admitting students directly from Iran unless they have certain proof their records are indeed valid and meet our admission requirements," said Edwin Cooper, dean of admissions and records. "We will hold off until the political situation stabilizes."

Cooper said the policy was implemented in February, a month after the fall of the monarchy. About 100 Iranian students attend the university, which had a fall enrollment of 30,200.

Patty—from victim to robber to bride

SAN FRANCISCO—A radiant Patricia Campbell Hearst, kidnap victim turned robber and now a bride, married her former bodyguard Sunday in a traditional service on a island in San Francisco Bay.

Hearst carried a lily of the valley bouquet as she stepped from a shiny black limousine. She and her father, Randolph Hearst, passed more than 100 reporters, photographers and spectators before entering the chapel on Treasure Island naval base.

She was smiling but silent as reporters shouted questions while she walked about 50 feet along a concrete sidewalk into the simple redwood paneled chapel.

Islamic republic triumphs in Iran

TEHRAN, Iran—Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini triumphantly proclaimed Iran an Islamic republic Sunday, announcing that the "yes" votes of millions of Iranians in a referendum had created the nation's first "government of God."

The 78-year-old Shiite Moslem leader, who led the struggle that toppled Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's regime in mid-February, said his countrymen had voted "to establish a government of righteousness and to overthrow and bury the monarchy in the garbage can of history."

Khomeini's victory statement, read by an announcer over Tehran radio, contrasted with continued concern by the revolutionary authorities over unrest among the nation's large ethnic minority groups.

Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan, head of the Khomeini-appointed provisional government, warned rebellious Turkoman tribesmen in the northeastern city of Gonbad-e-Qabous on Sunday that if the bloody week-old fighting there did not cease he would send in government troops Tuesday morning to restore order.

A government spokesman warned, meanwhile, that new trouble was brewing in Arab-populated Khuzestan province.

Carter suggests possible evacuation

HARRISBURG, Pa.—Engineers slowly shrank a potentially explosive gas bubble in the reactor of the crippled Three Mile Island nuclear plant Sunday, as President Carter visited the plant and suggested a precautionary evacution may be necessary within a few days.

Local officials in the area of the plant readied contingency plans for such an evacuation and said late Sunday that arrangements were nearly complete for relocating the elderly, invalids and persons in institutions such as hospitals and jails.

"We'd like to have things in shape," commented Francis Hess, commissioner of Carroll Township, east of the plant. He said 1,000 copies of a public notice advising people what to do if an evacuation is ordered were distributed Sunday.

Gov. Dick Thornburgh said in a statement Sunday night that schools within five miles of the plant should remain closed today. He said state government offices will be open as usual, but with generous leaves granted for "absentees."

Although an estimated 50,000 people have fled the Harrisburg area since Wednesday's accident touched off the first of a continuing series of low-level radiation leaks, Carter said that even if an evacuation is ordered, "this will not indicate the danger is high...It is purely a precautionary measure."

Weather

Glenarx Blwsismalkig (Good morning in April Fool's.) Welcome to the April 1 edition of the Collegian—which seems a little strange because today is April 2. Well, anyway turn to pages 10 and 447 for details. Actually, the Daily Cow may be the bright spot of your day, because the weather will be gloomy. Today is expected to be mostly cloudy with highs in the low 40s. Lows tonight will dip into the low 30s. A chance of rain mixed with light snow is expected today.

Opinions

Nukes unleashed trouble

People who saw "China Syndrome" and comforted themselves with the thought, "this is only a movie," should realize it is a possibility—one that grows with every nuclear plant opened.

The Silkwood trial, the transporting accident in Wichita, and the Pennsylvania accident only emphasize the experts' vulnerbility in dealing with radioactivity.

Energy Secretary James Schlesinger said the Pennsylvania accident:

"Underscores how safe nuclear power has been in the past."

If that is safety, danger would be immediate disaster.

Since the 1973 energy crisis showed a need for another energy source, the government has become committed to nuclear energy, giving more money for building, research and support to nuclear power than any other energy source.

Why?

One reason is nuclear energy is one of the most developed alternative sources available. Another reason is there are enough raw materials needed for nuclear energy to last for awhile. And a third reason, nuclear energy is profitable, unlike solar energy, where it might prove difficult to make a buck.

Every energy source has problems: coal and natural gas are dirty, limited resources, solar is undeveloped and lacks funds—so nuclear energy looked like a beautiful alternative.

But nuclear energy has more frightening consequences than the others. Once it was welcomed as the clean, almost limitless energy source of tomorrow, when people trusted the experts who said they knew how to leash the monster. That isn't true any longer.

The country is afraid of nuclear power, with cause. Accidents happen in every industry, but the nuclear industry can't afford accidents. People who walk poodles don't have to worry about their dog breaking the leash and attacking others as much as people who own trained watchdogs.

Nuclear power is such a killer dog; it was originally developed for defense, and is lethal when unleashed.

No matter how the Pennsylvania accident turns out, the nation has had a bad scare. Do we want to live with a future showing more and more nuclear accidents? As more plants are built, there are bound to be more accidents.

The government and regulatory agencies can't be counted on to give the public all of the facts about nuclear power. From the Silkwood case, cover-ups and "benign" neglect of accidents have emerged. If anything is to be done, the public has to do it.

It is time to consider another future energy source. It is time to stop the growth of nuclear plants. Everyone can do something—from trying to stop the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant now under construction near Burlington to writing their Congressmen.

Administration officials are urging people to avoid making snap judgments and "wait and see."

If the nation waits too long, people will forget and continue their lives. The time for action is now, when we can remember the fear.

If action isn't taken now, the next time the dog escapes the leash may be the last for many.

'Tis the season to be social

This is a social season. It is a string of social holidays we define in our various ways and celebrate with some degree of spontaneity.

Spring. Can you feel it in the word? The coils of winter embedded in your flesh quickly unwind and your spirit lets out a hibernated sigh. Out you pop from winter coats and winter moods, ready to meet new people and to refresh your relationships with ones you already know.

Friendship, after all, is something we all need or want throughout most of our lives.

There are times when we adamantly state, "I don't need anybody!" However, we do. A major part of getting to know ourselves occurs through our interactions with others. If we are superficial with them, it is quite likely we may be superficial with ourselves.

Human relationships are a tough business. The quality and quantity of them greatly affects our lives. Friendship involves just as much emotion, effort and responsibility as does love and marriage, except it lacks blatant sexuality. I think sexual involvement is still largely an unexplored frontier among friends. At least, I know women who are still trying to keep it so, myself included.

THERE ARE acquaintances you meet through a friend, strangers you meet on the streets, good friends gone bad, friends whose company you enjoy but don't get to see often, and close friends.

Then, of course, a kind of "buffer zone" exists between being close friends and lovers—kind of an enter-at-your-own-risk option. The only time this option is truly absent is when the two close friends in question don't share the same sexual preferences.

People are important to me. I have few close friends, but many good friends, all of whom I give the same quality of respect and sincerity.

Those ideals, after all, are the only ones with an erosion level low enough to weather the storm of any relationship. I can love my friends, but love is a temporary thing. It can fade in and out according to emotive precipitations and is quite unreliable without a spiritual, sincere and respectful basis from which to grow.

The term "best friend" always has bothered me. Barbara Harlan and I exchanged those words back in Mrs. Mueller's second grade class. They were like a vow whose silent words we came to choke on before the end of the year.

SINCE WE were a pair, we had to compete: who was better at hopscotch, who sang "Red River Valley" with them most emotion, whose dress was the prettiest, whose grades were the best, whose knees were less skinned, and (of course) who could get little Johnnie's attention first and keep it the longest. And the same thing happened with Robyn, but she died before we could finish the race.

So, after fifth grade, there were no "best friends." Who was I to pit one friend against another, measuring their character and abilities, and deciding which model best fit my expectations? We try to apply the edge of the blade of competition to everything. It's so cutting.

Business, family, school, social or sexual intercourse . . .Forsaking sincerity of interaction, we go for what we need, forgetting any relationship is a two-way street full of such heavy traffic it takes a lot of courage and honesty to drive it without a major collision.

If we can't be real (as opposed to being artificial) in our dealings with friends, lovers and other strangers, the loss is ours. Glossing over ourselves results in a glossed-over, illusion of reality—nothing more than a bad joke to tell after the third round of drinks.

We shouldn't allow our frendships to succumb to artificial elements, no matter how trivial the relationship. In our efforts to be real with the people with whom we interact, perhaps we can discover the same degree of reality and realization for ourselves.

Wheelchair game a success

Editor,

Outstanding television performers are given Emmys, movie stars are awarded Oscars, singers earn Grammys and medals of honor are given to Olympic winners. However, I can only honor those deserving recognition with words. This letter is my attempt to do so.

I wish to extend my personal thanks and praise to those who worked so diligently to coordinate the highly successful Students for Handicapped Concern's (SHC) wheelchair basketball game held March 28, 1979. Not only was the event a financial and personal success for all those involved in the planning, but it demonstrated "handicap" on the basketball court isn't a matter of physical prowess at all. The real handicap concerns people's attitudes and misconceptions towards physical disability.

As committee chairman, Greg Bachman is the recipient of my greatest appreciation and respect for his perseverence and excellent judgment in carrying out all phases of the project.

Jerry Pomeroy supervised a network of ticket sellers and advertisers and is to be commended for his fine efforts.

I sincerely express my thanks and appreciation to Jane Rowlett, SHC adviser and friend whose guidance and enthusiasm helped us "weather many storms" along the way.

To coaches Jack Hartman and Joe Greves, along with their respective team membrs, I remain forever grateful for your support and willingness to share with us your athletic skills. Needless to say, without your presence, K-State's first wheelchair basketball game would still be just a hope on a distant horizon.

To all members of SHC, the Theta Xi fraternity, the Pre-Physical Therapy Club, Clovia, the management of Mother's Worry, the celebrity coaches, Michael Durant and the Ahearn Complex staff, I wish to acknowledge you for your individual contributions which served to facilitate an effective team effort.

Finally, I speak for all of us in SHC when I convey my gratitude to all those students and Manhattan residents who made donations and attended the game. Seeing you walk through the door made the hundreds of man hours, phone calls and correspondence disappear from our weary minds. With your help, we tasted the thrill of victory and bypassed the agony of defeat.

The realization of our shuttle car service for next year is considerably closer than it was just a few days ago. So, take note senators—We are trying, which is the most that can be asked of anyone caught within the confines of a slow moving university bureaucracy.

Different opinions crucial

Editor,

The initial question posed by Melanie Long's letter (March 30) was—"Should we as human beings and Americans have the right to do what we want at the expense of others?" No, most definitely not.

I fully agree with Ms. Long's assertion that our present society is going downhill. This is evidenced by a dogmatic self-righteous minority calling for authoritarian controls on everyone's self-expression, self-fulfillment and interpersonal relationships.

There is nothing more disgusting or seemingly a waste of time than to see people so sanctified out of their minds they are willing to promote erosion of separation of church and state in this country.

There is nothing more nauseating than seeing someone trying to force others into their rigid, narrow-minded, suffocating limits of legitimate behavior.

It's not only clearly visible that we all have different opinions but crucially important that we are able to hold them and express them. If you, Ms. Long, cannot get along with me because I do not conform to your beliefs and values then you are the selfish one.

You can go ahead and die for your moral standards if you desire. I'll continue living awhile for mine.

'Several gloomy days ahead' for mourning Alma residents

By CHRIS TOOHEY
Collegian Reporter

The community is at a standstill.

Debra Anderson, 23, and Christina Lesline, 16, were killed late Friday night when their car struck a tree on K-18 east of Manhattan, according to the Kansas Highway Patrol.

Anderson was the assistant girls basketball coach at Wabunsee High School, said Gary Norris, principal of the school.

She was also the girls' physical education teacher, girls' tennis coach and head girls' track coach, he said. Anderson was a 1978 graduate of K-State.

Lesline, a junior at Wabunsee High School, played multi-offense positions on the basketball team, playing forward and guard positions, Norris said. She was a starting member of the team and was next-to-highest scorer, he said.

Lesline had ranking in the state in terms of her shooting percentage, Norris said.

"Lesline was the main ball handler and the biggest asset to the team," Norris said. "It (the wreck) is having a major impact on the school.

"We are a close-knit community, with 220 in our high school, and I'm anticipating several gloomy days ahead," he said.

"Next year, our head basketball coach, Dan Wagner, was planning on building his offense around Lesline and Terry Hunn, also a member of the Wabunsee High basketball team," Norris said.

The two had been together Friday afternoon at the high school, jumping on the trampoline, Norris said.

"We were on spring break that week and Anderson was having track practice at different times that week. She quite often stayed late to help the girls out," Norris said.

It has not yet been determined why Anderson and Lesline were together Friday night, Norris said.

"We are offering buses to Anderson's funeral in Topeka Tuesday morning," Norris said. Lesline's funeral is Tuesday in McFarland.

"The kids are in an extreme state of shock, it's a community where everyone knows everyone. It has already created quite an impact," he said.

Wabunsee High School cancelled its participation in a Monday night track meet as well as a music concert scheduled for Tuesday evening, Norris said.

"There would be no spirit of participation or cooperation," he said.

"We have eight weeks till school ends and have to find a substitute for Anderson to teach P.E. She was doing an excellent job.

"I haven't been here that long, but as far as I know, no major thing like this has happened for quite awhile. They were both thought very highly of," Norris said.

Election Tuesday to fill city commission

Polls will be open Tuesday from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. for the general election of Manhattan city commissioners and USD 383 Board of Education in Riley County.

All registered voters residing within the city limits may vote in both the City Commission and Board of Education elections. Those residents registered to vote in Riley County and residing in USD 383 may vote only in the school board election.

All voters will cast their ballots at the usual city and county polling places.

Four seats are open on the City Commission. Three of those seats are for four-year terms. There is a special election to fill the unexpired two-year term of former Commissioner Robert Smith.

Four candidates, Russell Reitz, Gene Klingler, Joe Rippetoe and Edward Horne, are running in the general election for the three four-year terms. Wanda Fateley and Chris Curtain are running in the special election to complete Smith's term.

In the Board of Education election, eight candidates are running for four seats with four-year terms. In the running for USD 383 school board are: Mark Lipp, Donald Marks, Jon Brake, Charles Thompson, Barbara Withee, Larry Dixon, Robert Newsome and Frank Tillman.

Bikeways: 'We've had nothing but complaints'

It's been rough riding for those in charge of campus and city bikeways, according to Larry Wilson, director of Land Use and Campus Planning.

"The idea behind the bikeways is good," Wilson said. "They were set up to encourage bicycle traffic and help solve the parking problem, but so far, we've had nothing but complaints.

"However, I'm sure there are some people who like them," he said.

Wilson said some of the problems with the bikeways include bad routing and poor street conditions. Wilson, himself a biker, said he doesn't use the bikeways often.

The bikeways originally cost $40,000, 80 percent of which was paid by the federal government and the rest was funded by the city.

City Engineer Jerry Petty is currently in charge of the bikeways, although he was not when they were installed. Petty said an evaluation is being done this spring to decide what will be done with the bikeways. The evaluation will be finished sometime in June, he said.

"Some changes will be made," Petty said. "One I know for sure will be west of 17th and Poyntz. It was originally a class two bikeway, but it conflicts with parking. It will be changes to a class three bikeway."

A class two bikeway consists of painted lines designating the bikeway from the street. Class three bikeways have no markings on the street, but have signs alerting motorists that the street is also a bikeway. Class one bikeways are paved paths allowing only bicycle traffic to operate.

"Up to this point there has been no money spent on maintenance other than for snow removal, and that wasn't very much," Petty said. "Maintenance will stay minimal. Later we'll run into the cost of re-striping the class two bikeways, but bikes don't wear the paint off like cars do."

Petty said the bikeways haven't been much trouble except for vandalism of signs on the class three bikeways, which he said had been heavy. The signs cost $15 each.

Engineering students' canoe stolen Friday

Chances for civil engineering students to place first in the annual Big 8 Cement Canoe Race on April 28 have sunk—the 150-pound canoe was stolen sometime early Friday.

Russell Gillespie, civil engineering technician, said he discovered the canoe was missing Friday morning. He said at first he thought the canoe was being used in an Open House display but later realized it had been stolen.

According to Gillespie, two to three people and a truck would have been needed to remove the canoe and its mold. The canoe and mold are valued at $300.

Students had spent 60 to 80 hours working on the canoe, which was 65 percent complete. Tharnish said another canoe may be made but it would be hard to complete it by the April 28 race.

rendezvous with KSU

K-State rolled out the red carpet this weekend for the annual all-University "Rendezvous With KSU" Open House.

Mini-carnivals of fun highlighted each activity. Clowns stopped motorists and passersb to present them with souvenir balloons. Men and women in uniform dott‹d the campus sidewalks and colored signs welcomed visitors.

Kansas Sen. Nancy Kassebaum drew heavy applause when she donned a fake nose, moustache and glasses during opening ceremonies Friday. The glasses were presented by members of the K-State architectural engineering club, who were also sporting the fake noses and glasses.

Steve Soldner, senior in mechanical engineering technology and center for the K-State basketball team, was crowned St. Pat while Page Puckett, senior in mechanical engineering, was crowned St. Patricia.

THROUGHOUT THE two-day event, K-State colleges used talents to present a complete overview of the University. Displays, guided tours, fashions, animal shows, dancing and films were all part of the festivities.

The Not Ready For K-State Players kept the audience entertained between acts with commercials, game shows and a mock press conference with Jimmy Carter.

Acrobatics, dancing, athletic highlights and student acts were featured Saturday in the K-State Union Courtyard. Booths, displaying campus goups and activities, crowded the Union floor in efforts to familiarize each person with things at K-State besides studying.

Disco plans replace power plant

By DULY DULL
Cow Editor

Silo Tech President Duane Medi-Oker announced today that the proposed coal fired power plant has been scrapped in favor of a tri-level disco.

The disco is scheduled for completion by 1984 and will be built where Memorial Stadium now stands. Medi-Oker said he made the decision to replace the power plant with the disco for two reasons.

"It was a question of priorities. If we don't get more students, there's no need for any energy," he said.

"Furthermore, the Legislature doesn't seem too gung-ho about the coal-fire thing anyway. I feel they'd be more receptive towards a disco. That's something everyone could benefit from." Medi-Oker said.

The construction of a disco was described as "a last-ditch effort" by Medi-Oker to reverse dropping enrollment.

"This will put us on top as far as student recruitment goes," he said. "As far an I know, no other school in the country has a three-level disco to its name. I bet Archie (Dykes) is eating his heart out."

AT LEAST ONE Manhattan businessman was upset with Medi-Oker's decision to build the tri-level disco. Aggieville (bar) owner Terry Pay said the University was playing "dirty pool."

"After I doled out the advertising cash to get Tech a new basketball arena, I think the least they could do is offer me a partnership," he said.

Medi-Oker said he considered offering Pay a partnership, but didn't because the city of Manhattan would not give them a dancing license if Pay was made a partner.

"He already owns half the town, I don't think we should let him get started on the University too," City Commissioner O. Henry said.

As planned, the disco will include automated mannequins that look like John Travolta and Donna Summer. (The mannequins will be rented for $6 an hour or $20 for overnight rentals.) Purple strobes will light the disco. Another speciality will be a disco version of the K-State fight song, now being arranged by Bill Sewet.

University officials have taken into consideration the possible demise of Disco as "the thing" to do.

"If disco does hit the dust, we'll just convert the thing into a flying saucer and send it to Studio 54 where it is programmed to self-destruct," Medi-Oker said.

'Welcome to Munchkin Land'

By LEIF TREETOPS
Sprouts Editor

The Region VII office of Housing, Education and Well-wishing (HEW) announced Sunday that Title XI, a federal guideline to prohibit discrimination in athletics against short people, will require Silo Tech to grant basketbll scholarships to three players less than 4 feet tall next season.

"I'm extremely displeased with this action," Coach Jack Heartburn said. "My whole recruiting strategy will have to change, but at least I can play now."

The Title XI proceedings were initiated Nov. 29, 1947, when the Alliance To Disturb Athletic Directors filed a complaint charging Tech with deliberately placing basketball goals too high, recruiting only tall people and spending more money on football and basketball than on tiny little shoes.

Athletic Director D. Lost Odds said he would have acted sooner on the problem, but the complaint forms were so small he couldn't read them.

ODDS SAID pressure from the Alliance and other groups has caused him to arrange for Daily Cow News Editor Jolene Hoss to be named Little Person In Charge of Remodeling Ahearn Field House to Fit Other Little People's Needs Better (LPICORAFHTFOLPNB).

Some of the pressure was applied by Duane Medi-Oker, Tech's president and tiny administrators' legislative liaison (TALL).

"Well it's good to see Odds has wised up," Medi-Oker said. "We don't want him to go the way of Ernie Brat and Guernsey Germeier, do we?"

Sources close to Medi-Oker say he keeps running into their knees. They also say Odds will receive a native walnut plaque for agreeing to follow the Title XI guidelines.

"Don't forget, Title XI also covers the specifications for the new fieldhouse," Orlando "Shrimpy" Lazaar said.

Lazaar has drawn alternate plans for the arena, construction began last week on the former site of Farrell Library, which succumbed to mold and mildew March 17.

The construction thus far includes the foundation and an ornate entrance, featuring a banner sign above the door which reads, "We Want To Welcome You To Munchkin Land."

Album a reviewer's dream

By REXX READE
Cow Reviewer

It is only on the rarest of occasions that an artist comes out with an album that is so musically together, so consistant and tight, that it crosses all the usual boundaries of appeal.

Such an album has finally graced these ears; an album so full of magic that it will be accepted by anyone who appreciates true artistry, and even by those who don't. This record will appeal to everyone: young, old, black, white, rich man, poor man, beggars and thieves, doctors, lawyers, Indian chiefs, even the deaf will find something to enjoy on this magnificent piece of vinyl.

One factor above all others makes this record so outstanding: the artist involved has chosen to work solo. There are no supporting musicians, nor has the artist resorted to any electronic gimmicks to augment his performance. He is alone, his talent naked and exposed for all to see, a bared soul performing a cappella. It is the stuff that makes strong men cry.

LABELS? Forget them! This is not rock or jazz or classical or country or anything even remotely resembling any musical form known to mankind at present. It is a cosmic consciousness communicated on plastic, a voided estutcheon of vinyl entity, a soothing sonata for a savage breast.

Make no mistake; all future, recorded works will have to be measured against this masterpiece (and that's a word not used lightly). The inherent humanity encased within these grooves will live forever. Citizens in every country of the world will be able to purchase and play this record without fear of reprisals from tyrants and despots, because those leaders will not hear in this record the same message that their oppressed people will discover.

FINALLY, one would be remiss if he did not offer thanks to Hardtofind-Obscuro Records for having the foresight to see beyond the normal commercial horizon and taking a chance with an artist who has appeared many times on stage but has never before consented to appearing in a recording studio. Those magnificent moguls, Frank E. Ripoff and Noah Pitch, deserve the warmest plaudits for consumers and industry leaders alike.

Rush, do not walk, to your nearest record store and get a copy of this before it sells out. Hardtofind-Obscuro has indicated a limited edition of this album, and you don't want to be the only one in your neighborhood to be without a copy.

If your dealer is out, send through the mails for a copy. The address: "Marcel Marceau's Greatest Hits," Hardtofind-Obscuro Records, Modesto, Cal. Include check or money order for $9.95 and allow 4-8 weeks for delivery.

I have had it with you jerks. Bitch and moan, bitch and moan, that's all you do.

Where do you get off criticizing what we do here at the Cow? We may not know what we're doing, but neither do you. So, stifle it or else, and that's a threat.

You can bet your $345 fee card on it.

Beginning today, I have established CAVAK which stands for Cowites Assigned to Vindicate Anti-shah Cackle.

I've hired 45 additional staff members to stalk the campus of Silo Tech and search out you revolutionaries. Once found, you will be taken to the newsroom in Kedzie Hall where you will forced to read a semester's worth of Collegians, including Campus Bulletin. A comprehension test will follow. Two-time offenders will be taken directly to the basement of Kedzie where they will be run through the presses along with the morning issue.

We'll call it our special supplement.

I regret that such strong measures had to be taken, but it is discouraging that in our society we have complainers who just won't let us hard-working people do our jobs.

So, unless you want to end up as page 28 in Tuesday's Cow, keep your mouth shut, your phone down and your pen in the desk drawer where it belongs.

Thank you and have a pleasant tomorrow.

Drug legalization signed into law

I. POP CORN
Drug Reviewer

TOPEKA—The state of Kansas has just entered the 20th century with the news that the governor has signed a bill into law that makes all drugs legal.

In a surprise move, the Legislature voted overwhelmingly to amend the current marijuana penalty reduction bill to include provisions for legalization of all drugs, including marijuana and so-called hard drugs such as heroin, angel dust and all opium derivatives. Kansas is the second state to wipe out all drug restrictions. Oregon was the first.

Attorney General Woodson Steppinout said the move will increase drug use up to 20,000 percent and would reduce the caseload in the courts up to 100 percent.

Sponsor of the bill, Jim Roach (D-Cocaina), said the action by the usually conservative members of the legislature just "blew him away."

"I don't really know what to do. My mother and father are down at the local head shop right now stocking up on the various drugs in the event of a price increase.

"They told me that when they heard about the signing they thought they should join in and do what they had wanted to do for sometime," Roach said.

Gov. Massey Deere, who rode to the governor's chair high atop his four-wheel drive white tractor, said he decided to issue the order in light of the continuing decline of the small-time farmer and the American Agriculture Movements plea for government parity.

"With this order the government will not have to guarantee any thing. I have always believed the government should stay out of business and with this move they will be able to do so.

"The small-time farmers can now take advantage of the marijuana weed which persists in growing right in the middle of wheat fields. Now they can use some type of weed killer to get rid of the wheat that will grow in the middle of their marijuana fields," the governor said.

The Cow has learned through informed sources in the statehouse that the administrtive leader has been following this philosophy for some time and has three warehouses on his five-acre farm near Stoned Flat.

A long-time opponent to drug legislation, Sen. Stan Strait (R-Sheltered Valley) said he was amazed by the action and was fearful of what the outcome would be.

"I was sure I would get up in the morning and find naked men and women lying in the streets and the fronts of all the downtown businesses smashed but I went home and tried to relax anyway," Strait said.

The senator said he was at home for a couple of hours and had decided he had cut the measure short. He said he then called his nine-year-old daughter and asked for her assistance in the matter.

"She told me she could fix me right up. She handed me some small brown cakes and a pipe and told me to try them. I did and my wife and have never found each other so beautiful.

"After trying our hand at the substance we were how do you say it, grooving along. The colors around me were really wild and, man, I could just touch the tip of a book and really fell the sensations in my fingertips," Strait said.

The new law will have to stand a test of the courts, but no opposition is expected, according to Mary Jane Roper, chief justice.

"Hey, we're all cool," she said of the rest of the nine justices.

During committee session to be held today, if the legislators can find their way to the state building, a bill is expected to be introduced to regulate the pricing of drugs manufactured nd sold in the state. Also to be voted on is a bill which would bring back alcohol prohibition in the state. The bill is expected to pass both Houses unanimously.

Medi-Oker acquires Mona Lisa

By BOOGIE DANIEL (no 's')
Mangy Editor

In what he called "an effort to make Silo Techers proud," Tech President Duane Medi-Oker has purchased Leonardo da Vinci's immortal "Mona Lisa" last week.

Medi-Oker said the painting cost about $3,574,999.99. The money was obtained from Farrell Library and maintenance funds, he said.

Medi-Oker said the requisition was permissable because "somebody has to make decisions."

The painting has been placed high on the wall behind Medi-Oker's desk so the Mona Lisa would be smiling down on anyone who enters the office. The symbolic meaning of the placement is not known at this time.

Officials at the library were unshaken by the acquisition and some students at Seaton Court remained apathetic upon hearing about the money taken from library and maintenance funds.

"Well, that's the way it goes," Fred Dork, librarian, said while holding an umbrella to deflect dropping rain.

"We don't need the money that bad, I guess. After all, I guess it is more important to have a nice-looking office than a dry library," Dork said.

"I don't really see that it makes that big a difference" Stan Sparks, senior in architecture and disco, said. "I spent a lot of money on my waterproof paper and supplies, so I'd just as soon use 'em. My mudflaps alone cost me $40."

Another architecture student, Burt Furneley, said he liked the way Seaton Court reminded him of his native South America.

"Where else on campus can you find a jungle habitat?" Furnely asked. "We have large vegetation jungle heat, that fresh smell of rotting wood and little critters running around. Who could ask for more?"

BULLETIN

The newly purchased "Mona Lisa" was accidently destroyed early today when workers from University Facilities sprayed the work of art with brown paint.

Medi-Oker's office was being maintained with a dark brown paint derived from native Kansas walnut, and painters said they didn't realize the "Mona Lisa" was important.

"He said 'paint the office,' so we painted the office," Punchy Cummings, a painter, said. "Nobody told me to watch out for any picture."

The "Mona Lisa" could have been saved by careful and professional restorers, but in an effort of their own, mAintenance workers sandblasted the contents within the frame.

Burrito blast belts bar

By MILK HERD
Copy Edeter

An Aggieville tavern was destroyed Saturday night when seven Silo Tech exploded after gorging themselves on Union burritos.

High flatulent winds flattened the Swayin' F bar and buried Aggieville with the scent of moldy burritos, according to Sheriff Boring Finchburn.

"It was the damndest thing I ever smelt," Finchburn blurted.

Tavern bartender Musical Fruit was working Saturday night, and described the disgusting incident this way:

"I knewed we was in trouble when those Tech kids came rollin' through the door. You could tell they'd been eatin' burritos because they were sendin' smoke signals.

"Anyway, one of the really bloated broads—identified later as Buffalo Buns (junior in foods and nutrition)—bounced inside and ordered a pickled egg. Right after she inhaled that egg, gas warfare began."

University physician Dr. I.M. Quak said the explosion was caused by the combination of a burrito overdose and the pickled egg.

"The chemical reaction of old eggs and putrid burritos made Ms. Buns' body reject the built-up gas. Once she began to release flatus, it set off a chain reaction with her six friends. It must have been awful," Quak said.

While sifting through the Swayin' F's rubble, Finchburn said, "By the looks of this heap, they ought to change its name to the Smolderin' Chip."

According to Sheriff Finchburn, no one was killed in the "blow out," but 123 students were taken to Bafoon Living Death Center for fumigation.

K-State bats fall silent in four losses to Iowa

By JIM BOEH
Collegian Reporter

The K-State baseball team saw its bats go into a coma in doubleheaders Friday and Saturday with the Iowa Hawkeyes at Frank Myers Field.

With four losses to Iowa, including three shutouts, the Wildcats' record dropped to 15-6-1.

Sports

The Hawkeyes were 0-6 coming at the start of the series.

In Friday's action, K-State's hitting was as cold as the 45 degree weather.

Righthander Tom Mullen of the Hawkeyes scattered five hits and struck out nine Wildcats in the opener Friday to gain the 4-0 victory.

Leftfielder Al Lash provided all the power Iowa needed as he smashed two consecutive homers over the right field fence.

Mullen and Lash's play overshadowed the performance of K-State leftfielder Al Hunter, who had three of the five 'Cat hits with two singles and a double.

K-State pitcher Tom Harvey lost his first decision in four starts.

IN THE SECOND game, which Iowa won 1-0, Hawkeye southpaw Steve Rooks was two outs away from a no-hitter when K-State's Michael Akins came up with an infield hit in the bottom of the seventh.

Trailing 1-0, the 'Cats threatened to tie the game when Akins moved into scoring position via a Hawkeye fielding error.

Iowa's relief pitcher, Wes Wiegel, however, slammed the door shut by retiring the final two K-State batters.

K-State's hitting woes continued in the first game of Saturday's doubleheader as Iowa's freshman righthander Bill Drambel threw a no-hitter in the 6-0 shutout.

Drambel had a perfect game for four and two-thirds innings before walking K-State's designated hitter, Bob Dubek.

The Hawkeyes got what proved to be the only run they needed on a third-inning homer by shortstop Dave Hoeksema.

K-STATE HAD only six hits in 67 at-bats

Distance runners shine; sun doesn't in Texas meet

Two K-State women's teams went to Denton, Texas over the weekend and were greeted by rain and tough competition.

While the women's softball team split its games in the Texas Women's University Invitational, the women's track team turned in a strong overall performance in their meet of the same name.

"The distance runners had a tremendous meet," Coach Barry Anderson said.

Dana Schaulis won the 10,000-meter run, but perhaps the most important victory for the K-State track team was the return to excellence of Renee Urish, who had been slowed as she recovered from various injuries over the last few months.

Urish took first in the 3,000-meter run with a time of 10:03.6 and second in the 1500-meter with a time of 4:33.6.

"I was very happy with Renee's performance," Coach Barry said. "She's starting to look like she used to and she's taking top honors."

Anderson also commended Janel LeValley, who finished third in the 1500-meter and fifth in the 3,000-meter.

"She will be a great runner," Anderson said. "She looked like a champ."

NO TEAM scores were kept in the meet, and the rain hampered some of the individual times. In fact, the runners in the 3,000-meter run were hard to see through the driving rain.

K-State's relay teams also scored well. The mile relay team of Cindy Anderson, Wanda Trent, Lorraine Davidson and Freda Hancock took second in 3:47.7 minutes, even without Leesa Wallace, who stayed home with an injury.

The 880-relay team of Pat Osborne, Annette Sittenauer, Trent and Davidson took third with a time of 1:42.3.

In the field events, K-State's performance appeared to be disappointing, but Anderson was still hopeful.

"We haven't been able to work on the (field) technique outdoors and you just can't work on technique indoors," he said.

"Contrary to the results we do have a strong field team."

THE BEST field performance was the 45-6½ shot put of Lisa Long, which took second and set a personal best.

"Overall, I was happy with everyone's performance" Anderson said. "It was a good start for the outdoor season."

Eight members of the women's team will participate in the Texas Relays Friday and Saturday. The rest of the squad will go to the Emporia State Relays.

Baseball...

during the three shutouts and hadn't scored a run in 21 consecutive innings.

Coach Dave Baker said the K-State hitting problems stemmed from a "combination of the weather and Iowa's good pitchers."

The Hawkeye pitchers were aided by good defense, Baker said.

"We continued to hit the ball. They just made some good plays," he said.

Iowa second baseman Tony Burley saved Drambel's no-hitter twice with spectacular running catches in the outfield.

K-State appeared to be coming out of its three-game slump in Saturday's second game, but still lost 7-4.

Catcher Don Hess' run-scoring double and Tyrone Hudson's sacrifice fly gave the 'Cats a 2-0 lead in the first inning.

The Hawkeyes countered with two runs in the third and the game remained tied until the final inning.

Iowa sent 10 men to the plate in the top of the seventh inning and exploded with five runs on six hits.

THE HAWKEYES put the game away with a three-run homer by rightfielder Dick Peth, who was also a starter for the Iowa basketball team.

Although the 'Cats weren't particularly successful in the series, all was not lost. Before the series began, Baker said competition with the tough Iowa team would prepare the 'Cats for the upcoming Big 8 schedule. K-State begins conference play Friday at home against Kansas.

"This was the kind of series we really needed because we have a lot of new people," Baker said after Saturday's games.

Golf coach pleased with team's season opener

K-State's golf coach Paul Anderson returned beaming from the men's Oklahoma Intercollegiate Tournament in Shawnee this weekend.

Competing in its first outing of the season, K-State placed seventh of 19 teams in the three-day tournament won by Wichita State. This was the second consecutive year the 'Cats had participated in the meet.

"The most encouraging thing about their (K-State's) play was that they knocked 40 shots off last year's score," Anderson, who is in his second year as K-State's golf coach, said.

Playing in a 40 m.p.h. wind and 80 degree temperatures, the 'Cats turned in team scores of 312, 306 and 299.

Senior Brian Linn led K-State with rounds of 78, 70 and 74 to finish with a 10th-place overall score. Scott Bunker turned in scores of 74, 74 and 77 while teammate Jeff Kruse topped of his first two rounds of 80 with a 71.

Mark Green and Rich Sorenson rounded out the K-State effort.

"The top two players, Scott and Brian, are both playing real well," Anderson said. "Scott has improved over last year and Brian has improved immensely."

The coach said his team's biggest problem now is its lack of practice because of the weather.

WHILE THE MEN were in Oklahoma, K-State's first women's golf team opened its season in Lawrence against the University of Kansas and Nebraska.

Although the 'Cats took third place, Anderson said he was pleased with their performance.

"I'm not discouraged. In fact, I'm very pleased, considering they haven't had any time to practice and it's their first meet ever," he said.

The coach looks for team improvement as the top four players are freshmen, he said.

Julie Navrat led the 'Cats with a 98, closely followed by Nancy Hagen's 99, Terrie Spangler's 100 and 102 by Ellen McBride.

Softball team splits games in rain-plagued tournament

The K-State softball team's performance against Texas Women's University Saturday just about matched the weather—lousy.

The Wildcats committed four of their six errors in the first inning and gave up four runs on their way to a 9-0 loss.

As rain plagued the entire tournament and rained out Friday's games, K-State was able to play two games Saturday.

In the first game, Texas Women's had 10 hits off pitcher Tammi Larsen, four by Missy Mapes. Mapes had a double in the first inning, a single in the second, a triple in the fourth and another double in the sixth.

K-State was able to get only four hits.

In the second game Saturday, the 'Cats made a "100 percent, complete turnover" and beat Texas Wesleyan 6-3, Coach Mary Phyl Dwight said.

K-State's winning runs came in the top of the sixth, which became the last inning when the game was called due to rain.

JANELLE POPPE and Lisa Packard led the 'Cats with a home run apiece.

The rain stopped Sunday afternoon and allowed the Wildcats to play two games. K-State beat Oklahoma 2-1 in the first game and lost to Southwest Missouri State 11-1 in the second game. Beatty was the winning pitcher in the first game.

Tennis team's play disappoints coach

For the second time this season, the K-State women's tennis team went down in defeat to Iowa State, and Wildcat Coach David Hacker is hacked with his team's 1-8 performance in Manhattan.

The 'Cats lost 6-3 to the Cyclones in Ames during spring break, but Hacker thought his team, which is now 0-8, had a good chance to win Saturday.

"Last time we lost three three-set matches. I figured this time we were going to do it," he said.

"They (K-State's players) just did not want to play tennis. It was cold, but it was cold for both sides," Hacker said. "They were just not on the court. They brought their bodies, but forgot to bring their heads."

As a result of K-State's performance, Hacker said the top six places "would be shaken up."

"We'll have to turn to our freshmen and work with them. They're the ones who really want to play tennis," he said.

Freshmen Brenda Bennett and Shelly Christensen captured K-State's lone victory as they won their doubles match 7-5, 6-2.

"They've been playing two and three, but I may start them at number one doubles the rest of the season," Hacker said.

The coach said he was especially disappointed with senior Emily Cohn and sophomore Laurie Friesenborg's 7-5, 6-7, 2-6 doubles loss.

"Laurie Friesenborg and Emily Cohn were just on the verge of winning and blew it completely," he said.

K-State will meet Iowa and Kansas Friday and Saturday in Lawrence. KU defeated Iowa State 9-0 earlier this season.

Come Fly With UPC!

So what is UPC and most important . . . what can UPC do for you?
Well, the initials stand for Union Program Council. But knowing the name doesn't begin to reveal the exciting fun things UPC can do for K-State students like you.

UPC gives you the chance to break away from the everyday routine.
—see bands in concert
—find excitment in a challenging outdoor adventure
—view hit movies and innovative international films
—experience quality entertainment in a coffeehouse atmosphere
—fulfill your dreams of a vacation get away to a ski or beach resort

What's especially appealing is all this (and more) is your free or at unbelievable affordable prices.

But these opportunities don't just materialize out of thin air. They are the product of hard work and a lot of fun by UPC members and chairpeople who serve on the nine UPC committees.

UPC activities are so successful because UPC members are students just like you, who know what they like and what other students like to do. The whole idea is students serving students.

The best way to make sure you get what you want is to be a part of UPC. If you're interested in making fun things happen, just stop by the Activities Center, third floor of the K-State Union and pick up an application. The filing deadline is April 11.

'Good alums all have Purple Pride'

Dances changed, but much remains the same

By KELLY WILKERSON
Collegian Reporter

"Good alums all have Purple Pride," according to Agnes Bane, a 1929 K-State home economics graduate.

Bane, a Manhattan resident, was one of more than 200 alumni who came to the K-State campus to celebrate class reunions last week.

The reunions "give us a chance to get reacquainted with poeple we haven't seen in over 50 years," said Mel Coffmen, a 1929 electrical engineering graduate.

The reunion gave the graduates a chance to talk over their college days and learn what is happening at K-State today.

Student activities haven't changed a great deal in the 50 years his graduation, Coffmen said.

"There used to always be someone with some "alky" if you wanted something to drink," Coffmen said, although Prohibition was in effect during his student years.

"We used to dance a lot," he said. "Not like disco, just standing up and shaking around, we did real dances."

TIME HASN'T changed the energy most of the returning alumni had, according to Martha Cornwell, coordinator for the Alumni Association.

"These people wore me out," she said. "They've got a lot of energy."

The returning graduates, including two from the class of 1913, toured buildings on campus as well as attended several luncheons and speeches.

K-State President Duane Acker spoke to the alumni about K-State and plans for the University's future.

Bane said many alumni were interested in the future of the student recreation complex.

"When we were at K-State, all the recreation was in Anderson Hall," she said.

THE REUNION also was the occasion for addition of new members into the Golden K Club, an organization for alumni who graduated more than 50 years ago.

Support for K-State and school spirit run high among the graduates who came from more than 20 states to attend the reunion.

Bane said she has attended all the basketball and football games for several years because she has "real Purple Pride."

Another graduate from 1929, Ogden Greene, moved back to Manhattan in 1976.

He explained, "Manhattan is just a good college town to live in."

Magic

Paul Winter Consort weaves spell with undefined 'world music'

By SCOTT FARINA
Collegian Reviewer

"Music is magic."

This statement may read a bit trite, but when one hears Paul Winter say it following a performance by his Paul Winter Consort, the truth behind the words becomes clear.

The Consort made its fourth visit to K-State Saturday night, playing to a packed and receptive audience in McCain

Collegian Review

Auditorium. More than most concerts, this one should not have been approached with any preconceived notions.

The Consort plays music without labels; you can't call their music strictly jazz or classical or fusion or anything else. If one must use a tag, the only applicable one would be "world music." That is, the influences on the group are from all over the world: African tribal music, European peasant songs, Latin American carnival sounds.

The instrumentation of the group reflects this eclecticism. Winter plays alto and soprano sax and the contrabass; Eugene Freisen is on cello; Nancy Rumple plays oboe and English horn; Jim Scott doubles on guitars and keyboards, and Steve Foreman plays so many percussion instruments it would be nearly impossible to list them all.

THE MUSIC played was as varied as the instrumentation. "Icarus," associated with the Consort since its beginning ten years ago, was perhaps the best known of the tunes performed. The simple melody gives the players much range to improvise and harmonize around, building in intesity to the final high notes on the cello.

Guitarist Scott teamed with Foreman for a duet entitled "Cabaneros," a quiet piece for classical guitar and tablas.

There was some free-form playing in two tunes: "Ballad in 7-8," based on a Bela Bartok composition; and an entirely improvised piece between Winter, Rumple and Friesen which had the cellist bowing and plucking in a near-frenzy.

"Makin' Whoopie," an old standard, received a fresh treatment from Winter and Scott. It started slowly, almost symphonically, before the pair opened it up into a 2-4 walking tempo which really swung.

What stood out the most, though, were the songs based on animal calls, which Winter has taken to popular acceptance on the album, "Common Ground."

First was a new tune based on a whale song, as yet untitled. With a swirling light backdrop which suggested the depths of the ocean bottom, Winter played the contrabass to imitate the sound of the whale, then switched to soprano sax to embellish the melody.

IT WAS a haunting, moving piece which literally sent shivers down my back because of its beauty. My companion said the piece was not only pretty, but lonely.

Winter also managed to involve the audience in his music in the second half of the show but not in the usual hand-clapping manner. He had them literally howling and chanting.

"Wolf Eyes," started the participation; it's based on the cry of a timber wolf, which was played on tape before Winter's alto sax picked up the melody. Late in the song, he stopped playing and half-sang, half-howled the melody. Then he looked at the audience while the Consort continued playing and asked: "How long has it been since you've had a good howl?"

Who could resist such a temptation? Anyone who might have wandered into the auditorium at that moment would have been understandably shaken. Yet it was not a dumb or foolish thing; it helped make Winter's point, "through music, we celebrated the beingness of all creatures."

While the audience howled, the group slipped into "Minuit (Midnight Lullaby)," based on an African chant. Again, the enthusiasm and sincerity of the musicians won the audience over.

Finally, "Minuit" flowed into a fast African dance with Winter and Foreman playing a large wooden African xylophone. It was a hell of a way to end the night.

Sound and lighting are important to the performance, so Winter takes no chances: he travels around with his own sound and lighting technicians. It's a wise move.

Ultimately, sincerity and good sound and lighting don't insure a fine performance. This music does. All five members of the Consort (this edition had been together 6 months and Foreman was making his first appearance with the group) are flawless musicians who communicate well with each other.

Winter is a jazz performer who has become interested in classical forms. The other Consort members are classically-trained musicians who are now involved in jazz. Their backgrounds and talents blend harmoniuosly.

Don't try to put a label on this music. Listen to it and enjoy it. That's what music is really all about.

Argentina to be home for shah?

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP)—Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi wants to settle in Argentina and friends of the former Iranian ruler have contacted government officials here to find out whether he would be welcome, the newspaper La Nacion said Sunday.

Government sources would neither confirm nor deny the report.

The shah left Tehran Jan. 16, a few weeks before the takeover of the government by revolutionary followers of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. The monarch and his wife, Empress Farah, spent six days in Egypt and then flew to Morocco as guests of King Hassan II.

They and two of their children flew last Friday to the Bahamas, where Bahamian government officials said the monarch intends to stay for about three weeks.

Brazilian government sources Saturday denied reports that the shah was planning to settle in Brazil.

La Nacion said the Argentine military government of President Jorge R. Videla, before deciding whether the shah should be allowed to settle here, is consulting with other nations to test international reaction.

The newspaper, quoting unnamed diplomatic sources, said the former Iranian ambassador in Washington, Ardeshir Zahedi, had called on an unidentified Argentine to find out what reception the shah would get from the government.

Up in smoke

Marijuana penalty 'cease-fire' may suffer from legislative inaction

By MIKE CORN
Collegian Reporter

Pot legislation may go up in smoke if the Kansas Legislature doesn't pass the bill this session, according to Rep. Mike Glover (D-Lawrence), bill sponsor.

Glover said he may not introduce further legislation to reduce the penalty for possession of small amounts of marijuana, if either of two bills now in the Legislature is not passed.

"I'm not so sure I would bring it up again next year," he said. Glover has sponsored four other bills relating to the marijuana issue since 1973.

He said by sponsoring the bill he is not asking that marijuana be legalized, but is seeking a cease-fire in arrests for simple possession.

"If people are using drugs in private and are not bothering others, they should be left alone," he said.

"I have my constituents to represent. I don't think people in Lawrence want to see someone jailed for simple possession. And my personal knowledge dictates some action," Glover said.

TOO MUCH time and money is being spent by law enforcement agencies in dealing with the drug situation, Glover said.

"About 70 percent of all arrests in drugs are for simple possession of marijuana," he said. Under the proposed bill, a law enforcement officer would write a summons to appear in court if the amount of marijuana was less than an ounce.

Both pieces of legislation would reduce the penalty for possession of less than an ounce of marijuana to a class D misdemeanor, punishable by up to a $100 fine.

The original bill is in the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee and action is expected to be taken Tuesday, said Ed Reilly (R-Leavenworth), committee chairman.

This measure, which has been double referred, must pass in the committee and then would be sent to the Judiciary Committee for action before reaching the Senate floor.

Double referring of a bill is often a move to make it harder for a bill to reach the Senate floor, Glover said.

THE OTHER BILL containing marijuana legislation was originally concerned with procedure of records and reports of certain crimes. After the bill was sent to the House, an amendment to include marijuana provisions was tacked on by the committee, Glover said.

The amendment including the marijuana issue, was to provide a back-up measure in case the bill in the Senate does not pass. The bill now in the House could give the issue a second chance at becoming law.

If the bill in the House is passed, it would then be sent back to the Senate for voting there.

If either bill should reach the Senate floor, it is expected to be amended so that only the first offense would be a class D misdemeanor and all further violations would be a class A misdemeanor, Reilly said. Class A misdemeanor violations are punishable by a fine up to $2,500 and up to one year in jail.

Reilly said the marijuana issue is an emotional one and he does not know what the outcome of the committee action will be.

TWO LAW enforcement officials interviewed oppose the legislation.

"I am against it in any form," said Jack Armstrong, Sherman County sheriff and past president of the Kansas Sheriff's Association.

"I didn't feel that it would be any type of deterrent and would lead to more legalization of marijuana and other drugs," he said. "I think it (the penalty) should be stiffer on them, even on the first offense."

Also opposed to any changes in the marijuana laws is Charles Light, Miami County sheriff and current president of the sheriff's organization.

"I think it is fine the way it is. It gives the judge the right to fine any amount they want want up to $2,500," Light said.

Kansas Attorney General Robert Stephan said in general he is not opposed to the reduction of the penalty for possession of less than one ounce.

"However, I don't want to be in the position to advocate the use of any drug," Stephan said. "I don't think it is right for the pot smoker to go where they want to and get stoned."

He said he doesn't want to see people driving around smoking marijuana, because of possible risks involved, and added he also does not want people driving while drinking.

THE ORIGINAL BILL, in Senate committee, includes a provision which states if a person was given an ounce or less of marijuana, the transfer would not be considered a sale, provided there was no exchange of money or other goods.

"The House bill has taken the gift provision out, so a gift could be prosecuted as a sale," Glover said. "That section was taken out so as to make the bill as noncontroversial as possible."

Glover said this bill only applies to persons older than 18.

Possession of marijuana by a juvenile would still be subject to juvenile crime laws, Glover said. The amount the juvenile has in his possession would make no difference, and he would be subject to the discretion of the court, he said.

Written summons to 18-year-olds proposed by the bills would be similar to issuing a traffic ticket. It would contain the time and place the person is to appear in court and would require the person to sign the summons, promising to appear.

This procedure would be much like that used in writing traffic tickets.

If the person didn't appear as required, he could be charged with a class C misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of up to a $500.

THE ASSOCIATED Students of Kansas (ASK) student lobby group is lobbying for the bills. Members have appeared before the Federal and State Affairs Committee to testify in support of the legislation.

Kate Hofstetter, ASK administrative assistant, said she testified during the hearing on the bill and is now handing out sheets of information relating to the bill.

K-State students have been asked to write letters to legislators endorsing reduction of the penalties, said Emily Compton, K-State director of ASK.

She said she is not sure of the results of the letter-writing campaign and added that not much else is expected to be done.

Glover said although the vote for lessening penalties would be close, he does not foresee legalization of marijuana in the near future.

"I think eventually that (legislation) is the only way we are going to be able to control the use of marijuana," Glover said. "I don't think the country is ready for legalization."

Legalization may be possible in about 10 years, he said, but it will have to be done on the federal level rather than by individual states.

Documentary brings Newman to K-State

Edwin Newman, news correspondent for the National Broadcasting Company, is in Manhattan today working on a documentary about collegiate athletics. Newman arrived last night and will leave Tuesday.

Newman said he plans to interview Charles Corbin, professor of health physical education and recreation (HPER). Corbin is on sabbatical but plans to return to campus today, according to Don Kirkendall, HPER department head.

Little American Royal

Contest highlights Ag Science Day

By STANTON JANSSEN
Collegian Reporter

Having trained, cleaned and groomed their animals, K-State students demonstrated their livestock showing abilities in the 51st annual Little American Royal (LAR) Saturday afternoon. The contest was part of Ag Science Day held in conjunction with University Open House.

The contestants were matched with their University-owned animals at a drawing held earlier this year. They were then free to work with their animals in their spare time, preparing the animal and themselves for the contest. Contestants were judged half on grooming of themselves and their animals, and half on their ability to show the animal in the ring.

Beef cattle, dairy cattle, hogs, horses and sheep were shown in 21 classes. Each class had five to 10 contestants. Weber Arena was divided into four show rings, so that four classes could be shown at one time.

TO BREAK UP the intensity of the competition, intermission activities included a celebrities milking contest with Phil Hewett, K-State band director; Greg Musil, student body president; David Ames, associate professor of animal science; Ed Nealy, freshman in general and member of the K-State basketball team; and John Kadlec, assistant director of the athletic department.

The contestants were given a quart-size pop bottle, one of K-State's dairy cows and two minutes to get as much milk out of the cow and into the bottle as they could. Ames was declared the winner when he filled his bottle before the two minuutes were up.

Four $100 scholarships were also awarded, one to a Block and Bridle Club member, one to a Dairy Science Club member and two at large. These were based on the students' activities, scholarship and need.

Herdsman awards were presented to one contestant in each of the five categories for having put the most effort into preparing and presenting their animals for LAR.

BRENDA HUNDLEY, freshman in agricultural education, was crowned the 1979-80 Miss Agriculture at the Ag Award Assembly Sunday. Ann Bunck, junior in agronomy, was runner-up.

As 1979-80 Miss Agriculture, Hundley will speak to high school and college agriculture students, visit county fairs and career days and represent the College of Agriculture.

The first and second place showmen in each class advanced to the species championship class, where a grand champion and reserve champion in each of the five categories were selected.

The winner in each of the five categories were:

Beef—Connie Pelton, freshman in animal science and industry, grand champion; Warren Kroeker, senior in animal science and industry, reserve champion;

Dairy—Wayne DeWerff, junior in agriculture education, grand champion; Pam Van Horn, freshman in agronomy, reserve champion;

Hogs—John Toews, freshman in animal science and industry, grand champion; Brad Fuller, graduate in animal science and industry, reserve champion;

Horses—Debra Stigge, freshman in general business administration, grand champion; Julie Wells, freshman in accounting, reserve champion;

Sheep—Susan Gatz, senior in veterinary medicine, grand champion; Brad Rayl, junior in agronomy, reserve champion.

WHAT'S ORIENTEERING? It is the fastest growing sport in the U.S.A. Orienteering combines mental and physical ability in reading a map and negotiating a cross-country course in an unfamiliar area. Call AROTC, 532-6754 or 532-6755 for more information. (126)

PERSONAL

DEAR CULLION and Robin: Had a wild and crazy trip to K.C. and Gino. Always remember Pore Richard's and the French T's. We'll have to get together for another twenty questions road trip again. Gator and your Bonner Springs Detour Pal. (126)

BABY BRO—Shaving cream doesn't measure up to lima beans. Good try for a youngster! We'll save the shaving cream, so when you're all grown up—Just call us! Your thoughtful and loving sisters. (126)

CONGRATULATIONS RANDI Anderson on winning the Eva Ford Scholarship. We are very proud of you! Keep up the good work. Love ya, "Charlie's Angels." (126)

TO THE Kappa Delta houseboys: Thanks for all of you coming to Mother's Wednesday night. We appreciate it and we think you men are the greatest. Love, the Kappa Delta's. (126)

MOORE 5: Thanks for making the good times great and the not so good times better. Special thanks to AO for putting up with me for three years. Steve and Monty Python. (126)

DALE RAY: Zeroscope and twenty years ago, your forefather (with a little help from your foremother) brought forth on this continent a new child, conceived in Liberty (or was it Wichita?) and dedicated to the proposition that: you can pick your friends and you can pick your nose, but you can't pick your birthday! Happy 20th! Love, Dan and Kelly. (126)

LYNN, LANG and Gang. When my windshield stopped I lost my cabeese so I'll take your advise about the choo-choo if someone will be the cabander. But do we have to go to Atwood for our experience? The Phantom SM. (126)

SUZE—CONGRATS on your Ford Hall victory. Was it a presidential election or a beauty contest? Hey, I'm impressed. Jim. (126)

HEY BIG Bro—It's great being your lil' sis. I'm looking forward to all the things we'll do together. From banana malts to barn parties deluxe, I'm definitely interested. Love Kristi. (126)

SAFE RULES OF THE ROAD FOR JOGGING

1. Don't cross against lights.
2. Cross intersections at the cross walks.
3. Be careful jogging at night. Wear white or reflective sashes in order to be seen.
4. Be careful when and where you jog. There are a lot of strange animals and people in the world. A can of Halt may be just the thing to clip to your shorts.
5. Warn others of your approach by saying "excuse me" and then tell them which side you are going to pass on by saying, "On your left," etc.
6. Yield right of way to walkers.
7. Beware of cars.
8. Always jog facing the traffic and remember that although pedestrians have the right of way, you are no match for a car. Yield!
9. If jogging with a friend on public roads don't jog abreast. Don't split the road when a car approaches by you taking one side and your friend taking the other. Continue to face the traffic.
10. Pay particular attention at intersections and remember that joggers are pedestrians and are required by law to obey all pedestrian traffic laws.
11. Be courteous.
12. Jog with a friend.

Reactor bubble shows 'dramatic size decrease'

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)—Engineers achieved a "dramatic decrease" Monday in a gas bubble that has held a stranglehold on efforts to cool down the disabled Three Mile Island nuclear reactor.

A team of nuclear experts was checking instruments, examining measurements in an effort to determine whether the decrease was a permanent development.

"We believve it would be prudent to sit and wait a little while to make sure it's not coming back," said Richard Vollmer, assistant director for site analysis at the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Plant and federal officials said the hydrogren bubble had shrunk to a much safer size, with less threat of displacing the reactor's temperature had dropped significantly.

"I am certain it is cause for optimism," said Harold Denton, Nuclear Regulatory Commission operations chief. He said the bubble was showing "a dramatic decrease in size."

Denton and Vollmer both stressed that there was no hurry in atempting to bring the plant to a cold shutdown. "We're waiting to see how stable the systems are," Vollmer said.

DENTON ALSO said radiation levels of 30,000 roentgens an hour, far above human tolerance levels, had been measured in the reactor building.

Vollmer said this was the maximum radiation measured in the building, but that levels elsewhere, although lower, were still too high to allow people to enter the building and do any useful work.

"Decontamination and the ability to cope with the amount of radioactive fission products that are in the containment is going to be a long-term problem," Denton said.

He added that an instrument on an inactive water circulation system in the building had failed, apparently because of the high radiation, and officials had some concern about the possibility of further instrument failures.

LOCAL CIVIL defense officials, hopeful that the changes meant that the five-day crisis here had passed, nevertheless maintained efforts to prepare for a precautionary evacuation of 25,000 residents still within a five-mile radius of the plant.

But the signals were clear: The situation had improved substantially.

On Monday, technicians continued efforts to eliminate the bubble completely, chiefly by the method they have been using all along: letting the gas dissolve in the constantly circulating cooling water and then allowing it to escape from the water outside the reactor.

Technicians also studied options on exactly how to achieve the "cold shutdown" which would go a long way to ending the crisis.

George Troffer, an official with Metropolitan Edison, which operates the facility, said radioactive releases had been halted at the site.

AND NRC'S Denton said that radiation beaming from the plant was at low levels in a confined area.

The bubble, which had threatened an explosion that could have ripped the lid off the reactor dome and spewed radiation, began shrinking dramatically Sunday and continued throughout the day and night, Troffer said.

The latest developments gave officials more time to cool down the reactor. The critical time for a possible explosion from a chemical reaction within the reactor "has moved considerably out" from the five days Denton had predicted on Sunday, he said.

It was the most encouraging statement to date from the NRC since Wednesday's accident, which had led the governor to urge pre-school children and pregnant women to stay furhter than five miles from the plant and prompted an estimated 50,000 persons to voluntarily leave the Harrisburg area.

Elections today

The general election for the City Commission and the USD 383 Board of Education is between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. today.

All registered voters residing within the city limits may vote in both elections. Riley County residents living within USD 383 may vote only in the school board election.

All voters may cast their ballots at the usual polling places.

Atomic energy experts meet to compare notes

By ALAN WINKLER
Collegian Reporter

Fifty-three of the nation's leading atomic physicists will assemble at K-State Thursday through Saturday to compare notes, present research papers and assess progress being made in the development of atomic energy.

The physicists, who have been doing research funded by the Department of Energy (DOE), will come from federal laboratories and such universities as the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Harvard, Stanford and the University of California at Berkeley.

"These are the brightest minds in the field," said Charles Hathaway, head of the physics department.

The DOE chose K-State for the conference partly because of the University's central location, but also because K-State is a recognized leader in atomic fusion research, Hathaway said.

"We were one of the pioneers, if not the pioneer, in this course of study," Hathaway said. "We came from nowhere to dominance in this field.

"When we started things here we decided not to take the traditional approach to the study of fusion," he said. "Most places were studying only the nucleus of the atom. We decided to study the whole atom—the nucleus and the electron cloud surrounding it."

THE STUDY of the entire atom, instead of just its nucleus, is the distinction between atomic physics and nuclear physics.

"This allows us to be more flexible in our study of fusion," Hathaway said. "This had only been done as a secondary course of study at other universities."

To aid research, K-State installed an atomic accelerator in the basement of Cardwell Hall in 1969.

The accelerator greatly speeds the motion of atoms, simulating what would happen in fusion reactors without generating tremendous heat or radioactive wastes, Hathaway said.

Nuclear fusion is still in the early stage of development, and is not currently being used for commercial purposes.

The nuclear reaction which generates energy in the nation's nuclear power plants, including the one at Three Mile Island, Penn., which recently had a serious accident, is fission.

IN A FISSION reaction, the nucleus of the uranium atom is split, forming energy and radioactive waste products, according to Dean Eckoff, head of the nuclear engineering department.

The fusion reaction, which may someday be used in reactors, consists of combining atoms of hydrogen to form helium—a process which creates energy, yet does not give off radioactive isotopes (waste), according to Patrick Richard, one of two K-State physics professors who will be presenting papers at the conference.

Richard expressed concern about the feasibility of fusion as a source of energy, saying that confinement of the material is a problem.

"You must heat the atoms to 100 million degrees in order for the process to work," he said.

"Another problem is that we are so far away from practical application that we don't know all the problems that exist," he said.

James Macdonald, the other physics professor to present the results of his research this week, said he had been pessimistic about the use of fusion as an energy source until a few years ago.

"When I was in school, and after the first hydrogen bomb was exploded, talk went around that we would have fusion as an energy source in 20 years," he said. "It's been more than 20 years and we are still at least 30 years away. Fusion is something we understand only on an elementary level."

The DOE hopes to have a prototype of a thermonuclear fusion reactor by the year 2030, Richards said.

'Will teach attackers a lesson'

Amin the target of an air attack

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP)—President Idi Amin made a surprise appearance in Jinja after a raid Monday by Tanzanian jets on Uganda's second largest city, residents reported.

Startled townspeople at Jinja, 50 miles east of the Ugandan capital of Kampala, said shortly after the morning raid by two MiG-21 jet fighters Amin appeared and ordered panicking people to return to work.

According to one witness, Amin said, "We have shot down the enemy." A second said Amin vowed he would "teach the attackers a big lesson." He also reportedly inspected damage from the raid.

Exiles in Nairobi said they suspect Amin has been staying in Jinja, 50 miles east of Kampala, which is the headquarters of Libyan troops aiding Amin and site of the Magamaga Ordinance Depot.

THE INVADING force of Tanzanians and Ugandan exiles also bombed and shelled an oil depot in Kampala, residents and diplomats reported Monday.

They said a series of explosions in the early morning in the eastern industrial area were followed by billowing smoke from a diesel storage tank. The fire was reportedly put out by noon, and the city remained quiet for the rest of the day, the informants said.

In the Tanzanian capital of Dar Es Salaam, the Uganda National Liberation Front—formed by exiles to replace Amin if he falls—said the tank was blown up by saboteurs.

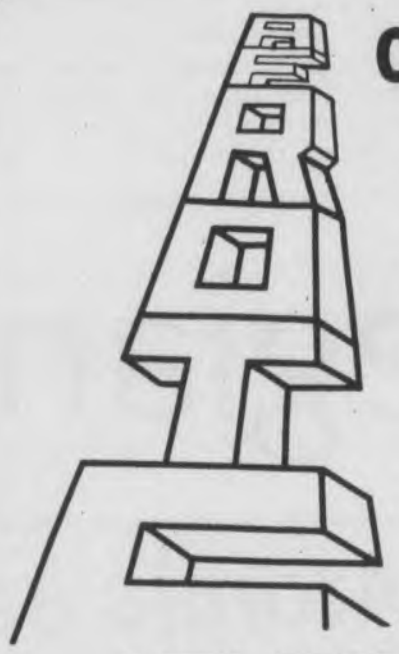
On Sunday, Tanzanian MiGs hit the main runway at Entebbe International Airport, 21 miles south of Kampala, in the first known Tanzanian air raid of the five-month war. There were reports that a Ugandan Boeing 707 was hit and the main runway severely damaged, but telephone links with Entebbe were down throughout the day Monday and it was not known whether the airport was still usable.

Residents ofJinja, on the rail-and-road route to Kenya, said the jets came low and dropped about three bombs. One fell just outside the Libyan Arab Uganda bank, injuring 15 persons, one seriously.

Other bombs reportedly fell at or near the Libyan barracks, but witnesses said they did little damage.

A man injured at the bank, contacted by telephone at Jinja Hospital, said the bomb exploded just after 9 a.m. He said the hospital was short of personnel and equipment.

"When we were rushed to the hospital, there were no nurses," he said. "I have not been treated fully. I was not given any blood and I will have to wait for dressing until tomorrow. I am not able to turn my head now. There is no water in the hospital," he said.



Broken-down vehicle exposes illegal aliens

JUNCTION CITY (AP)—Seventeen illegal aliens from Mexico in search of jobs were being held in the Geary County Jail Monday following their arrest in Junction City.

They were taken into custody Sunday and charged with being illegal aliens after a van transporting them broke down near Junction City. The driver was charged with transporting illegal aliens.

Police Sgt. Don Bobzien said the investigation started when another officer, Sgt. Mike Henny, reported that a large number of men jumped from the van after it broke down. He said the driver offered a repairman an extra $100 if he could complete repairs Sunday night.

Henny told Bobzien the men were planning to stay at a motel in the Junction City area. Bobzien said he found 14 men who could not speak English in one room, and they were taken into custody. He said the other four men were found in a separate room.

CLIMB THE LETTERS TO SUCCESS.

Success is a long way up. But after taking the first step, the second one comes easier.

Air Force ROTC can help you climb that ladder by providing a helping hand during college. It can enrich your college years and also help you with some of those school expenses at the same time.

You can compete for a two, three or four-year scholarship that pays $100 a month for college expenses, while it picks up the tab for all tuition, lab fees and books.

The AFROTC program has many extras. Like the Flight Instruction Program (FIP), where you qualify for Air Force flight training through a screening process and receive introductory flight instruction. You'll also learn about leadership, management; Air Force history and traditions, and much more through AFROTC. The program prepares cadets to take command after they graduate and are commissioned as Air Force officers.

The list goes on. Check it out today. See if you can climb the letters to success and meet the challenge and accept the commitment. You'll find that the Air Force is a great way to serve your country, and that AFROTC is a great way to get there from here.

Motion denied—Silkwood trial continues

OKLAHOMA CITY—Publicity about a nuclear reactor accident in Pennsylvania led to an unsuccessful mistrial motion Monday in the trial of the Karen Silkwood plutonium contamination case.

During a 90-minute, closed-door conference before the start of testimony, Kerr-McGee Corp. attorneys asked for the mistrial claiming jurors could not ignore "highly prejudicial" news accounts about the crippled Three Mile Island nuclear reactor near Harrisburg, Pa.

U.S. District Judge Frank Theis denied the motion and a source who attended the conference but asked not to be identified said Theis threatened to declare a mistrial if Silkwood attorneys mention the fact Kerr-McGee may have manufactured fuel in the Pennsylvania reactor.

Theis issued an expanded admonition to the jury Monday evening when court recessed, telling jurors to disregard any news they hear about "the nuclear reactor in Pennsylvania."

It was the judge's first specific reference to the Three Mile Island problems, although he admonished jurors Friday against exposing themselves to any "news about the nuclear industry."

Food prices: an unappetizing rise

Grocery prices rose just as fast in the first quarter of 1979 as they did in the same period last year, according to an Associated Press marketbasket survey which showed an increase of 1.8 percent during March alone.

The latest check indicated that meat prices continue to climb and, as people seek substitutes, the substitutes are getting more expensive as well.

The AP drew up a random list of 15 commonly purchased food and non-food items, checked the price at one supermarket in each of 13 cities on March 1, 1973 and has rechecked on or about the start of each succeeding month.

Government economists are predicting a food price boost of about 8.5 percent this year, but they concede that their forecasts depend upon natural factors like weather and on the success of President Carter's program to control inflation.

The AP also found that the average marketbasket bill at the checklist store increased 4.1 percent during the first three months of 1979. The boost during the same period of 1978 was 4 percent.

Carter awaits Soviet's summit reply

WASHINGTON—The United States expects final word this week from the Soviet Union on a new strategic arms limitation treaty and a summit meeting between President Carter and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev.

If the response to the latest U.S. treaty proposals is positive, the treaty signing could be held at a summit as early as May.

The site is still uncertain, partly because of Brezhnev's health problems. The Carter administration remains determined to see the summit held in the United States rather than in the Soviet Union.

The last two summits, in 1974, were held in Moscow and in Vladivostok, in Siberia.

With Brezhnev 72 years old and ailing, the Soviets would like to see him spared the ceremonial rigors of a Washington summit.

That could result in holding the meeting with Carter in Alaska or Hawaii, but no final decision has been taken even by the U.S. side.

Teamster strike countered by lockout

WASHINGTON—Thousands of auto workers were given short shifts Monday and the prospect of product shortages and other disruptions loomed as a trucking industry lockout of 300,000 Teamsters took hold.

The lockout, ordered by industry executives after the union launched a limited weekend strike over a contract dispute, was expected to halt a sizable portion of interstate shipments of general freight—from fresh foods to factory parts—within days.

The auto industry was the first to feel the impact of the industry shutdown. The nation's two largest automakers, General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co., said an estimated 48,000 assembly line workers were being sent home early Monday because of parts shortages, and further production cutbacks were imminent.

A spokesman for Trucking Management Inc. (TMI), which had ordered the lockout Sunday, said its more than 500 member firms account for 85 percent of the unionized interstate freight business.

The spokesman, Norman Walker, said "virtually all" of TMI's members were complying with the lockout—a tactic used in labor disputes in which employers refuse to let their employees work.

Opinions

Uncle Sam wants you

Only the government would consider a program requiring people to volunteer.

Such a scheme is reminiscent of a scene from an old cavalry movie when the sergeant says, "Whoever wants to volunteer for this death-defying mission take one step forward" and the entire line steps backwards—except one, the lucky volunteer. It's effective but not exactly altruistic.

A private national study group, the Committee for the Study of National Service, is seriously looking at the possibilities for a national service program and will issue its report next month. The committee is asking for the creation of a huge voluntarism program at the federal level. Whether or not this would be a mandatory program is unsettled.

A national service program would most likely involve persons 18 to 24 years old. They would be required to fill the nation's 3 million jobs needing volunteer workers.

Volunteer workers are needed because they would command lower pay, perhaps less than minimum wage. Another reason they are needed is to fill the holes left in the Army Reserves and National Guard since the end of the draft. Others support a national service program because they believe the draft won't be restored without including some broader program of civilian-military duty.

A Yale professor of law questions the constitutionality of such a program suggesting it would violate the 13th amendment which bars slavery.

Can compulsory non-military duty be compared to slavery?

Perhaps it is better compared to the feudal system of vassalage. In this "program," the vassal is granted use of the land in return for allegiance to the ruler. In a national service program, young people would be granted use of the land (allowed to live without imprisonment) in return for allegiance to the nation (one year of service to the government).

The volunteer force of the United States is dwindling. This is partly because mothers of school-aged children, who used to fill a large number of volunteer positions, are being lost to higher-income jobs and careers which leave little time for volunteer service.

Everyone agrees someone is needed to fill volunteer positions but nobody is willing to take the time for such public service.

Solutions to the problems of establishing a national sense of duty cannot be confused with solutions to problems surrounding military duty. Military duty, presumably, can be confined to the young and physically fit. Age or physical requirements are unnecessary, if not inappropriate, for a discussion of volunteer duty.

Lack of volunteers cannot be solved with talk of compulsion. It's a contradicton in terms and only offers contradictory solutions.

If the government wants to set up a volunteer program offering incentives for volunteer workers of ALL AGES, then a spark of the spirit of service could be ignited. Forcing youths to volunteer is only asking for resistance—voluntary resistance.

Inflation fighters

Most of us complain about inflation, but few of us do much about it. Not so with congressmen; they plan to give themselves a $50-a-day tax deduction to offset their living costs.

Because of the high cost of living in Washington D.C., a House Ways and Means subcommittee intends to introduce legislation that would allow congressmen to deduct $50 a day for each day Congress is in session, and some days when it's not. The public servants also could claim weekends and recesses of four days or less. Or, if they attend committee hearings when the House of Representatives and Senate are not in session, they can graciously deduct another $50.

It's estimated a congressman could deduct between $13,000 and $14,000 a year under the proposal.

Who said government couldn't deal with inflation?

ALTHOUGH THE action would cost the American pocketbook about $2.5 million in taxes, the increased purchasing power of 535 public officials (435 representatives and 100 senators) should offset that drawback.

Such an increase in purchasing power is not only deserved, but needed. The measly $57,500 salary a congressman receives doesn't allow him to maintain suitable living quarters in both Washington and back home. After all, it's tough trying to keep up with both the Joneses and the Kennedys.

The $3,000 deduction congressmen are now allowed to claim was fine in 1952 when it was instated. But, have you checked out what a three martini lunch costs these days?

Of course a lot of the congressmen have outside income to help defray the costs of being a public official. Many are owners of private businesses or stock holders in corporations. Some companies and elite individuals have made it easier for the struggling congressmen by offering them money, seemingly for no particular reason. For example, why would the tobacco industry be giving campaign money to Kansas Republican Keith Sebelius?

SOME PEOPLE, like Tongsun Park, get over-generous and are stopped from contributing to the needy pockets of our congressmen. The reason is there's a limit on how much a congressman takes, but not on how much he makes. A nice rule to remember if you ever run for Congress.

There is one limit. A congressman can't make more than $25,000 in speech fees. But unless he's a well-known and much-sought-after speaker like Jim Jefferies, he won't make near that anyway.

As you can tell, congressmen are hard pressed to work within their monetary limitations. But, then aren't we all?

Congress should extend their tax deduction to all of us. Sure, the cost of living in Washington is high. But, hey, things are tough all over.

So write your congressman and let them know how you feel. It will only cost you 15 cents, and it won't cost them anything to write you back.

Child care—not babysitting

Editor,

The article concerning the Infant and Child Care Center (March 27) implied the only function of the program is low-cost child care. As professionals in the field of Early Childhood Education, we find it an inaccurate portrayal of the professional services provided by our trained staff to K-State student families.

The Infant and Child Care Center is a highly sophisticated research and teacher training facility, and an integral component of the academic program in the Department of Family and Child Development.

We are not a "baby-sitting service."

The request for additional funding from the Student Senate Finance Committee reflects the belief that children of student families deserve only the best of child care, and Student Governing Association (SGA) should be willing to partially subsidize this campus service. For many student families, this low cost service is critical to economic survival and to maintaining student status.

The issue before SGA is one of priorities. Do we value the presence of student families in the student body as much as the other services and activities supported through student funds? We are totally committed to these student families, and invite SGA to join us in that commitment.

Death penalty leaves Legislature

Gov. Carlin will decide fate of bill

TOPEKA (AP)—In what one of its main supporters called "a historic moment in Kansas," the Legislature sent to Gov. John Carlin Monday a bill reinstating the death penalty in this state.

If Carlin signs the bill, or allows it to become law without his signature, murderers could be sentenced to die in Kansas for the first time since a 1972 U.S. Supreme Court decision struck down this state's previous capital punishment law.

No one has been executed in Kansas in nearly 14 years. The state's gallows at Lansing were dismantled a decade ago.

The bill went to the governor when the House voted, 78-47, to adopt a conference committee report approved last week by the Senate, 21-19. That was the first time the Senate has voted for capital punishment in the seven years since Kansas' law was invalidated by the Supreme Court.

House approval came despite pleas by anti-death penalty legislators to reject the Senate's expansion of the bill to include felony murders, and a prediction Carlin would veto it.

CARLIN'S APPROVAL or acquiescence are not a sure thing, since the governor personally opposes capital punishment.

However, he pledged during his successful election campaign last fall that if the Legislature sent him a constitutional bill, he would not veto it.

"I don't think the battle is over," said Sen. Don Allegrucci (D-Pittsburg) a staunch death penalty foe, who said he has talked to Carlin and plans to talk to him again. "He has serious reservations about that felony murder provision," Allegrucci said.

The Senate broadened the bill's application to make those convicted of murders which occur in the commission of a felony, such as armed robbery, subject to the death penalty, as well as those convicted of premeditated, first-degree murder.

Carlin has publicly stated his opposition to expanding the death penalty's application under the bill. Whether that will cause him to veto it remains speculative, however.

POLLS HAVE consistently showed a substantial majority of Kansans support reimposition of the death penalty in some form. If Carlin were to veto this bill, regardless of his philosophical or technical reasons, it would be viewed by most as damaging to him politically.

However, his press secretary, Bill Hoch, said there were 36 telephone calls relating to the death penalty issue received on the governor's new toll-free line which went into operation Monday, and 33 of them opposed reimposition.

The bill would make death an alternative punishment to life in prison in cases of first-degree murder and felony murder. One jury would decide guilt or innocence of the accused person, and a second jury would determine the penalty, taking into account aggravating and mitigating circumstances before reaching a decision on the penalty.

Death would be by lethal injection under the bill, a change from Kansas' prior law, under which those sentenced to die were put to death by hanging.

The last executions in Kansas were in 1965, and included Perry Smith and Richard Hickok, the convicted killers of the Clutter family.

Those killings became the subject of a best-selling book, "In Cold Blood," which was made into a movie.

Carlin's personal objections to the death penalty are not altered by the Legislature's action sending him the bill, Hoch said.

"As he said before, he has not changed his thinking," Hoch said of the governor. "We will review it closely as to the constitutionality and then make a decision."

Carlin's decision most certainly will come sometime after the Legislature reaches first adjournment at the end of this week, and April 23 when it returns for three days of cleanup work.

Big Lakes Development Center

Mentally retarded helped locally

By LARRY RIBORDY
Collegian Reporter

Just because a person is mentally retarded doesn't mean that he has to be institutionalized; he can be served in the community and through group homes, according to Big Lakes Developmental Center Executive Director Jim Shaver.

There has been a change in philosophy in the field of mental retardation in the last 15 years, Shaver said, and the Big Lakes Developmental Center planned for Manhattan is just one of 22 centers in Kansas involved in group home programs.

The Big Lakes Developmental Center has started a fund raising campaign to raise money to construct a new group home in Manhattan for developmentally disabled adults, Shaver said.

Big Lakes is a private, non-profit organization which serves the developmentally disabled in Riley, Geary, Pottawatomie and Clay counties, Shaver said. He said 90 percent of the clients are mentally retarded. The agency provides services for adults and children, he said.

"We (Big Lakes) provide adult residential, adult vocational and children's program services for the four-county area," Shaver said.

SHAVER SAID due to the limited capacity, Big Lakes usually has a list of 10 to 15 individuals awaiting residential services. He said many of the individuals are in state institutions.

Shaver said the new group home would provide services to six developmentally-disabled adults in a normalized environment. He said the services would include a diagnostic service to determine skills and develop a plan to teach the skills they need.

Shaver said a normalized environment simply means a family-style setting. He said in institutions, the clients are marched to meals and everyone goes to bed at ten. He said the group homes allow the clients to come home from work, watch TV and relax.

SHAVER SAID the fund-raising campaign will go on until June 1, and has a goal of $60,000. He said the project would consist of a mailing campaign in the four-county area, radio talks, contacting different businesses and contacting sororities and fraternities. He said they (Big Lakes) would appreciate the help of any organized group on campus.

In addition to the $60,000 fund raising project, Big Lakes was awarded $200,000 in federal money in 1971.

"The $200,000 is being used to construct a training facility for the physically handicapped," Marvin Butler, director of community development, said. The facility is presently under contract and is being built in the Industrial Park area, he said.

'You have to put danger in perspective'

Small, everyday radiation possible to control

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

How much radiation are you absorbing every day? How much of it could you avoid?

The accident at the Three Mile Island nuclear plant near Harrisburg, Pa., points up the need to weigh the benefits and the risks of radiation and to eliminate uncessary exposure.

The average American gets 100 to 120 millirems of natural background radiation a year. This includes radiation from elements in the earth, from outer space and from substances like potassium 40 in the body.

We also are exposed to man-made radiation, most of it in the form of medical and dental X-rays. Television sets emit a tiny amount of radiation and some smoke detectors contain radioactive materials.

We face a different, but still potentially dangerous, kind of radiation from the sun and from microwaves like the ones in ovens.

The risks from everyday, low-level radiation are minimal compared to the threat posed by a nuclear accident. But scientists do not know whether there is any level of radiation, no matter how small, which is absolutely safe.

Dr. Solomon Michaelson of the University of Rochester Medical Center adds: "We're always surrounded by radiant energy...You have to put (the danger) in perspective as to what society really wants."

Here is a look at some radiation sources and ways to minimize risk:

SUN

Radiation from the sun's infrared and ultraviolet rays is particularly dangerous because it is directly absorbed in the skin. The Food and Drug Administration says radiation from the sun is the leading cause of skin cancer. Scientists say 60 percent of the ultraviolet rays striking the Earth reach the surface between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. If you must get a tan, try to do so before 10 or after 2.

X-RAYS

Experts say 90 percent of the man-made radiation we face comes from diagnostic X-rays. You can absorb up to 20 millirems from a dental X-ray and 30 from a chest X-ray. To be safe, the FDA suggests:

—Don't decide on your own to have an X-ray like the ones you get at a mobile unit for detecting tuberculosis. There are safer and more effective tests.

—Don't insist on an X-ray when you visit your doctor or dentist. Let him or her be the judge. Tell your doctor or dentist about all previous X-rays; you may not need a fresh set.

—If you are a woman and are pregnant or think you're pregnant, tell your doctor or dentist. Radiation may affect the fetus. If you're male and of child-producing age or younger, ask for a lead shield to protect the reproductive organs.

SMOKE DETECTORS

Ionization chamber detectors contain small amounts of radioactive material. This does NOT mean they are dangerous, says the National Fire Prevention and Control Administration. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission performs a radiation safety analysis on all new models.

TELEVISION SETS

X-rays may be produced when electrons, accelerated by high voltage, strike an obstacle while traveling in a vacuum such as the one in a TV tube. Most TV sets do not give off any measurable level of radiation and a federal standard limits allowable TV radiation.

Look at the back of the TV before you buy for a label or tag certifying that the set meets the federal standard. When your set needs repairs, call a qualified serviceman. The primary cause of inreased X-ray emission from TV sets is adjustment of operating voltages to levels above the manufacturer's recommendation.

MICROWAVE OVENS

The microwaves in an oven are generated by an electron tube inside the cabinet. They bounce back and forth and are absorbed by the food, causing water molecules in the food to vibrate and produce heat.

The FDA sets a strict limit on the amount of radiation permitted to leak from the oven wall. It also requires ovens to have two interlock systems to prevent them from operating if the door is not securely fastened.

To avoid trouble, do not have the oven rewired so that the interlock system will not operate. If you suspect your oven is leaking, contact your state health department for a possible test. Do not try to test the oven yourself. The FDA says that a number of the devices sold for do-it-yourself tests "are inaccurate and unreliable."

Boarding house 'burns like paper'

FARMINGTON, Mo. (AP)—A rural boarding house built of concrete and granite "burned like paper" Monday in a roaring fire that killed 25 residents and sent the building's roof crashing down onto their bodies, authorities said.

Thirteen others survived.

Residents of the Straughan Wayside Inn included 13 persons placed there by Farmington State Hospital, which deals in mental disorders and treatment of alcoholism and drug abuse, authorities said.

"I think they lost some of their people," said St. Francois County Coroner Ted Boyer, referring to the hospital's patients.

Fire Chief Bob Oder said most of the victims died of smoke inhalation before the roof collapsed onto their beds, raining fiery debris on firefighters trying to get through to the residents.

"It was an inferno is what it was. Unbelievable. The structure of the building was granite, but it burned like paper."

The fatal blaze, which began around 5 a.m. came only hours after another boarding house fire which killed nine persons in Connellsville, Pa.

Theater group delivers message on brotherhood

By BETSY DONNELLY
Collegian Reporter

Brotherhood and family unity was the theme for the play "Brother, Brother, Brother, Mine," presented Sunday evening at the Douglass Community Center by the Howard University Theater Expxerience from Washington, D.C.

The play, written by Kelsey Collie, takes place in New Orleans around the turn of the century. The story concerns a black family who is reunited after several years of separation.

"The family is the most important social unit in our society," said Collie, assistant dean of fine arts at Howard. "It has the strongest emotional ties of any group and the longest life span. Young black people—all people—should be aware of this fact, and be reminded that togetherness begins here."

"Brother, Brother, Brother, Mine" is conveying a message not only to the black family unit, but to every family, he said.

"This is a play about the separation and reunion of a family," said Vera Katz, director. "This is a play about the strengtn of kinship and the joy that linking to each other can bring. This is a play that shows that even though outer forces once drowned this family, through their love and understanding of each other, they are now all found. May we never be lost again."

The play, written in the spring of 1978, is based on the works of Shakespeare.

"I have always enjoyed Shakespeare's 'Comedy of Errors,'" Collie said. "This is really the black version of that play."

"Brother, Brother, Brother, Mine" is presently touring Kansas, Missouri and Colorado, he said. They have just finished presenting the play in New York and the Washington area.

Collie, who has written 17 other plays, said he plans to take the play to the Dundalk International Maytime Festival in Ireland this spring.

"I attended the festival two years ago and took the President's award with another presentation. It was the first time that award had been given," he said.

"Brother, Brother, Brother, Mine " has drawn rewarding and enthusiastic responses for Collie, and all who are associated with it.

"This is a message about brotherhood. We are all brothers under one God," he said.

Local Moslem students vote in favor of Islamic Republic

Moslem students cast their votes Friday in an international referendum to officially declare their acceptance of the new government of Iran.

Approximatley 60 K-State students traveled in 18 cars to the Omar Mosque in Kansas City where they showed their support for Ayatollah Khomeini's Islamic republic. The students are members of the Moslem Student Association (MSA).

"We took a long time to get there because we drove through Lawrence and other cities along the way," said Abbas Aminmansour, MSA member. "We wanted to show our banners and signs on the cars."

Once the group arrived at the Mosque and voted they waited until the polls closed at 8 p.m to obtain the results.

"When the vote was over, the box was opened and the papers were counted in front of us," he said. "They even asked if we would like to come up and supervise the counting.

"Of 1,144 votes cast in Kansas Ctiy 1,027 were positive, 109 were negative and 8 were neutral," Aminmansour said.

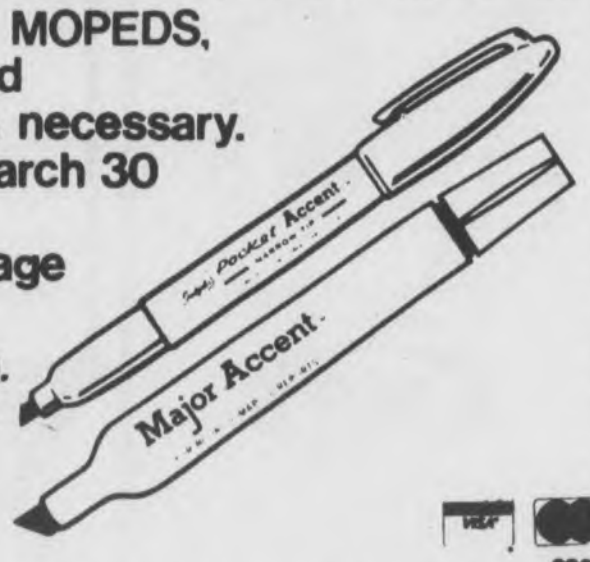
"If someone voted negative they had to explain what type of govenment they wanted," Aminmansour said. "Of the negative votes counted, most asked for just a republic government instead of an Islamic republic. One voter wanted a monarchy and another wanted communism," he said.

Overall voting in Kansas City was 89.7 percent positive and voting was similar nationwide.

"It was months ago that the people 'voted' through demonstrations that they wanted the Islamic republic. This vote just showed the world that the people officially accept it," Aminmensour said.

"The requirements to vote were only to be Iranian and 16 years of age." 18.7 million Iranians were eligible to vote," he said.

It is estimated that 18 million of them voted for the government. Scattered worldwide returns showed 99.7 percent of the voters in favor of an Islamic republic, according to an Associated Press story.



Ayatollah Khomeini triumphantly proclaimed Iran an Islamic republic on Sunday, announcing that the million of "yes" votes had created the nation's first "government of God."

'Dream come true'

Begin visit starts normal relations

CAIRO, Egypt (AP)—Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin got his first taste of normal relations with Egypt Monday and said he was "deeply moved," but the Egyptian reaction to his visit here appeared strained and cool.

Several government officials and Egyptian reporters accompanying the prime minister grumbled that the Israeli leader should have waited until the Arab anger over the peace treaty had abated. They expressed concern about the economic and political sanctions imposed on Egypt over the weekend and the departure of Arab ambassadors from Cairo.

"Why did he have to come now?" asked one.

But for Begin, the trip was a momentous occasion that signaled a new era of reconciliation after four wars and 30 years of open hostility.

He termed the visit "a dream come true" and said he was visiting to convince Egyptians of Isreal's wish for a lasting peace.

"It is a great day for Israel," Begin told reporters after hopping from an Egyptian army helicopter that flew him to the 4,000-year-old pyramids of Giza.

His bald head beading with perspiration from the blistering 105-degree heat, Begin climbed the first few tiers of the Pyramid of Kephren, surrounded by aides, security men and Egyptian guides and officials.

FOR ISRAELIS who would later watch it on television, it would be a moment of intense emotion.

"When there is peace, we will go to the pyramids," Israeli parents have often told their children.

But the greeting was in sharp contrast to the joyous greeting President Anwar Sadat received in Jerusalem in November 1977, when enthusiasm for peace was at its peak.

There were no huge, placard-waving crowds that gave Sadat a tumultuous welcome home from his treaty-signing trip only two days ago.

Sadat himself avoided the welcoming ceremonies, sending instead his Vice President Hosny Mubarak and a few cabinet leaders to greet Begin at the airport. Officials said protocol did not require Sadat's presence since Begin is not a head of state.

Even so, the first state visit by an Israeli prime minister was shown live on Egyptian television and 27 small Israeli flags flew at Cairo airport for Begin's arrival. The flags were hauled down before Begin's closed-car motorcade was out of sight.

The only sign of real warmth came from a crowd of about 200 persons who gathered outside a synagogue in downtown Cairo and chanted, "Shalom, Begin," as the Israeli leader's motorcade arrived. Begin joined the members of Egypt's tiny Jewish community in their afternoon prayers.

Grenades hit embassy in Beirut; officials unharmed by attack

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—Two rocket-propelled grenades hit the U.S. Embassy on Monday, but officials said no one was hurt and damage was minor. The attack came amid increasing Arab hostility to the United States for its role in arranging the Egyptian-Iraeli peace treaty.

U.S. Ambassador John Gunther Dean was reported to be having lunch elsewhere at the time of the attack, which occurred at 2:45 p.m. His office is located on the same side but above the office hit.

In 1976 the American ambassador to Lebanon, Francis Melloy, was assassinated in Beirut's leftist quarter in an unsolved murder.

Eyewitnesses said two young unidentified men fired the grenades Monday from high in a building 150 yards from the embassy that overlooks the Mediterranean coast in West Beirut. The men escaped in a small car, the witnesses said.

Palestinian leaders have threatened to attack "American interests" in the Middle East because of the key U.S role in bringing about an Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

BUT NONE of the Palestinian factions based here claimed responsibility for the assault, and sources inside the movement dismissed the incident as unworthy, both in scope and purpose.

The rocket-propelled grenades, a common weapon in the militia arsenals of Lebanon, exploded outside a first-floor window and penetrated an empty office on the fifth floor at the front of the eight-story building.

"We were very fortunate no one was in the room at the time," an embassy security officer told reporters.

It has been learned from reliable Lebanese sources that the government here won an agreement last week from Palestinians and leftist Lebanese groups to refrain from attacking U.S. citizens or property in Beirut because of the already fragile security situation.

Yasser Arafat, leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization, vowed last week to "finish off" American interests in the region, and Sunday his political adviser predicted "days of fire and brimstone." Longtime observers of the guerrilla movement tend to downplay these threats as primarily rhetoric for internal consumption.

U.S. nuclear accident prompts international concern, protests

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Anti-nuclear groups staged demonstrations Monday in Japan and West Germany while a Soviet commentator said the U.S. nuclear accident that prompted the protests was a consequence of American capitalistic "energy monopolies" hunting for profits at all costs.

In the southern West German state of Baden-Wuerttemberg, officials disclosed they have issued special iodine pills to people living within a mile and a half of nuclear plants.

State Interior Minister Guntram Palm said the pills would reduce the amount of radioactive iodine ingested in the crucial minutes between a possible accident and an evacuation order.

Opponents of nuclear power held peaceful demonstrations in Hamburg, West Germany, and Ikata and Shaga, Japan.

The governments of Japan, France, the Netherlands and West Germany sent observers to the troubled Three Mile Island plant in Pennsylvania despite their insistence similar incidents could not occur at their facilities.

However, a leading member of the ruling Social Democratic Party of West Germany said the country must re-evaluate its plans for nuclear power expansion and suspend work on a new plant similar to the U.S. facility.

JAPAN ORDERED an immediate inspection of its nuclear facilities, and Japan and West Germany scheduled emergency meetings to consider nuclear safety.

In Russia, nearly one-third of the 15-minute evening program "Today in the World" was devoted to a detailed account of the mishap, including film footage of the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant and an evacuation center for area residents.

Commentator Anatoly Ovsyannikov said "the accident at the atomic power station in Pennsylvania had evoked profound concern and continues to alarm the American public.

"Special indignation has been evoked by the fact that the energy monopolies, in chasing after profits, are not taking proper measures ensuring the safety of the functioning of nuclear power stations."

UPC KALEIDOSCOPE abounds with great diversity within the film medium, attempting to expand the campus community's horizons through new and/or innovative films. The committee also sponsors the annual amateur photography contest and exhibition.

Baker hopes practice will end hitting woes

Even after the K-State baseball team polished off its 12th straight win two weeks ago, Coach Dave Baker wasn't as optimistic as other undefeated coaches might have been.

Sports

"You can never be satisfied. You can just never get optimistic," Baker said at the time.

Although Baker said he knew his players were capable at the plate, he wasn't convinced the team was hitting well enough to be a strong conference contender. And he was right.

Last weekend, the Wildcats met Iowa, their toughest opponents so far, in a four-game home series and came away whipped. The 'Cats lost all four games, three in shutouts, and went 21 innings without scoring.

Today the 'Cats have their last chance to get into the swing before the start of Big 8 play against the Kansas Jayhawks Friday.

K-State might have a tough go as they meet Emporia State, last year's NAIA champions, in a doubleheader at 1:30 p.m. at Frank Myers Field.

"We need to take more hitting practice and make some adjustments on how each guy is hitting," Baker said Tuesday. "Every player has weaknesses and Iowa did a good job of pitching."

Even with the recent lack of hitting, K-State still has a respectable 113 runs batted in, led by junior Don Hess' 17. Hess also tops the home runs list with three in 22 games.

Freshman Don Waller has the team's best pitching record, 3-0, followed by sophomore Tom Harvey's 3-1.

Walton-less Blazers still alive

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Have the Portland Trail Blazers learned to win without Bill Walton?

Two years ago Walton led the Blazers to their first National Basketball Association championship. Last year, injuries crippled the red-haired center late in the season and the Blazers made a quick exit during the playoffs.

This season, with Walton on the sidelines, Portland struggled along below .500 until the last month, when the addition of rookie Mychal Thompson to the starting lineup helped the Blazers win 10 of their last 12 games. With one week to go before the playoffs, Portland holds a 2½-game lead over surprising San Diego in the race for the final berth in post-season play.

Three of the four division titles are also up for grabs in the final week of the regular season.

Defending champion Washington is the only team to have clinched a division race. The Bullets lead Philadelphia by eight games in the Atlantic Division and their 52-25 record is the best in the league.

SAN ANTONIO leads Houston by 1½ games in the Central Division, with Atlanta 2½ games out. Kansas City holds a slender margin of one-half game over Denver in the Mid-west Division, while Seattle leads Phoenix by two games in the Pacific Division.

The Eastern Conference playoff teams are Washington, San Antonio, Philadelphia, Houston, Atlanta and New Jersey.

Only Seattle and Phoenix are assured of playoff berths from the Western Conference, while Kansas City, Denver, Los Angeles and Portland have the inside track for the other places.

The shattering of the dumb jock image.

It's becoming an important project in American athletics, and believe me, it's working.

Part of the intensive propaganda campaign to change the image includes advertising. The United Way ads during football games are one example. They show that pro football players do more than run into each other at full speed. And, they leave the viewer with a warm feeling about these wonderful human beings.

Ditto with some other ads.

After all, who wouldn't be filled with joy upon hearing Larry Csonka ed "a poem about deodorants."

The commercial shows that indeed, these guys are really bright, intelligent creatures. I went out and bought three cases of Old Spice deodorant as soon as Larry told me the Old Spice stick was the only way.

Incidently, he's right—all wet and sticky it's not.

ANOTHER highly credible ad is Pete Rose's. I have a friend who took up Pete's advice and went out to "smell like a man."

He was thrown out of all of his classes after running five miles a morning and refusing to shower. He thought he smelled like a man but he came closer to smelling like a horse. A very sick horse. A dead horse.

He was given a WP (withdraw putrid).

Lest you think TV is the only medium which has the dumb advertisements, check your national news or sports magazine for the ad in which all of your favorite athletes pose in their skivs (the assistant sports editor's favorite ad, by the way).

However, TV is the biggest offender. A conflict in the minds of thousands of young potential athletes is probably fueled by TV ads.

As high school and junior high coaches drill their little minds with training rules and the evils of drinking, the kids watch their idols wallow in beer on 17 commercials an evening.

I WONDER what goes through a kid's mind when he sees a United Way ad and thinks "I wanna grow up and be just like him," and then sees the same guy in beer ad and his dad says "you sure don't wanna grow up to be like him."

Maybe it's not quite fair to say TV is helping to cause these conflicts and hold up the dumb jock image.

After all, even Albert Einstein would have looked stupid if he went on TV after suffering 27 concussions.

Of course, his credibility would have been hampered by a commercial which portrayed him finishing his Theory of Relativity and suddenly having Blue Ribbon on his mind.

Service reduces struggle

Handicapped get help with studies

Disabled students are having their handicaps lessened.

With the aid of Handicapped Services, which is funded through grants from the federal government and money from the Kansas Legislature, handicapped K-State students can receive help with their studies, according to Jane Rowlett, coordinator for Handicapped Services.

"The program is designed to serve special student needs," Rowlett said. "We serve both the temporary and permanently handicapped."

"When a student that is handicapped comes in, we make a needs assessment," she said. "We go over the person's schedule from the time he arrives on campus until he leaves. This is to determine the necessary assistance he may need."

The needs of the handicapped student are evaluated in terms of access to the classroom and in terms of working in an academic program.

Some of the services provided include typed manuscripts and interpreters for the deaf, tape recorded texts and readers for the blind and written notes froom class sessions, Rowlett said.

The service is designed to provide equal opportunity for the handicapped student. For example, if a wheelchair student should enroll in a class on the second floor of a building without an elevator, the coordinator works with the department head and instructor to change the class to a practical place, Rowlett said.

"We have been very successful in doing that," she said. "Moving laboratory classes is obviously a problem. And as yet we do not have a modified lab to fulfill that need."

If and when the lab situation arises, she said the University will be responsible in accommodating the student so he or she is able to participate in the class.

"We provide walking assistance for blind students until they learn their route," Rowlett said. "Blind students may call the center to receive assistance in going to unfamiliar places on campuus."

Student aids are hired through the Academic Skills Center to serve as readers, interpreters, notetakers and walkers.

Special enrollment is another of the services offered to the handicapped student, Rowlett said.

"Students who can't enroll because of their handicap by the regular procedure are assisted by my office," she said.

"My primary concern is that individual students have equal opportunity to participate in various activities and programs offered at K-State," she said.

The number of handicapped students on campus has increased at least 100 percent in the last two years, Rowlett said.

"We are going to see more and more handicapped people in higher education," Rowlett said. "One factor contributing to this growth is seciton 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 which requires post secondary education institutions receiving federal funding to provide 'program assessibility' for handicapped students."

Nichols reaches crossroads today

By SUE FREIDENBERGER
Staff Writer

The end may be near for Nichols Gymnasium.

K-State President Duane Acker will choose today between three alternatives discussed Monday by the University Consultative Committee. If Acker follows the advice of the committee, Nichols may be demolished in the near future.

The "collective" opinion of the committee was to raze the empty shell of the gym, a committee member said. The two other alternatives discussed were a feasibility study and preservation of the structure.

State Senator Wint Winter (R-Ottawa), chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, said last week the University might get $10,000 for a feasibility study—or nothing at all. Acker said Tuesday, however, that Winter had given the University three proposals to consider. Acker took those proposals to the committee Monday.

Last year, the Legislature appropriated $45,000 for a feasibility study of Nichols. Because of a technical problem with the bill, K-State never received the money, and the Senate Ways and Means Committee decided Friday to scrap the $45,000 plan.

WINTER SAID the $45,000 appropriated by the 1978 Legislature was too much. He said he thought the Legislature would be willing to appropriate $10,000 this year for a study.

In addition to the $10,000 feasibility study, two other proposals were brought up for discussion Monday, but it was not made clear whether any of the proposals have been discussed by the Ways and Means Committee.

The second proposal is to raze the building. Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities, estimated the cost to demolish Nichols at $125,000.

The third proposal was to appropriate $50,000 to landscape and preserve the site, according to Greg Musil, student body president.

Winter said he favors preservation and landscaping.

"He (Winter) asked us to respond to these proposals," Acker said. "He asked me to give reactions of the University committee on these."

When asked if he was going to pick one of the three or just give the basic reactions of the committee, Acker said, "I wouldn't be fulfilling my duty to Sen. Winter if I wasn't fairly specific."

Curt Cunningham, student member of the Long Range Planning Committee, said Acker asked for "collective wisdom" but "all he got was collective opinion." This was a result, he said, of many of the committee members not having complete technical information about the alternatives to give anything but opinion.

Both Acker and Musil agreed that the general feeling of the committee leaned toward the razing of Nichols.

Cunningham also said "collective opinion seemed to go for razing it (Nichols)."

MUSIL SAID a $10,000 feasibility study, if passed by the Legislature, would allow other alternatives to the situation.

In a letter to Acker, written Tuesday, Musil said he had contacted "as many living groups as possible in the last 24 hours" to get their opinions.

"The overwhelming feeling was that Nichols is an important landmark on the K-State campus. These students do not want to see Nichols torn down," the letter said.

Low voter turnout for general election

Reitz, Klingler lead City Commission balloting

By LARRY RIBORDY
Collegian Reporter

A light turnout of area voters filled four seats on the City Commission and four seats on the USD 383 Board of Education in Tuesday's general election.

The leading commission candidate was incumbent Russell Reitz with 3,480 votes, followed by Gene Klingler with 3,187 votes, incumbent Ed Horne with 3,105 votes. The loser in the commission election for the regular seats was Joe Rippetoe with 2,822 votes.

The special election for the unexpired term was captured by Wanda Fateley with 2,741 votes. She beat out Chris Curtain who accumulated 1,714 votes.

The leader in the election for the USD 383 Board of Education was Barbara Withee with 3,229 votes, followed by Bob Newsome with 3,087 votes, Frank Tillman with 2,796 votes and Charles Thompson with 2,738 votes.

The losers in the school board election were: Donald Marks with 2,603 votes, Larry Dixon with 2,153 votes, Mark Lipp with 1,759 votes and Jon Brake with 863 votes.

THE TOP TWO City Commission vote-getters were elected to four-year terms. The third leading vote-getter won a two-year term. The special election was held to fill the two years remaining in the unexpired four-year term of former-Commissioner Robert Smith who resigned last year.

Winners in the City Commission election will take office at the next regular City Commission meeting April 17. The winners of the school board election will be instated in July at the board's reorganizational meeting.

Reitz has been a city commissioner since 1971 and was mayor in 1974-75 and 1977-78. He has been a Manhattan resident since 1934. A K-State graduate, Reitz is self-employed in older-home renovation and rental properties.

Horne has been living in Manhattan since 1967. He was city attorney from 1972-78. He was appointed to the City Commission in August of last year to replace Smith until the seat could be filled in a regular election.

Klingler has been a Manhattan resident for 14 years. He has served as chairman of the county health board and on the board of the Chamber of Commerce.

FATELEY, WINNER of the special election to fill Smith's unexpired term, has served on the Environmental Board and the Downtown Redevelopment Committee.

Rippetoe is development director for the University for Man and is currently serving on the Manhattan Downtown Redevelopment Committee and the board of directors of the Older Manhattan Neighborhoods Association. His previous community service included serving on two citizen involvement committees for USD 383.

Curtain was a realtor and businessman in the community.

Withee is completing her first term and was school board president in 1977-78. She was an elementary school teacher and has been a member of the Human Relations Board.

Newsome has served on the school board for eight years. Tillman has been a Manhattan resident for 13 years and is an administrator in the College of Engineering at K-State. Thompson has been a Manhattan resident for 14 years. He has been on the Board of Education from 1975-79. During those years, he was school board president in 1978-79 and board vice president in 1977-78.

Area to gain parking places

District to 'benefit' Aggieville

By JEFF MYRICK
Collegian Reporter

In a major move last night, the Manhattan City Commission established a benefit district in Aggieville, providing an additional 231 parking places within the area.

The district was established last year in similar action by the commission, but land acquisition costs were running ahead of the budgeted amount, causing the commission to establish a new district, rather than allowing the project to be stopped.

The same land outlined for the district in the original proposal is in the new proposal, but the money for the project has been increased from $570,000 to $650,000.

The project calls for establishment of parking lots on several lots within the Aggieville area with new paving, lighting, landscaping and 24-hour meters. 75 percent of the project will be paid for by Aggieville merchants and 25 percent will be paid for by the city.

IN OTHER major action, the commission authorized City Manager Don Harmon to take steps to ease code requirements for the Manhattan Civic Theatre, which now occupies the old museum in City Hall.

According to the code, the theater would have to provide restroom facilities for both men and women on the same floor of the building. To put another restroom on the balcony level would cost the theater an estimated $6,000, which W. L. Lala, from the theater group, said could be used more effectively when the group finds a permanent residence.

Harmon said he believes the matter could be handled at the administrative level, not requiring any action by the commission.

The commission unanimously passed a motion for the mayor and city clerk tc execute an agreement with the Kansas Department of Transportation (KDOT) for additional grant money for the city's bikeways system. The KDOT has offered the city $5,000, to be matched with $1,375 from the city, to be used on the bikeways system.

City Engineer Jerry Petty said the matching funds would come from revenue sharing and the improvements to the system would include raised reflective markings for areas with heavy night-time traffic and parking areas for bikes along sections of the system.

The commission received a report from Director of Services Bruce McCallum recommending the setting of fees for some of the city parks' facilities. The fees would be administered by the Recreation Commission in their scheduling and supervision of the recreation facilities.

THE COMMISSION also dealt with three motions concerning the Manhattan Municipal airport. Action was taken on the Airport Improvements Project calling for a change of the contract of $9,185.44 to allow an additional 1,200 feet of grass taxiway.

Upon approval by the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), the addition would have 90 percent paid for by the FAA and 10 percent paid for by the city.

A motion passed to authorize the mayor and city clerk to execute a letter of understanding with Frontier Airlines extending provisions of the existing agreement on a month-by-month basis until provision of a newly-negotiated agreement bcomes effective. The lease-rental payment in the new agreement changes with the availability of the facilities.

Approval was also given on a supplement to the the Master Site Lease with the FFA at the airport. The supplement provides for an amendment that adds the sites and rights for NAVAIDS, homing beacons used for navagational guidance for aircraft coming into the airport, in conjunction with the Airport Improvement Project.

Student found beaten in Marlatt study room

A K-State student was found beaten, bound and gagged in a basement study room of Marlatt Hall Tuesday morning.

According to Carl Rochat, news editor of the University Office of Information, Ron Lister, senior in landscape architecture, was found in what appeared to be an unconscious or dazed state at 11:45 a.m. Tuesday.

Rochat said the campus police were investigating the case as a possible aggravated robbery. It is not clear how much money was taken, he said.

Lister was taken by ambulance to Lafene Student Health Center and is listed in stable condition with a laceration of the scalp.

Marlatt, Lafene and campus police officials refused comment on the incident.

Water level causes damage

Tuttle Creek Reservoir's water level is dropping, but water damage to surrounding areas is on the rise.

The reservoir has fallen 10 feet in the past week and is expected to fall another 1.5 feet per day, James Johnston, project manager, said Tuesday.

According to Johnston, the reservoir level was 1,109 feet last Tuesday and has decreased to 1,099 feet since the tubes were opened halfway last week. The tubes are releasing 25,000 cubic feet of water per second and were opened to decrease flooding above the dam. Flooding occured on streams above the dam and also at the reservoir recreation areas.

Approximately 600 acres of land below the dam have been flooded since the gates were opened, Johnston said. This flooding is much less than the amount that would have been flooded if the gates had been opened earlier, he said.

The Army Corps of Engineers has begun a survey of high water damage. At this time, no estimate can be made of the total damages, Johnston said. As the water level drops each day, more damage is discovered, he said.

"We have considerable damage at the present time," Johnston said. "Not only is our work also great, but the loss of trees, grass, signs and bank erosion is increasing each day," he said.

Bhutto hangs in Pakistan

KARACHI, Pakistan—Former Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto was hanged early today in the Rawalpindi jail, The Daily Jang newspaper reported here in a special supplement.

Bhutto, 51, who was ousted in 1977 by the current military government of President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq, was convicted of ordering the death of a political opponent while in office.

The newspaper report could not be confirmed immediately.

The Daily Jang said that on Tuesday, Zia rejected all appeals to save the former prime minister.

On March 18, 1978, Bhutto was convicted along with four security force officers on murder-conspiracy charges.

He appealed to the Pakistan Supreme Court, which after a hearing, upheld the conviction Feb. 6 on a split 4-3 decision. Bhutto's next legal maneuver, a petition for the court to review its decision for legal errors, was unanimously rejected March 24, exhausting all legal channels.

World leaders and Pakistani citizens appealed for clemency, but Zia said Bhutto was a common criminal and he would not intervene in the court's decision.

Investigation? Carter to talk energy

WASHINGTON—President Carter scheduled a nationally broadcast address for Thursday night to announce plans to ease controls on crude oil prices and possibly appoint a commission to investigate the Three Mile Island nuclear plant accident.

A White House spokesman said Tuesday that Carter arranged air time for what television industry sources said would be an address of 15 or 20 minutes starting at 8 p.m. CST Thursday, to be broadcast live.

White House officials said Carter was expected to announce a gradual lifting of federal controls on domestic crude oil.

This move would have the effect of raising gasoline prices by several cents a gallon and would be aimed at curbing the nation's growing appetite for imported oil.

The president also was expected to propose denying windfall profits to the oil companies through taxation. Carter said on March 24 that any such tax would go in part to finance development of solar energy, alcohol fuels and other renewable energy resources.

Study says pill risks 'exaggerated'

NEW YORK—New statistical studies reported on Tuesday "cast serious doubt" on the validity of British studies which said women who have used oral contraceptives are about four times more likely to die of cardiovascular diseases.

One new study also challenged a British study that applied those findings to 21 other countries, including the United States, Japan, Australia, New Zealand and most of Europe.

The authors of the new studies cautioned, however, that their findings do not mean there is no risk at all associated with use of oral contraceptives, but that the risk has been exaggerated and is affected by age, smoking and obesity, not "the pill" alone.

In late 1977, the British medical journal The Lancet carried a report from the Royal College of General Practitioners' (RCGP) pill study conducted over eight years. It was based on 24 deaths from heart attacks, strokes and other cardiovascular diseases among 23,000 pill users and a control group.

The RCGP finding of high levels of risk was accpted by many members of the medical profession, according to Christopher Tietze, biostatistician for the Population Council, who said he himself accepted it.

Fire victims slowed by drugs?

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo.—Some of the 25 residents killed Monday in a boarding home fire in Farmington were on medication that could have hindered them from escaping, a state legislator said Tuesday in announcing an investigation.

Meanwhile, Chief Deputy Fire Marshal Bob Augustine said authorities had determined that a short circuit in an outdoor electrical cable caused the fire.

Rep. Steve Vossmeyer (D-St. Louis) said state records revealed that 14 of the victims were taking mood-altering, anti-psychotic drugs such as Mellaril, Haldol, Chlor-Pz, Stelazine, Thorazine and lithium carbonate.

Weather

Good day, K-State. Today promises to be a great day: snow should end this morning, making way for warmer temperatures; Billy Joel tickets go on sale at 6 p.m., so the gloom that hangs over the Union should end; this Collegian gives you your own copy of a Billy Joel poster; and the Union may face a burrito shortage. Happy day!! Well, back to the weather—once snow flurries end this morning, highs will reach about 50 this afternoon. Lows tonight will be in the mid to upper 30s. Thursday is expected to be partly cloudy with highs in the mid 50s.

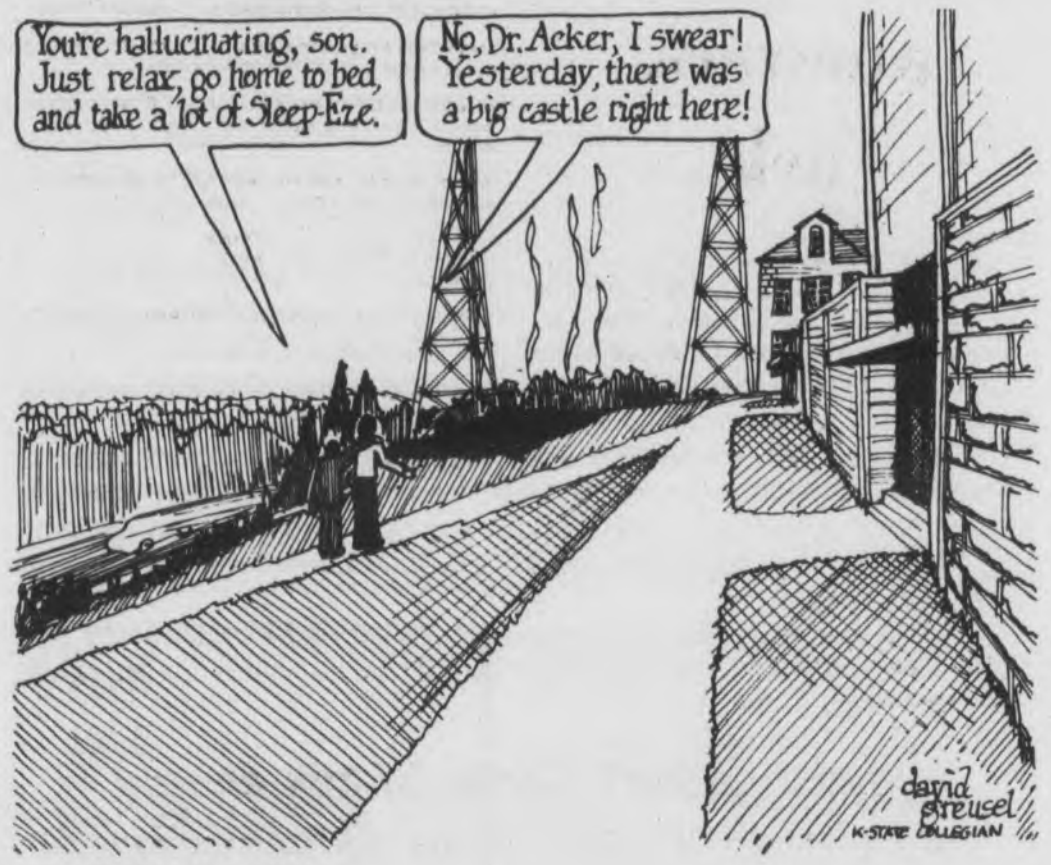
The story about President Acker's meeting with the University Consultative Committee, and other selected guests, could have been another everyday news story on page two. Most students probably wouldn't have bothered to read it.

That would have been too bad because at this meeting the fate of Nichols Gym came closer than before to being decided. Not officially, of course. After all, it was strictly an informal meeting where opinions were offered and recommendations made.

The formal action will be President Acker's recommendation on the three alternatives proposed at the meeting—a decision he will make after listening to the recommendations at the Monday meeting.

One of the stated purposes of the University Consultative Committee is "to make visible to the University community the decision-making process."



The University community is made up of students. There is no way students could know anything about the meeting's discussion unless advance notice was given. With advance notice, interested students and the press (for interested but lazy students) could also have been present.

As former Attorney General Curt Schneider pointed out on the question of city commissions holding a special meeting without giving advance public notice:

"...although such a meeting might be open to all, the lack of public notice would render the 'open door' an empty gesture, if the fact of the meeting were not known to the public in the first instance."

What more need be said by those who give a damn about Nichols Gym except—thanks for nothing, President Acker.

Solar, nuclear different

Editor,

RE: Jim Leavitt's letter (April 3) concerning nuclear power and solar power.

Jim, I doubt anyone would argue that solar power doesn't draw its energy from a nuclear reactor, namely the sun.

But I'm afraid this fact is not sufficient to equate solar power with nuclear power. The incredible distinction between the two comes about as a result of the different methods used to harness that power.

If you fail to understand, I'm sure one of your instructors can clarify this for you.

Nevertheless, it's comforting to know that reasoning such as yours has led to the safe, foolproof nuclear plants much akin to the three-mile island plant now operating.

Nichols has possibilities

Editor,

I would simply like to ask (and I don't know who) how many of the three dozen or so people on the President's Consultative Committee bothered to familiarize themselves with the opportunities presented by that "ruin" on the south end of campus and how many based their decision on the uninformed opinions of others who haven't brainstormed the creative multitude of uses for Nichols Gym, or who can't see past their preconceptions of empty buildings having no more life or heritage than an equivalent pile of stone waiting to be removed.

How many committee members checked long-range planning documents to see the mere trickle of new construction slated for the coming years of deceased enrollment and how the Nichols Gym site isn't the only place to park a new building? Who, anywhere in our society, has been sensitive enough to realize that this new building would erase important social cues to our past heritage?

Who, except a small but growing number who can appreciate the past as more than musty manuscripts in a leaky library, saw Nichols Gym as new space through renovation; or, at least until that was feasible, to use the shell in a manner that doesn't erase future options? And who ever felt the need, specifically, for an outdoor performing facility or simply an outdoor space to hang out?

Next time you dare to sit on the grass in front of the Union, wonder if the President's Consultative Committee (who you won't see there) ever considered cleaning up Nichols Gym, landscaping the interior; giving usefulness to the "ruin" while still keeping it available for renovation later.

'Simple math' proves point

Editor,

Using the figures published in this paper (April 2) I have been doing some very fundamental math with interesting results. Over the last 10 years residents of the Strong Complex have paid $763,172 on bond retirement—an average of $76,317 a year. Divide that by 600 residents and it shows that each resident in the Strong Complex has paid $127.20 per year for this bond retirement.

Over the same 10 years the Strong Complex has a deficit of $556,058—an average of $55,605 per year. Divide that by the 4200 residents paying for it, this means that each resident in the system has paid $13.23 per year to cover our deficit. Using these figures we have been subsidizing the system to a tune of about $113.97 per year per resident. I ask: Who is subsidizing who?

Another question asked is about improvement that will be required in the small halls. I have heard estimates from housing officials from $100,000 to $250,000 over the next 10 years. If this cost is shared over the system it would mean an increase of $2.40 to $6.00 per year per resident or 29 cents to 74 cents per housing payment. Is $2.40 a month too much to ask for our food service considering we in the Strong Complex are paying $15.90 per month for the bond retirement?

Receipt sales beats line-waiting

It is 6:30 a.m. when the alarm rings. Upon waking, there is a feeling of disbelief. I couldn't believe I was actually getting out of bed at this hour to go to the Union and wait patiently for tickets to a concert.

People have a lot of time to think while they are waiting for the precious tickets. You find yourself wondering what you are going to do about the class you will miss. And what about the people in front of you in the line? Will they get all the seats you had hoped for?

And, what about the student who can't afford to be so free with their time? It isn't fair. The Union Program Council (UPC) doesn't care. They feel if a student wants better seats he should go beyond paying the extra dollar to 50 cents; he should do something to "earn" those tickets.

STUDENTS WHO must go to class are just plain out of luck. And, if they wish to get decent tickets, they must find a willing friend who will wait in line and go through the roll call crap for them.

This is not only an imposition on the willing friend, it is an imposition on the person who must ask the friend to do the dirty task.

UPC has many excuses for the poor method of ticket sales.

They say they didn't have time to handle sales through the mail. The reason they don't have time is they lack organization.

Had they announced the concert when they knew about it, last Friday, they could have sold the tickets on Monday. They wanted to announce it over the radio at that time. This way students could have waited in line over the weekend and not had the line-waiting interrupt their classes. But, UPC didn't want weekend lines to interfere with University open house and concert tickets did not and have not arrived.

Tickets are being printed in Houston. The printing press broke down so the tickets couldn't be ready. Printing the tickets in Houston has to be the most monumental example of poor judgment since the Waters Hall mural was destroyed by brown paint.

Most concert tickets are printed on paper about the weight of a business card. They could have been printed in Manhattan. We would have received them sooner.

UPC hears the complaints of the people waiting in line and the people who can't wait in line several times a day. They have no solutions.

I DO.

Even if there is some reason the tickets had to be printed in Houston, which I doubt, UPC could have started selling tickets Monday to those who were waiting.

It is easy. The student could go to the box office and pay for the ticket, only he would receive a receipt instead of a ticket. An ID number would be printed on the receipt. UPC would keep a copy of the receipt to reserve seats bought by the student.

When the tickets arrive, the student would return to the box office and turn in the receipt while showing the ID. The lucky student could be awarded his tickets.

The lucky student wouldn't have to wait three days to get the tickets. Lucky UPC would be more likely to sell out the concert—the many students who can't miss classes and therefore can't buy tickets, would have the opportunity under the receipt system.

The lucky Collegian managing editor wouldn't have been disgraced by losing 44 straight games of spades.

Letters

To get answers, ask

Editor,

"The half of knowledge is to know where to find it." Graduate student Michael Walsh would have done well to seek a source for answers to the questions he raised in his letter to the Collegian published on March 22.

We do not believe that there is any possibility that K-State may be closed next winter due to shortage of natural gas. Several weeks ago President Acker was advised by telegram that Kansas Power and Light (KPL) would be able to supply 95 percent of the nautral gas requirements for K-State through the year 1985, and perhaps even longer.

The Kansas Corporation Commission (KCC) establishes priority categories for natural gas delivery, not KPL. It is the KCC classification which causes the K-State power plant to experience curtailment of natural gas deliveries during extreme cold weather. Even so, curtailments during 1979 amounted to less than 300 hours, or the equivalent of less than 13 days during the entire year.

When questions are raised about energy needs to the University, the Legislature turns to KPL because the utility has meter records of both natural gas and electric energy consumed by the University over a number of years. This information is not subject to speculation or debate, it is historical fact.

Student Walsh asked,"Did you ever try to get any information from KPL?" We must ask,"Did he try?"

BILLY JOEL

Time shortage foils mail orders

'Roll call': UPC defends Joel ticket sales policy

By CAROL HOLSTEAD
Arts & Entertainment Editor

ROLL CALL! At the command students waiting in line for Billy Joel concert tickets drop homework, card games and jump up from naps, to dash to the roll call point so they can verify their place in line.

Billy Joel identification cards, each with a number on it to indicate the holder's place in line, have been given to students waiting for concert tickets. Union Program Council (UPC) will begin selling tickets at 6 p.m., today in the Union for the April 28 concert. Until then, students who want the best concert seats must wait in the Union Courtyard so they can be present for roll call, which is done at unspecified times throughout the day.

According to Howard Segal, freshman in business management and next year's UPC concerts coordinnator, having unscheduled roll calls is fairer to students than scheduled roll calls, which would have eliminated waiting in line for tickets. Roll is called between 7 a.m. and 9 p.m. These day lines were formed to keep students from spending the night in the Union, Segal said.

SCHEDULED ROLL calls would have defeated the purpose of waiting in line, Segal said. Students wait in line to get the best concert seats. Scheduled roll calls would have enabled students who would not normally wait in line to get the best seats without the hassle, he said.

The concert committee will not receive the Billy Joel tickets until Wednesday because they are being printed in Houston, Segal said. The committee considered simply opening the ticket booth as soon as they received the tickets, but decided against it.

"I guess the biggest reason we didn't do that (open the ticket window without organizing a line system) was because we wanted to be as honest with the students as possible. We knew as soon as the concert was announced students would start forming a line. To keep a line from forming the concert would have to have been announced late, but the Billy Joel people wanted the concert announced right away. To keep students from sitting in line over night, we decided to organize the line system," Segal said.

Students have purchased tickets for previous concerts by mail order, but according to Segal there just wasn't enough time before the Billy Joel concert to use the mail order system.

Sound of music silenced; carrillon not working—again

By STANTON JANSSEN
Collegian Reporter

Anderson Hall hasn't been ringing out the time of day, and those late-afternoon concerts have been silenced because the carrilon needs repair...again.

Located just inside the front doors of Anderson is the manual control to the instrument, a double keyboard much like that of an organ. Striking the keys mechanically activates the 96 carefully tuned bells which, when amplified fill the campus with music.

But the carrilon hasn't been working since the latter part of last semester, according to Stuart Carson, junior in music. Carson plays the carrilon in his free time.

"I know I couldn't play anything at Christmas because it didn't work right," he said.

Donated to K-State in 1966, the carillon can be played manually but is also set to electrically strike the Westminister chimes on the hour and half hour.

The repairman wasn't available, but those who talked to him couldn't agree on just what is wrong with the carillon.

Ken Heywood, director of the K-State Foundation, which is in charge of maintaining gifts to the University, said a part was ordered and the repairman came out last week to install it. When he arrived, he found he had the wrong part.

"That's typical," he said. "We've been trying to get them on the ball, but that's easier said than done."

Carson gave a different explanation of the problem.

One of the carillon's components had a bad resistor, so it was taken back to the factory in Pennsylvania last January. When it was brought back last week, another component was found to be bad. The second component was then sent back to the factory, he said.

Carson said the part probably woulldn't be back for another six weeks.

Peace campaign is openly pursued

CAIRO, Egypt (AP)—President Anwar Sadat of Egypt and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin decided Tuesday to meet in the Sinai and Israel's Negev Desert next month, defying an outraged Arab world by openly pursuing their campaign for peace.

The announcement was made just before Begin flew back to Israel, capping the first journey by an Israeli premier to an Arab capital.

Upon returning to Tel Aviv, a beaming Begin said he had received the "warmest possible hospitality."

"Wherever I went, they cheered, they waved," said Begin, clearly elated. "They really liked me."

THE PRIME minister told reporters he had the feeling that he and Sadat had become "real friends" and that during their talks "we solved problems that may have needed 16 months of negotiations to solve."

Begin did not reveal these agreements, saying he would report them on Wednesday to his cabinet and parliament.

Begin's trip at first had all the airs of a stiff, ceremonial state call. But when he and Sadat met, their exhuberance transformed the visit into a session that produced fresh and significant results, quickening the pace of contact between the two former enemies.

After a 50-minute talk, the two leaders announced they would meet again May 27 in El Arish, the Sinai capital Israel has agreed to vacate prior to a total withdrawal from the peninsula.

WHEN ASKED after the talks if he was satisfied, Sadat replied, "I am more than satisfied."

Israel will relinquish El Arish in Sadat's presence one day before their meeting, Begin said. He added that they will declare an open border at the meeting and discuss opening an air corridor as well.

On the same day Sadat and Begin will helicopter to the Israeli town of Beersheba, 60 miles to the east in the Negev Desert, Begin told reporters.

Begin and Sadat said they would telephone President Carter to inform him of the latest developments in the peace process, set out under the treaty Carter helped wrap up last month.

THE MEETINGS were believed aimed at boosting the upcoming negotiations on autonomy for the 1.1 million Palestinians living in the Israeli-heldWest Bank and Gaza Strip. These talks are initially between Israel and Egypt, but open to Jordan and the Palestinians if they wish to join.

The West Bank was Jordanian territory prior to the 1967 Mideast War. Jordan and the Palestinians have expressed vehemently opposition to the peace treaty and have rejected taking part in the autonomy talks.

The Arab League voted over the weekend to punish Egypt for signing the treaty by breaking most political and economic ties with Egypt. A number of Arab ambassadors hurried to leave Cairo before Begin's arrival, which may have prompted the coldness initially marking Begin's trip.

Wind toll on plains reduced 30 percent

WASHINGTON (AP)—Improved moisture conditions and protective snow cover helped reduce winter wind damage to land in the Great Plains by 30 percent from a year ago, the Agriculture Department said Tuesday.

A total of 1,170,849 acres was reported damaged in the 10-state region, more than three-fifths of it in two states—Montana and Texas—during the first four months of the season that began Nov. 1.

In the first four months of the season a year ago, wind damage was reported to 1,661,535 acres, the department's Soil Conservation Service said.

The agency surveys parts of the Great Plains during seven months when danger of soil blowing away is at its greatest. The season begins Nov. 1 and ends the following May 31.

Total damage in the 1977-78 season was to about 2.8 million acres, the smallest in five years.

New use found for old barn; phase one of $8 million complex

By MARY BICHELMEYER
Collegian Reporter

The vacant K-State dairy barn will hold everything but dairy cows after renovation of the barn is completed.

The barn, which was built in 1932 and has been vacant for the last month, will be part of phase one in developing the $8 million plant science complex, according to Mike Mayo, architectural assistant for facilities planning.

"The building will be used for different types of experimentation, Mayo said. "Because of a lack of funds there will not be much renovation done, but the building will be made structurally sound."

"Experimentation in the barn will be different for each department," Hyde Jacobs, head of the agronomy department said.

"Experiments for all the departments take up a considerbale amount of space and the barn can provide this space," Jacobs said. "It is a fine looking building and with some repairs it will be structurally safe."

Bids are being taken for the construciton of the plant science complex. The new building will be located south of the barn on Claflin Ave. Plans have been made to build greenhouses which will be located between the proposed complex and the dairy barn, Mayo said.

The proposed building, to be totally funded by the state, will be called Throckmortin Hall and will provide office, classroom and lab space for the departments of plant pathology, horticulture and agronomy, he said.

The building is estimated to be completed in two and one-half years.

CLIMB THE LETTERS TO SUCCESS.

Success is a long way up. But after taking the first step, the second one comes easier.

Air Force ROTC can help you climb that ladder by providing a helping hand during college. It can enrich your college years and also help you with some of those school expenses at the same time.

You can compete for a two, three or four-year scholarship that pays $100 a month for college expenses, while it picks up the tab for all tuition, lab fees and books.

The AFROTC program has many extras. Like the Flight Instruction Program (FIP), where you qualify for Air Force flight training through a screening process and receive introductory flight instruction. You'll also learn about leadership, management; Air Force history and traditions, and much more through AFROTC. The program prepares cadets to take command after they graduate and are commissioned as Air Force officers.

The list goes on. Check it out today. See if you can climb the letters to success and meet the challenge and accept the commitment. You'll find that the Air Force is a great way to serve your country, and that AFROTC is a great way to get there from here.

PATIENTLY WAITING...Because of the inclement weather, K-State students moved into the Union Courtyard Tuesday while waiting for Billy Joel tickets, which go on sale tonight. See related story, page 8.

Co-sponsoring Billy Joel will lessen financial risks

After going in the hole $5,000 this year because of poor turnouts at the Jerry Lewis show and the Marshall Tucker Band concert, the Union Program Council (UPC) has found a co-promoter to assume the financial risks (and some of the potential profits) for the Billy Joel concert.

"We are taking no financial risk with the Billy Joel concert," Howard Segal, UPC concerts chairman, said.

Segal, freshman in business management, said Feyline Productions of Denver will promote the Joel concert along with UPC.

Joel's booking agent, Home Run Productions, won't book Joel directly with the University. This is another reason that Feyline Productions is in on the deal, Segal said.

"We haven't co-sponsored a concert in a long time," he said.

The base price for bringing Joel to K-State, not including set-up and other costs, is about $40,000. Ahearn Field House has 11,145 seats available for $7, $7.50 and $8, Segal said.

"This concert should bring our debt closer to zero," he said.

Movie impresses NRC director; finds himself in camera's eye

WASHINGTON (AP)—About a week ago, Harold and Lucinda Denton were watching "The China Syndrome," a movie about a power plant nuclear reactor gone haywire. He nudged his wife and whispered, "That's a faulty reading."

And sure enough, on the screen before them a moment later, the nuclear technician portrayed by actor Jack Lemmon discovered that a meter had been giving faulty readings and that his reactor was in trouble.

"Harold was impressed by the movie's technical accuracy," Mrs. Denton recalled Tuesday. "And by Jane Fonda."

MRS. DENTON hasn't seen her husband since last Friday, except on television, where his face and calm, assured Southern-tinged voice have become familiar to millions.

Denton is director of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's office of nuclear reactor regulation.

Last week, President Carter sent him as his personal representative to Three Mile Island when it became clear that a "China syndrome" situation could occur in Pennsylvania.

"China Syndrome" is the buzzword for the worst possible accident, a nuclear core melting through its container and presumably burning through the earth to China.

DENTON HAS been in touch with the president by telephone several times a day and has briefed the press corps at the accident site whenever events warranted.

On Monday, when he announced the gas bubble within the reactor had shown a "dramatic drop" in size, reducing the risk of an explosion, his broad grin conveyed the news just as dramatically.

Denton has demonstrated an aptitude for explaining what is happening inside a reactor calmly and clearly enough to make people feel that even if they don't understand, at least someone of importance does.

Denton, 43, has been interested in nuclear science since he was in high school in Rocky Mount, N.C.

LUCINDA OLIVER, a high school classmate, became his wife, though they did not start dating until after both had gone off to college.

Denton says he attended North Carolina State College because it had one of the first university-operated nuclear reactors. But Mrs. Denton adds that it was also one of the few schools he could afford to attend.

After graduating in 1958, Denton took a job in South Carolina with the DuPont Co., which was building the Savannah River nuclear plant that manufactures nuclear weapons.

Stained glass artists involved in creative, sometimes tedious task

GLASSWORK...Maury Bergren solders together a section of the stained glass window.

By SUE PFANNMULLER
Collegian Reporter

Rays from the afternoon sun filter through the colored sections of patterned glass scattered around the room.

Maury, at one end of the long table, is busy with the soldering iron fitting pieces into the predetermined pattern.

Bonnie, at the other end, cuts glass into the various shapes which make up this section of the window. She cuts carefully yet swiftly in an attempt to keep ahead of her husband.

The Bergrens are involved in the creative, sometimes tedious task, of making stained glass windows.

The window in progress will be placed in St. Augustine's Church at Washington, Kansas.

The shop is a home-based family operation with everyone contributing. Their two children, Janice and Bruce, pitch in and even the pet parakeet helps; supervising from his perch on Bonnie's shoulder.

THE BERGRENS have been working on their latest project since last summer. The window, constructed in 52 separate sections, is 44 feet wide and 15 feet high in the center.

It took about a day to complete each section, Bonnie said, but about half of the time was spent designing and making patterns to work from.

The original design, which was made on a 5- by 7-inch piece of paper was enlarged with the use of an overhead projector. This produced a master pattern, which is tracecd onto onion paper to make the cutting pattern.

The original design was abstract, mostly circular in form, Maury said. Although the church members liked that style, they asked that some religious symbols be added, he said. Maury redrew the design and added symbols to suggest the nativity; Christ's cross and crown of thorns, the burning bush, a descending dove and wine chalice and grapes.

A wheat field was also added, not only because wheat is a symbol in the Bible, but also the church is located in an agricultural community and we felt it was appropriate, Bonnie said.

K-State alumna continues education 53 years after graduation 'not for credit, but just to keep 'in touch'

Although she doesn't agree with the women's liberation movement completely and doesn't want to see the Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) passed, Ferol Hess believes the movement has been one of the most significant events in the past century of America's history.

The women's lib movement, she said, has "done a good deal for women, and probably men too. Through it, women have made tremendous strides for jobs, especially in managerial positions."

Women in managerial positions were not commonplace when Hess attended college. She graduated from K-State (then Kansas State Agricultural College) in 1926 with a bachelor of science degree in home economics.

Hess visited K-State this past weekend for her 53rd year class reunion, and found there had been other changes besides those caused by the women's lib movement.

"There were only about 2,500 students here when I was in school," Hess said, "And, I suppose we knew our professors better than students do now. Anyway, they were awfully kind to you."

In fact, Hess said, one of her professors helped her get her first job after graduation as a student dietician in New York City.

SHE WENT through a training program in three New York hospitals, spending four months in each. After her year of training there, she went to Harrisburg, Pa., where she became assistant dietician in the Harrisburg hospital.

There, she said, she "fell in love and got married."

"I was 25 then. I think that was a good age to get married, but it should be even later today, I should think. You don't really know yourself at 19 or 20. You still depend too much on your emotions. I think you have to be a little wiser before you can marry and be sure you're going to stay married," Hess said.

However, she said she was "always in love" when she was in college, and seemed to have a lot of dates.

Dating was done more in groups at that time, Hess said, even when there were "social doings" on campus.

Class of 1926

When she didn't have a date, Hess said she and her friends often spent the evenings at the Palace Drug Store.

"It was just a place you could go to meet people, have soft drinks and hang around," she said. "I especially remember one soft drink called 'Green River.' It was kind of a mint-green color, and I remember that I just loved them."

ANOTHER THING Hess remembers about college life was K-State's football games.

"There was always something about the excitement of it," she said. "I still don't understand the game very well, but I can remember being in the stands and waving chrysanthemums like pompoms. It was wonderful! There was always so much excitement about the game."

Hess now lives in Darby, Pa., a suburb of Philadelphia, and does volunteer work at a Darby Thrift Shop. She also attends Temple University, "not for credit, but just to stay in touch," she said. She is currently taking classes in Business Law, International Relations, Caligraphy and Federal Tax Accounting.

"Going to school is fun. It keeps you alive and keeps you thinking. I have to work twice as hard as those young people in my Federal Tax Accounting class, but I don't mind it. I think it's good to have to study," she said.

HESS ALSO believes students should work at least a year between high school and college because it gives them a chance to grow up a little.

"If your parents can afford to send you straight from high school to college you're just going to play your way through college. But if you take a part-time job and supply your own money, you're going to get more out of it," she said.

ENGINEERS

Federal Government agencies are involved in some of the most important technological work being done today....in energy fields, communication, transportation, consumer protection, defense, exploring inner and outer space and the environment.

Some of the jobs are unique, with projects and facilities found nowhere else. Salaries are good, the work is interesting and there are excellent opportunities for advancement.

Dodds: 'The sun is shining now'

By CINDY FRIESEN
Asst. Sports Editor

No one likes to be accused of spoiling someone else's fun, but K-State athletics, the long-time brunt of sports world jokes, is well on its way to building respectability.

During the past four years, K-State seniors have had to watch several of their teams lose and lose and...while enduring what might have seemed like an endless chain of scandals, including a messy departure and return of Head Basketball Coach Jack Hartman, Ellis Rainsberger's forced resignation, the firing of Jersey Jermier and finally, a spring football training violation last year.

Sports Analysis

Nothing can erase the past, but a new era has begun to unfold at K-State.

"I think the athletic department went through a damp period, but the sun is shining now," K-State Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds said. Dodds, former Wildcat men's track coach, took over Jermier's position last summer.

While most coaches try to balance their teams with experienced members and promising newcomers, this is not always possible.

SCHOLARSHIP limitations on sports, "the luck of the draw and luck of eligibility with kids" almost always mandate that there are good years and lesser years, Dodds said.

"The thing we've got going for us is that we've got good coaches. Our coaches don't have the money the Nebraskas and Oklahomas have. But the coaches are good enough to pick up the slack," he said.

Although Head Football Coach Jim Dickey began his K-State career with a Big 8 violation, the football team managed to go 4-7, chalking up its first three Big 8 victories in three years.

Next year promises to be even better with many veteran players returning to the K-State lineup. Much of their success will probably depend on how well the new quarterback does.

"Football at any school is always rebuilding, except Oklahoma and Nebraska," Dodds said. "The saying is, Oklahoma never rebuilds. It only reloads."

TWO of the youngest teams on campus are the baseball and tennis squads. The baseball team has 17 new players on a 23-man roster while five of the top six tennis players are newcomers.

In Tennis Coach Steve Snodgrass' first season three years ago, his team took eighth in the Big 8. Last year the men took sixth. Snodgrass predicts a fourth place finish this year and believes his team could take second next year.

On the men's basketball court, K-State began the season with a lone senior, Steve Soldner, and a host of new faces, including freshmen Tyrone Adams and Ed Nealy.

"Even when you have a senior-dominated team, you're thinking about building for the future, Hartman said.

Men's track appears to be the most well balanced in age span of any of the K-State teams.

IN 1976, K-State had a veteran team that won the Big 8 Indoor and Cross Country championships.

"The nucleus of that team was about six seniors and seven juniors, but we lost that with graduation that year," Head Track Coach Mike Ross said. "Again, next year we're looking at having six or seven outstanding seniors."

Even with the high number of seniors on the team, Ross said he has tried to avoid developing that experience gap again.

The most obvious example of building a team can be found on the women's volleyball court.

The volleyball team, under the coaching of Mary Phyl Dwight, came from a 3-33 record four years ago to a 39-16 league championship team this year.

The team's success was attributed by Dwight to the first scholarships granted three years ago. The program has also benefited from Dwight's goal of "building a winning tradition and establishing a quality program with pride," Dwight said.

Rise and shine; the fish are biting

One might be thinking this is not the time for fishing. One might be wrong. Fish are being taken all over this area. You just need to know where to go.

The white bass are being taken far upstream in the creeks at Tuttle Creek. McIntire Creek and Carnahan Creek have been producing pretty good results.

When looking to snatch one of these buggers, go upstream until the water changes from clear to muddy. It is at this point where the white bass will be caught.

Some good baits for these fish will be jigs, spoons, Tricky-Toms and anything which looks similar to a shad.

If you don't mind traveling, take a short trip south to Council Grove Reservoir. Walleye should be biting off the face of the dam. Walleye are fighters. They can be taken on yellow jigs. Just throw the jig out and bounce it along the bottom as you retrieve.

If Council Grove is a little far for you to travel, the channel cat are biting at Pottawottomie State Lake No. 2. The channels can be taken on worms, shad sides, and shad entrails (those are shad guts, for you unschooled readers).

Channel cat are also being taken in some of the creeks at Tuttle Creek and in flooded fields.

The crappie should be biting in about three weeks. Check the river below the tubes, when and if it ever goes down. Using jigs and spoons, the angler will be able to take them around twigs and exposed brush.

And, the Kansas Fish and Game Commission is preparing the streams around the River Pond Area for a new bunch of trout which are to be stocked there soon. Commission workers are placing rocks in the streams to create a more suitable oxygen supply for the trout.

Royals trade Bird to Phillies for Cruz

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—The Kansas City Royals traded veteran reliever Doug Bird to the Philadelphia Phillies Tuesday in exchange for rookie shortstop Todd Cruz.

Bird, 29, was among three right-handers the Royals put on the shelf Tuesday. Marty Pattin was placed on the 21-day disabled list with a severe ankle sprain, while Bill Paschall was optioned to the club's Triple A farm club at Omaha.

At the same time, the Royals placed utility infielder Jerry Terrell, who is recovering from a broken ankle sustained last season, on the 15-day disabled list.

Cruz, 23, a right-handed batter, was chosen the American Association's best defensive shortstop of the year last season, when he played with Oklahoma City. He hit .261, including 11 homers, and had six RBIs.

"Cruz will give us more protection for our infield," said Royals Manager Whitey Herzog. "Everything I've heard about him indicates he can play."

Bird was coming off a mediocre season during which he posted a 6-6 record and a 5.29 earned run average. But in his six years with the Royals, Bird has posted a 49-36 record with a 3.56 ERA. He holds the club record for most games, 292, and saves, 58.

Two years ago with the Royals, Bird was 11-3 and saved 14 games in the final two months of the season as Kansas City won the second of its three straight American League Western Division titles.

"I've been here a long time," Bird said Tuesday. "I've enjoyed myself with the Royals. I figure everybody's got to be traded sometime."

But he added, "I know I'm going to a winning team, so I can't complain."

The Royals open their American League season at home against Toronto Thursday night.

Shining...

All but one member of last fall's squad will return next year, Dwight said.

"I'm looking for a real good season and for the first time, they will be a really experienced, veteran team," she said.

DWIGHT also coaches the softball team, which hasn't enjoyed the success of the volleyball team. Dwight predicts her softball team, which went 9-31, should have a better record this year.

"We played a very competitive schedule last year," she said. "It was a little over our heads, but I feel you can only improve by playing quality competition.

Next year, the softball team will lose only one senior to graduation.

The K-State women's basketball team, sporting more depth than it's had in years, drew national attention this year when it took second in the regional tournament and beat nationally-ranked KU twice. The 'Cats finished the season 20-11.

"For the first time in three years we will not be inexperienced," Coach Judy Akers said before the season began. The Wildcats won't be inexperienced next year either as three juniors, four sophomores and five freshmen return to the court.

JUST AS their male counterpart is well balanced, so is the women's track team. By taking second place to powerhouse Iowa State in the Big 8 Outdoor in February, K-State women's track "re-established itself as a quality program," Coach Barry Anderson said.

On the tennis courts, women's coach David Hacker agrees with Dwight's philosophy of improving through tough competition. So far this year, the women haven't won any matches.

"Victories this spring will be few and far between," Hacker accurately predicted.

"I doubt if any women's team in the country has had a tougher schedule than we have," Hacker said after a spring break road trip. "It's designed for the future. Next year, I don't think we'll be in over our heads."

Finally, the team with the most building to do is the K-State women's golf team. This is the first year K-State has had golf for women, Coach Paul Anderson said.

The team started last week by taking third in a triangular tournament with Kansas and Nebraska, but Anderson is optimistic.

The team's top four players are freshmen and Anderson sees better things for the future.

'Cat netters win 9-0

The K-State men's tennis team scored a commanding 9-0 victory Tuesday over McPherson College.

K-State junior Gary Titus was a "tremendous standout" as he defeated McPherson's Craig Holman 5-7, 6-2, 6-2, Coach Steve Snodgrass said.

The 'Cats will next play against Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma in a tournament in Lawrence Friday and Saturday.

Clay: 'It talks back to you'

Staff photos by Dave Kaup

Illian uses spiritual discipline to mold pottery with appeal

With her leg pumping to turn the wooden wheel and her slender fingers molding the gray clay, Clary Illian makes pottery.

"The materials and processes of potting are of the earth. It talks back to you. You can't impose your will on it," Illian said.

"I think it's a spiritual discipline. I'm in a rare position to be able to make a living out of a spiritual discipline," she said.

Illian demonstrated her potting techniques at a workshop conducted in the ceramics studio Monday and Tuesday.

Illian, who operates a pottery business in Iowa, said she has seen a change in the interest for pottery.

"My working with pottery has spanned a re-emergence in the interest in crafts," she said. Illian's pottery interest started at the University of Iowa in the early '60s.

"I took a course on potting and immediately loved it," she said.

"When I started it was a ditsy, cutesy craft. In the beginning, people even bought my bad pots, because the pots somehow seemed human," she said.

Illian served an apprenticeship with Bernard Leach at his shop in Cornwall, England.

"It was an apprenticeship in the old sense of the word. I made their pots—their way—plus studio chores, 40 hours a week," she said.

"He (Leach) was a cottage craftsman and one of the main persons in the western world responsible for a renaissance in pottery. He made a synthesis between East and West," she said.

Illian describes her pottery as "functional pottery."

"I'm not terribly worried about color. A pot doesn't need to be a whole novel, just a sentence or paragraph to fit harmoniously with other things you have," she said.

"The challenge is in making simple pots that are still lively," she said.

Illian's advice to someone interested in making a living with pottery is to get the best and most thorough training, and not make compromises in the pottery.

"The things I do have immediate appeal. This is what I like to do," Illian said.

Local truckers obey Teamsters strike orders

Two truck firms in Manhattan and a host of truck firms nationwide are involved in a current labor dispute with the Teamsters Union.

The nation faces a possible economic crisis evolving from a breakdown in negotiations between the truck industry and the Teamsters Union, according to an Associated Press story.

The breakdown occured Friday night and was followed by a Teamsters strike that started midnight Saturday. The strike involves 300,000 union members.

The Trucking Management Incorporated (TMI) ordered an industry lockout Sunday affecting 235,000 of the 300,000 Teamsters, and could stop a sizeable part of general interstate shipments of everything from fresh food to factory parts, according to the AP story.

Teamsters President Frank Fitzsimmons said 300 to 400 trucking firms belonging to the TMI had already signed interim contracts with the union. The total membership of TMI is 10,000 firms.

Members of local 696 off the Teamsters Union are obeying Union orders not to work at Graves Truck line or Yellow Freight Systems in Manhattan.

Bud Moore, president of local 696 said the strike is a result of a breakdown in negotiations between the Union and truck firms Friday night. The breakdown, he said was due to differences in the health and safety clause of the proposed contract and "the whole economics of the matter."

Moore added that 25 to 30 truck lines are being picketed in Kansas.

A spokesman for Graves Truck line said everything was at a standstill and that all 15 drivers for the company were at the picket line Monday morning.

Graves is a member of TMI and is participating in the lockout ordered.

An estimate of how much money Graves is losing because of the strike was not given.

Bob Cox, a union member and employee at Graves, said the picket line started on midnight Sunday.

He said the negotiations were to be final last Friday, but the Union didn't sign the cost of living clause.

Cox said the union members didn't know when the strike would be over, but expected negotiations to resume either Wednesday or Thursday.

Outraged students protest decision to raze Nichols

By DAVE HUGHES
Staff Writer

The spirit of the '60s revisited K-State Wednesday as students and faculty, outraged by President Acker's recommendation to the Kansas Senate to demolish Nichols Gymnasium, converged on Anderson Hall to voice their indignation.

More than 1,000 students protested Acker's recommendation to Senate Ways and Means Committee Chairman Wint Winter early Wednesday to raze the 68-year-old gym and erase the 10-year "monument to indecision."

If approved, only the front entryway and the two adjoining pylons will be retained. The area will be landscaped and a driveway to McCain Auditorium will be built.

The measure appropriating $125,000 for demolition and landscaping of the site, is part of a bill to administer all state university budgets. The measure passed the Senate unanimously Monday and was sent to conference committee to iron out Senate and House differences. It could remain there two days.

Housing Council fries Strong food shutdown

By MARY JO PROCHAZKA
SGA Editor

Strong Complex residents won't have to eat across the street after all.

After 2½ tension-filled hours, Housing Council voted 6-3 against a motion to combine the food services of Boyd, Van Zile and Putnam halls requiring the 640 Strong residents to eat at Boyd Hall.

K-State's mood of the day permeated the Anderson Hall conference room as students wearing Strong Complex T-shirts encircled the council members amidst the shouts of Nichols Gym protestors at one end of the hall and Strong Complex demonstrators at the other end.

"If I thought closing these residence halls would absolutely ruin any spirit we have, I'd say 'keep them open at any cost,'" said Daniel Beatty, vice president for business affairs and council member.

Beatty said he would "stick his neck out" and moved that the council adopt the "compromise" proposal of Housing Director Tom Frith to consolidate the three food services during a two-year period into one service at Boyd Hall.

"As far as going to Boyd Hall, it's a compromise. There's no other way of saying it—it's a loss to the (housing) system," said Mike Murphy, Van Zile resident and member of the Housing Council subcommittee which investigated cost-savers for the complex.

"It's a compromise and we're tired of compromising—we're tired of giving things up," Murphy said.

"You can't maintain a democracy unless you're willing to compromise," Beatty said.

"This won't be the end," Murphy declared, saying that Strong residents would not accept losing their food services or any other compromise.

FRITH'S PROPOSAL, defeated by the council, was one of three minority proposals from members of the subcommittee.

The other minority proposals were to close the three food services, requiring all residents to eat at the Derby Food Center; or to prepare all meals at Derby while allowing residents to eat in their halls.

The majority proposal from the seven-member committee was to keep the three food services in operation as they are now, assuming necessary maintenance and repairs would be done, according to Margaret Young, committee chairman and Putnam Hall resident.

Young listed several reasons for the majority's decision:

MEMBERS OF the conference committee are excepted to include Winter, Senate President Ross Doyen, Senator Jack Steineger (D-Kansas City) from the Senate; and House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Mike Hayden, who will chair the joint session, Rep. William Bunten (R-Topeka) and Rep. Phil Martin (D-Larned) from the House.

The measure's two-day delay in committee may give students protesting Acker's decision a chance to lobby legislators for the preservation of the entire Nichols structure.

Student Body President Greg Musil said Wednesday evening he and members of his administration will go to Topeka to attempt to convince Gov. John Carlin and key legislators to reconsider the gym's destruction. A 50-car convoy of students leaves for Topeka at 10 a.m. today from the east side of KSU Stadium.

Acker's decision was met with astonished outrage from students as news of the decision raced across campus. Two rallies were hastily scheduled and signs publicizing the protest sprang up around campus.

An estimated 800 people attended the first of two rallies in front of Anderson Hall's south entrance at 1:30 p.m. Chants of "We want Duane" were empty commands. Acker was addressing an agricultural extension meeting in Emporia at the time.

RALLY ORGANIZER Tom Hollinberger, fifth year student in architecture, however, read to the crowd a copy of the Office of Information's release of Acker's decision and Musil's subsequent letter to Acker.

"The overwhelming feeling was that Nichols is an important landmark on the K-State campus. These students do not want to see Nichols torn down," the letter said.

At one point in the rally a battalion of students rushed into Acker's office. Chet Peters, vice president for student affairs, agreed to address the rally if they would leave.

While Peters said he could not make a statement on the details of the decision, he said he favored preservation of Nichols.

When it became apparent Acker was not going to appear, the crowd resolved to return later in the afternoon after Acker returned from Emporia.

They did.

Shortly after 5 p.m. Acker was met with the boos and catcalls of the crowd as he stepped outside Anderson Hall to address the horde.

ACKER TOLD the assemblage his recommendation reflects "the best compromise this University can achieve."

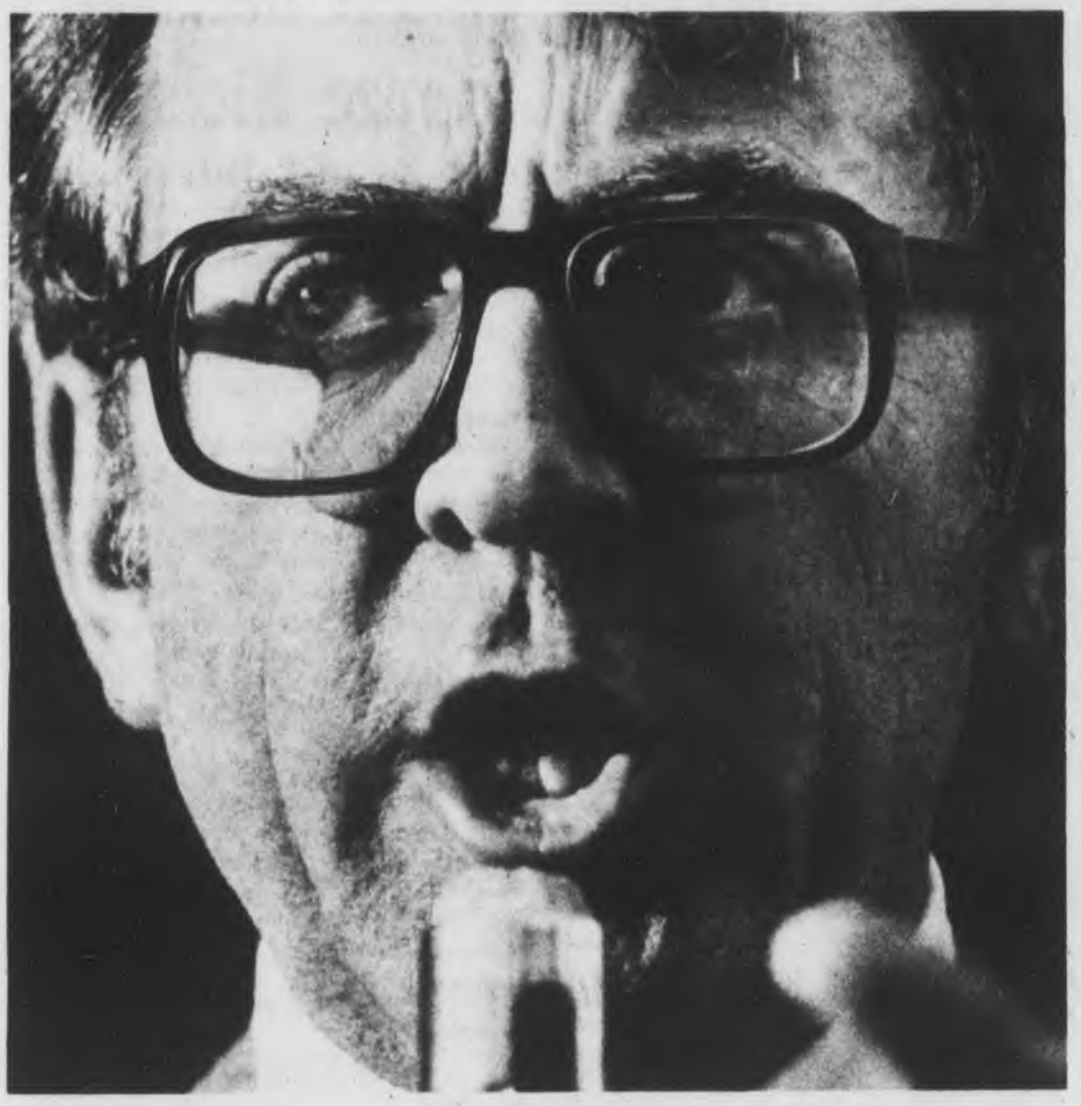
"My recommendation has been made," he said.

"You won't retract your recommendation to the Legislature?" Hollinberger asked.

"That is correct," Acker replied.

Acker cited the low priority Nichols renovation held in an alumni survey conducted in January. Because of that low priority, possible donors would not be willing to contribute to a renovation project, he said. Acker said legislators are requiring 50 percent in matching funds from private donations before they would consider funding renovation.

"In short, there's not much money in the country (private sources) for reconstruction of Nichols Gymnasium," he said.



Also, this "monument to indecision" could put a kink in a proposed $10 million fund-raising campaign tentatively slated for next year, Acker said. Contributors will not donate to the University when it does not resolve its present problems.

"If we have something visible as this (Nichols) and don't solve it, it could put a damper on the whole campaign," Acker said.

Added to alumni opinion was that of "existing groups" used to discern attitudes in the University community.

He said he met Monday with the Administrative Committee; the Consultative Council, comprised of vice presidents, academic deans and student leaders; and the Long-Range Planning Committee and found roughly 60 percent favored razing the structure.

"Well over half put the emphasis on tearing it down," he said.

Amin government nears collapse

NAIROBI KENYA—Tanzanian and Ugandan-exile infantrymen swept into the downtown area of the Ugandan capital of Kampala on Wednesday night, sending President Idi Amin's cadre of Libyan soldiers fleeing into the countryside, residents reported.

Exile sources said the government of Amin, who has been accused of murdering tens of thousands of his countrymen, could fall in a few days or a few hours.

Amin's regular army had already disintegrated, the exile sources said, claiming the troops sent by Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khaddafy to aid Amin, a fellow Moslem, were the only force preserving Amin's eight-year reign.

Amin's whereabouts were not publicly known. On Tuesday, he visited towns in areas he still controls in easter Uganda, jovially greeting soldiers and civilians in an apparent morale-building tour.

Avast ye matey—it's Atlantis

MOSCOW—Underwater photographs taken by a Soviet vessel southwest of Portugal appear to show "vestiges of walls and great stairways" which may prove the existence of the fabled lost continent of Atlantis, say underwater photography experts.

"Experts on the deciphering of underwater photographs saw the rather clear forms of a bridge or stone walls and fragments of a stronghold with wide stairways," said Soviet scientist Andrei Akensov, an expert on such unexplained maritime phenomena as the Bermuda Triangle.

"All of these were covered by underwater plants, were ruined and flattened," he added.

Alexander Nesterenko, director of the fleet department of the Soviet Institute of Oceanography, confirmed to The Associated Press that a Russian research ship had taken underwater photographs of what might be ruins of the mysterious civilization described more than 2,000 years ago by Plato.

Strike forces layoff of 2,500

Thousands of auto workers in St. Louis were laid off Wednesday and operations at other assembly plants in St. Louis and Kansas City were curtailed as the trucking industry shutdown entered its fourth day.

About 4,200 employees at Chrysler Corp.'s car assembly plant in the St. Louis suburb of Fenton were laid off at 12:01 a.m. Wednesday. In addition, Chrysler said it would furlough another 3,600 workers at a nearby truck assembly plant at midnight Wednesday.

Workers at General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. assembly plants in the St. Louis area remained on 4-hour shifts Wednesday as auto parts became increasingly scarce.

A tough ape splits from stripper

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Police are on the lookout for a 3-foot, 45-pound, blue-jean clad, fire-eating monkey named Pete who drinks tequila and hangs around with strippers.

He'd be the one on the leash.

Pete took offense at some sort of undulation a boa constrictor made Wednesday morning in the Classic Cat II. That's a strip joint where he works in Sylvia LaSerena's snake and monkey act.

It was about 3:15 a.m., the show was over and the trio was going out the door. But the 75-pound snake, which was in a sack, got Pete's dander up and the monkey decided to split. He pulled the leash from LaSerena's hand and dashed into the dark, rainy morning in the general direction of downtown.

Police, who were broadcasting bulletins every half hour, said no one had seen hide nor hair of Pete.

Boy, did they have a wrong number

FITCHBURG, Mass.—Oops!

"This is the first time this has happened to us in 23 years," said forlorn insulation contractor Gerald Lavoie after he learned his workers were busily tearing exterior shingles off the wrong house.

The proper house was two doors away on Forest Street. Marion Haude, 52, couldn't help but seem bewildered when she woke up Tuesday to see a spread of her shingles missing.

The contractor says he has made peace with Haude and the shingles will be replaced.

Weather

Good morning, K-State. It looks as if today's weather will be very pleasant. In fact, it just may be nice enough for an early spring picnic—have you tried Nichols Gym's lawn lately? Today is expected to be partly cloudy with highs in the upper 50s. Lows tonight should fall into the low 30s. Highs Friday are expected to be back in the upper 50s.

Betrayal of trust...

President Acker has violated a trust.

As K-State president, Duane Acker is entrusted with the power to make decisions to improve the University.

As K-State president, Duane Acker is entrusted to act in the best interest of not only alumni, faculty and administrators, but of students as well.

In deciding to raze Nichols, Acker misused his power as president of this University and betrayed a trust.

Acker disregarded the input he received from Student Body President Greg Musil and the five other students on the committee which discussed the future of Nichols Monday. As a result, he found out the tough way how students felt about Nichols.

It's degrading that students had to resort to a protest to be heard. It's disgraceful that they were heard only after the recommendation had been made to the State Senate committee considering the issue. And as for Acker's statement that he is deeply concerned with students' opinions—rubbish.

If he was interested in students' opinions, why didn't he ask for any? Why was the only meeting held on the issue called on short notice and without any publicity to inform students about what was being discussed?

The obvious answer is that Acker doesn't care what students want. The survey on which Acker based his recommendation indicated alumni interest, not student interest.

It is also noteworthy that the survey's fourth priority was an art center. Proposals for Nichols have included art centers. So what's the problem? Three sources have said that a certain gentleman, Jack Goldstein, was willing to donate a substantial amount of money for an art center, but not if it was located in Nichols.

As a state senator said, "Money pulls the ropes."

Is the other end of the ropes tied to Duane Acker?

Apparently so.

...can be remedied

Students have complained, with justification, that they weren't consulted before President Acker recommended razing Nichols.

Student government raised its voice in defense of Nichols, but was treated like a poodle growling at a Doberman pinscher. After the passage of the bill by the Kansas Senate, the poodle will have to grow into a lion to be heard.

It's up to the Legislature now, and there are several ways you can help K-State students roar.

You can start by filling out the ballot below, taking it to the table in the Union, anytime today from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Student Senate will receive and tabulate the vote and the results will be announced in the Collegian.

Calling Gov. Carlin on the toll-free number 1-800-432-2487 and letting him know how K-State students stand is another way.

Immediately contacting your representatives in the Legislature by telephone or mail would help. If you're not sure of their addresses or phone numbers call the Student Legislative Network (SLN) at 532-6541, or the University Learning Network (ULN) at 532-6442.

And, if you desire, you can join the group of K-State students going to Topeka to lobby legislators. The group will be leaving from KSU Stadium at 10 this morning.

If you care about Nichols, act now. K-State is in danger of losing what little it has of "The Castle."

Old-time dramas cure boredom

Next time Johnny Carson's guest host is somebody you can't stand or when the late movie is a 30-time rerun, try tuning in to a late-night radio drama broadcast on WIBW-AM, radio 580.

At 10:15 p.m. Monday through Friday, the Sears Radio Theater features such prominent narrators as Vincent Price, Andy Griffith, Lorne Green and Cicely Tyson. Each night a different radio show is broadcast ranging from comedy to Westerns to horror stories.

The CBS Mystery Theater, narrated by E.G. Marshall, starts at 11 p.m., seven days a week. Each night features a new mystery written for radio. The mystery theater will thrill you with suspense unknown since the days of our parents' youth.

Remember, "Who knows what lurks in the minds of men?...the Shadow does" kicking off a night of radio entertainment? The same medium brought such stars as Jack Benny, Red Skelton and Bob and Ray (Elliot and Goulding), recent Saturday Night Live hosts.

LATE NIGHT radio reminds the listeners of stories our parents used to tell of when they were kids. Everyone gathered in the front room to listen to the family radio which was hooked up to the car battery, because electricity had yet to be installed in some small Kansas towns back in the '30s and '40s.

If you think about it while you listen, you can imagine the sound effects being produced in the studio—complete with screams and waving sheets of aluminum for thunder—while the characters read their scripts in voices that keep you on the edge of your chair.

It's a kind of a modern day "Twilight Zone" without Rod Serling to notice the little old lady alone in her big house at night when lightning has killed the lights and the telephone is dead. The little old lady opens the closet door to gawk at the skeleton of her husband who she murdereed years ago, but loved too much to bury. Then Rod steps in to say she has just entered the "Twilight Zone."

Mostly, late-night radio dramas are good alternatives to television. At least they will challenge your thinking at times.

Next time TV leaves you sitting hopelessly without entertainment, take a chair in the theater of old memories. Late night theater promises to be a welcome change.

No Nichols—no money given

I would like to declare that if Nichols Gym is destroyed I will never, as an alumnus, contribute any financial resources to Kansas State University. I urge anyone who agrees with me to act likewise.

I would also like to recommend to the University Consultative Committee a large dollar sign be emblazoned on each side of McCain Auditorium, thus providing the university with an exact replica of the Scrooge McDuck money bin. I feel this addition would greatly enhance the architectural integrity of the K-State campus.

In an exclusive interview, Nichols Gym expressed dissatisfaction with President Acker's partial demolition plan. "How would you feel," asked the 70-year-old building, "if someone said he was going to preserve your face and make your body into a driveway?"

'Collective opinion' stinks

Editor,

RE: Sue Freidenberger's article (April 4) concerning the razing of Nichols Gym.

The "collective opinion" of the University Consultative Committee, which favors the razing of Nichols Gym over alternative solutions, displays a collective lack of intelligence. The "usefulness" of Nichols Gym extends far beyond the possibilities of its eventual renovation.

Nichols serves as a constant reminder of our turbulent past. The year 1968, when Nichols was burned, was a major watershed in the history of the United States. This fact, plus the fact that Nichols is one of the oldest buildings on campus (built in 1910), should be sufficient to prevent a hasty decision favoring its destruction. The University Consultative Committee, however, in its infinite confusion, favors its removal, despite the fact that it would cost $125,000 to destroy the building when $50,000 could be spent for landscaping to preserve and upgrade the site with the option to renovate the structure sometime in the future.

"The overwhelming feeling that Nichols is an important landmark on campus" is, in my opinion, an accurate description of student sentiment.

There is one solution which the committee failed to consider. I, therefore, propose the preservation of Nichols Gym and the razing of Anderson Hall, since the amount of "collective" creative thinking in both structures seems about the same.

IF YOU don't like what your television says, talk back.

Well, actually, talking to the set itself won't do much good, but people who have complaints about programming or believe a newscast is inaccurate or biased do have a voice. The person to go to with these kinds of complaints is the station's news director.

When points about a certain broadcast are raised, the news director or a member of the programming department should check them out with the reporter, photographer or producer in question.

If differences cannot be resolved with the news director or programming department of the station, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) will hear complaints.

So, if you have complaints about programming, speak up!

A LOT OF banks tend to look at the student checking account as a charity service. This view comes from the idea that student accounts generally carry low balances which cost the bank too much to service.

This approach is taken by the Bank of America in Los Angeles, the largest bank in the country. It is one of the few California banks that still offers special student checking accounts at reduced rates.

"Reduced" means students pay $1.50 for every 15 checks and a monthly service charge of $2 if their balance drops below $100.

"We're big," Andrew Barlass, Bank of America's marketing manager, said. "We can afford to absorb some losses. All the small banks have dropped out."

However, Neil Gendel, author of a book called "Break the Banks," disagrees. He says large banks are more inefficient than small banks and therefore pass on the cost of that inefficiency to their customers rather than eliminating its cause.

Small banks are not only more efficient, Gendel said, but they are also more responsive to competition. For this reason, they are often more willing to offer cheaper—or even free—checking services than large banks.

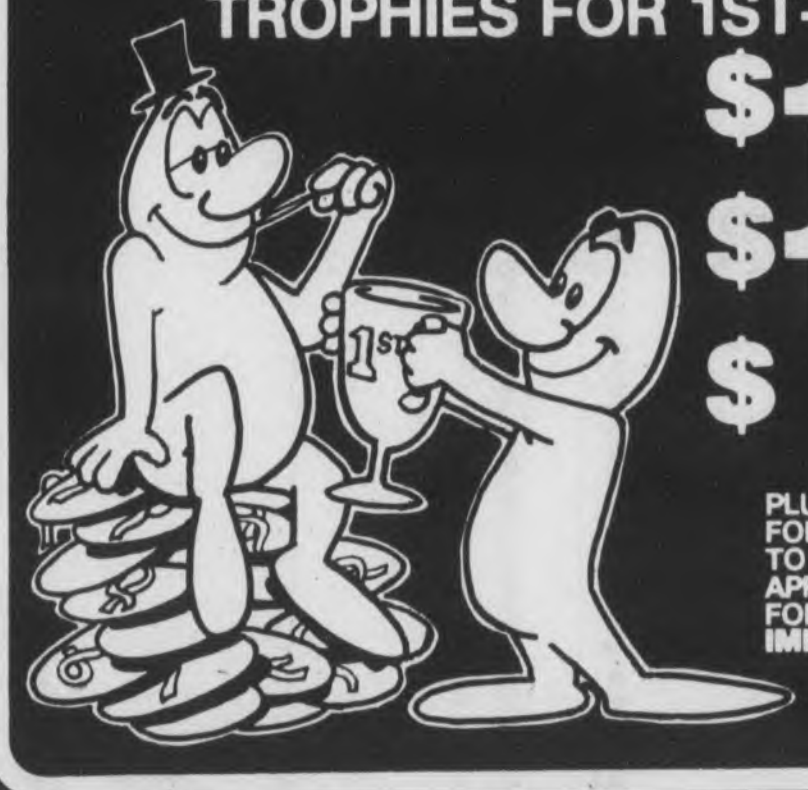
Banks tend to encourage the view that checking accounts are simply a service involving costs to them that must be passed on to the consumer. In reality, the banks use the daily balances remaining in checking accounts to earn profits, just as they use savings deposits on which interest is paid to the customer.

Rather than settling for the biggest or most conveniently located bank, Gendel suggests students shop around for the bank which offers the best checking account bargains.

AND NOW a word for moviegoers.

If you find yourself standing in line for a movie, getting to the door and learning the price has gone up again, take heart. You may be paying more for movies in Manhattan these days, but believe it or not, you're still doing better than most others in the country.

The going rate for a movie in Manhattan is now between $2.50 and $3. Currently, Chicago is at the top of the list, charging between $4 and $5 a seat. Las Vegas comes in a close second with its prices ranging fom $3.50 to $4.



Theater managers say prices are going up because of increases in minmum wage and utility costs which they have to pass along to the customers. Higher movie costs are also the result of the theaters' buying of better screens and sound equipment.

But, even with price increases, theater managers are still finding profits hard to come by. About 70 percent of box office receipts go to the picture's film company during the first week the movie runs. This decreases by 10 percent each week until it hits 35 percent for as long as the film plays at the theater.

Carlin vetoes death bill

TOPEKA (AP)—Moving with surprising swiftness and unwavering conviction, Gov. John Carlin vetoed Wednesday a bill which would have reinstated capital punishment in Kansas.

He said he did it because of his strong philosophical objection to using violence to deal with violent criminals. His veto message also left no doubt he will veto any future bills the Legislature sends him on the issue.

"I believe that society can find a way to deal with violence without using violence. I am confident that the state of Kansas can protect its citizens without taking the lives of its criminals," Carlin said in his 150-word veto message.

He found no legal or technical fault with the bill sent him less than 48 hours earlier by the Legislature, which had been trying for seven years to restore capital punishment in this state. Kansas' old death penalty law was struck down by a 1972 U.S. Supreme Court decision.

Supporters of the death penalty reacted with shock and indignation, accusing the young Democratic governor of reneging on a 1978 campaign promise not to veto a constitutional bill, and of ignoring the wishes of a majority of Kansans.

Among his sternest critics for vetoing the measure was former Attorney General Vern Miller, a fellow Democrat who now is district attorney of Sedgwick County.

FOES OF capital punishment, including clergymen, leaders of minority groups, legislators and Dr. Karl Menninger, praised Carlin's courage in standing up for his convictions. They also breathed a sigh of relief that the issue has been laid to rest for another year.

Legislative supporters of the bill, sent to Carlin only last Monday, conceded they had no hope of overriding the veto. No motion to override was even made in the House, which would have had first shot at trying to override.

The House had passed the final version of the bill Monday, 78-47, with 83 votes needed to override. The Senate approved it last Thursday, 21-19, with 27 votes needed to override.

The 38-year-old governor, making by far the toughest political decision in his three months in office, was not available Wednesday to answer questions elaborating on his veto.

His press secretary, Bill Hoch, said Carlin would hold his first news conference since the veto on Friday.

Hoch said early reaction from the general public, judging from telephone calls received on the governor's statewide "hotline," indicated the people were "primarily" positive to Carlin's decision.

Hoch had no figures to give newsmen on how the calls were running.

Carlin death bill veto gets 'polarized' reaction

TOPEKA (AP)—Former Attorney General Vern Miller called it "a great day for the murderer and the criminal, knowing he won't be put to death for his hideous acts."

Dr. Karl Menninger called it "a great act of courage, made by an honest, intelligent and Christian man."

Those diverse reactions typified comments over Gov. John Carlin's decision Wednesday to veto a bill reinstating capital punishment in Kansas.

Almost all reaction seemed to be that polarized.

Supporters of the death penalty said Carlin had broken a campaign promise and broken faith with Kansas people, a majority of whom polls consistently show favor reimposition of capital punishment in this state.

Foes of the death penalty lauded Carlin for standing up for his convictions, praised him for his courage and said it meant Kansas would not be reverting to a practice they regard as barbaric.

Both sides agreed the issue will not go away, with a new attempt likely in the 1980 session to pass another bill.

CARLIN SEEMED to take note obliquely in his veto message of a campaign statement last fall that he would not prevent a constitutional death penalty law from going on the books, even though he personally finds capital punishment unacceptable.

"...For decisions which are most serious for all of us, it is not always possible to know in advance what one's decision will be, he said."

The bill would have made death an alternative punishment to life in prison for persons convicted of premeditated, first-degree murder or murders which occur in the commission of a felony, such as armed robbery.

One jury would have decided guilt or innocence. A second jury would have determined the penalty, death or life imprisonment. Death would have been by lethal injection, not by hanging, as Kansas' previous capital punishment law provided.

Those charged with capital murder would have been permitted to choose their own attorney, with the state paying all legal fees.

Students direct and produce plays

When Augustin Stucker, graduate in speech, received Playboy's 25th Silver Anniversay Issue he didn't just read it and put it down. He used it as the basis for a play.

"For This We Thank You, Playboy," will be presented at 8 tonight, Friday and Saturday in the Purple Masque Theatre, along with two other one-act plays.

Two of the plays are written by students and all three are directed and presented by students.

"Playboy" is directed by Ed Schiappa, junior in secondary education.

Stucker described "Playboy" as light comedy, but said people read social implications into his play.

"I just wrote it for fun," he said.

"Playboy's" theme song describes the play's basic idea: "For this we thank you Playboy, for changing all our views. You cost a dollar fifty, but chalk it up for dues."

THE SECOND play, "Switchboard," written by Velina Houston, senior in journalism and mass communications, and directed by Stucker, is based on a student Houston taught in her Interracial Relations class.

Houston's play was read at the American College Theatre Festival in St. Louis.

"It's basically true, except the ending is ficticious," she said.

"There's a lot of comedy in the play," Houston said, "but it has a mature theme."

The plot entails a switchboard operator who has recently been released from a mental institution. With her mother constantly nagging her, and her marriage on the rocks, the operator is drawn to a voice over the phone, which she describes as "tea, easily sliding down the throat." The mystery person describes the operator's voice as "champagne," and accepts her invitation to meet.

BESIDES APPEARING at the 8 p.m. showing along with the other two plays, "Switchboard" will be presented for Lunch Bag Theatre, at 11:30 a.m., today in the Purple Masque Theatre.

The third play is a Reader's Theater production entitled, "An Experiment in Verbal Acrobatics." Segments will include readings from "Jabberwocky" by Lewis Carroll; "The Bell's" by Edgar Allan Poe; "The Yellow Pages" by Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

Dead week, evaluations viewed by committee

A testless dead week and two-week final week are two proposals being scrutinized by Student Senate's Academic Affairs Committee.

The committee's primary objective is to find out students' feelings on present dead week and final week policies.

"Let's not just talk about it anymore," said Dana Foster, committee chairman. "Let's find out if a majority of the students want a change."

Foster said the committee wants to set up a joint committee with Faculty Senate to study the feasibility of a 10-day final week, a testless dead week or a two-week final week.

Evaluating faculty members, hiring more minority faculty members and acting as liaison between Student Senate and Faculty Senate are primary concerns of the committee.

"Faculty evaluation would involve improvement of the current evaluation methods," Foster said.

Foster said the committee will work toward giving Student Senate more influence in instructor evaluation decisions.

The committee also will concentrate on increasing the number of minority faculty members and improving communication between Student Senate and Faculty Senate, he said.

The recently formed committee has already checked into the possibility of a more ceremonial graduation for students being graduated in December and August.

"The students want more," Foster said.

Changing the time of Landon Lectures has been discussed with University administrators but is considered unfeasible by them, Foster said. The lectures are scheduled for 10:30 on weekdays throughout the semester.

Jazz Ensemble to play 'in left field' tonight

The K-State Jazz Ensemble will be playing "out in left field" tonight, according to Frosty Lawson, lead trumpet player for the group.

The jazz band will be playing before the Kansas City Royals opening game at 6:30 tonight in Royals Stadium.

"We will be playing two, 20-minute sets before the game," Lawson said. "We will be set up on the sidelines somewhere near the grassy area in left field."

The band was invited to play at the game by the Kansas City Athletic Association, Lawson said.

"We have been invited to play for the Royals each year for the last four years," Phil Hewett, band director, said. "We have played for the team on several occasions that have included playoff and opening games."

Allocations may receive added notice in Senate

A resolution asking for careful consideration by Student Senate of Finance Committee's allocation recommendations will be voted on by senate during their meeting at 7 tonight in the K-State Union 8 Room.

Finance Committee is conducting group budget hearing and will begin tentative allocations with senate April 18.

"Our main intention of the resolution is to make the entire senate pay attention to what the Finance Committee recommendations are," said Dana Foster, junior in political science and co-sponsor of the resolution.

Foster said the Finance Committee has done quite a bit of extra work during the allocation hearings.

"We don't want to see the Finance Committee have all the power and all the say in the matter, but we really want the senators to take careful consideration during allocations," he said.

Patrick Miller, Finance Committee chairman and co-sponsor of the resolution, said he hopes to see more of an awareness of the committee recommendations from senate.

MILLER SAID the Finance Committee hasn't always been respected and listened to because of prejudices and misrepresentation.

"We hope the senators see the diversity of the committee. Several colleges are represented," Miller said.

"We aren't saying senate can't question Finance Committee—we want them to," Miller said. "But we want them to give careful consideration to what we (the Finance Committee) have to say."

"I think it (the resolution) will put in black and white that the senators need to be aware of how important the allocations are," Rich Macha, Student Senate chairman, said.

"I don't think it is necessary to pass something that should already be understood (in the senate)," Dee James, agriculture senator, said.

Any committee decision should be given consideration, James said.

Other business at the meeting will be the approval of members to the Public Relations Council, the Long Range Planning Committee and the approval of the appointee to the Women's Resource Center work-study position.

A bill concerning the revision of Student Government Association spending regulations will be presented as a first reading.

Greg Musil, student body president, said he is sure questions will be asked concerning the fate of Nichols Gym.

"I don't know what the people can do," Musil said. "I guess they can come and bitch (during the open meeting period) if they want."

Linder: retiring as a politician, but 'not about to call it a life'

By DAVE HUGHES
Staff Writer

He's usually spotted charging around campus with a loaded briefcase, wearing scuffed cowboy boots and sporting a K-State cap. For the past year he's had good reason to bustle. He's a full-time professor and the leader of the community.

But Robert Linder, mayor of Manhattan and professor of history, has managed to juggle both, and now is ready to pass the torch of the city's future.

Robert Linder

Linder served two terms as city commissioner with one year during each term as mayor.

Linder is not about to "call it a life," though. At 44, he is probably more active than many 20-year-olds. When he hands over the mayoral gavel April 17, ending eight years of service to the community, Linder will funnel his energy back to the pursuits of academia.

"I can do it (mayor) for a year, but I can't do it forever," he said.

LINDER said the commission job "is the most difficult job in government" because of the intense pressure which comes with accessibility.

While Linder said he is "tremendously intersted" in politics and will remain so in the future, he is through with political life.

Because of the heavy demands of city and school he said he has had to neglect three of his favorite things: his family, writing and sports.

He said his wife and four children were glad he ran for the commission and supported him during his incumbency. But, like Linder, they are glad he is giving it up.

Linder also wants to continue writng. He recently finished co-authoring "Twilight of the Saints: Biblical Christianity and Civil Religion in America" with Richard Peirard, professor of history at Indiana State University. He also has three more books in the mill and several articles "I've had almost finished for the last year."

While Linder's stint on the commission was time and energy consuming, it was not without reward.

When he first was elected, meetings were held at 2 p.m. The meetings were switched to the evening so more people could attend. Since then, the addition of cable television coverage and the KMAN weekly radio show "Commissioners Comments" has added to governmental exposure.

ON THE OTHER hand, Linder said he was disappointed when the commissioners failed to extend water services across the Kansas River, which would have been a prelude to annexation. The area will develop into an independent entity and the city will lose out on the tax revenue, while the area misses out on less expensive utilities, he predicted.

Comparing the pool's importance to a convention center, Linder said the improvement would have become a major facility for swim meets drawing many people to Manhattan.

Linder, from a poor farm background said he got into politics for just that reason.

Citing the commission was made up mostly of lawyers and businessmen in the mid 1960s, Linder said he wanted to see if there was a place in local politics for a person of ordinary origins.

"I wanted to see how far someone without money could go in government," he said. The City Commisson seemed to be about as far as he could go, he joked.

HE OFFERED the people, because of his background, a wider spectrum of representation; representation which included the University, a faction hitherto excluded from local political decision-making.

Reflecting on his career in politics, Linder said he had made mistakes, and had learned from them. But, he said he also had learned, as a politician, to never tell his constituents he had made mistakes.

He also said that if he knew then what he knows now, he would have done a better job on the commission.

"I'm a much wiser person now than I was 10 years ago."

The season has long been over, but basketball is still a major concern in Ahearn Field House.

The recruitment of prospective K-State basketball players is in full swing, heading for the April 11 signing deadline.

"I feel real good about our recruiting this year," Coach Jack Hartman said. "We've worked harder this year than ever before."

Hartman's hard work, however, doesn't indicate a desperate need for players, because the 1978-79 Wildcats had only one senior, Steve Soldner. The returning players include Glenn Marshall, Rolando Blackman, Tyrone Adams, Eugene Goodlow, Dean Danner, Ed Nealy, Brent Murphy, Jari Wills and Tim Jankovich, who transferred from Washington State last fall.

HARTMAN said he has three things in mind during this year's recruiting:

—K-State doesn't need great numbers of new players.

—The team needs to increase its depth at several positions.

—Some size should be added to the lineup to compete with big men at Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma and Iowa State.

KU will have 6-10 Mark Snow, a freshman who was redshirted this year with a broken foot. Last year in California, Snow erased several of Portland Trailblazer Bill Walton's high school records.

Missouri will have Steve Stipanovich, a highly recruited high school senior from St. Louis, Mo.

Oklahoma and Iowa State have established big men in Al Beal and Dean Uthoff. Beal was the Big 8 post-season tournament's most valuable player and Uthoff has led the conference in rebounding two years in a row. Both will be seniors next year.

K-STATE'S only player taller than 6-7 is 6-11 sophomore Greg Prudhoe, who was redshirted this year.

"Prudhoe's doing well," Hartman said. "But, he's the only big man we've got. We need to increase numbers in that area."

Hartman won't release the names of players he's recruiting, because "no good comes from it."

First, K-State's chances to sign a high school athlete may be damaged if the recruit reads that he's the No. 3 or No.4 choice. Second, other schools may change their strategy if they know K-State's priorities.

The K-State recruitment effort starts each fall, begins to wrap up with the basketball banquet Saturday, and finally ends April 11 on the signing date.

Assistant Coach Jim Eads is in charge of out-of-state recruitment and Assistant Coach Lon Kruger handles in-state recruiting.

EADS and Kruger "start their responsibility by finding out where the players are, contacting them to see if they're interested in K-State and checking to see what their academic standing is," Hartman laid.

After they have a feel for the athlete's interests, the coaches send them materials about K-State and Manhattan. If enough interest is shown, the coaches will travel to see the recruit play.

This starts in the fall and continues throughout the season. Hartman said the players they've seen play "number well into the hundreds."

Hartman and Eads have changed their recruiting strategy this year.

"Last year, we went to the east coast and west coast. You'll get some players, but for the money you spend, it's not a practical, feasible thing.

This year, Hartman has tried to "confine" his recruiting effort. He and Eads have traveled west as far as Montana and east to Ohio in search of potential K-Staters.

AFTER watching them play, Eads visits

Softball marathon to begin Friday

The KSU Association of Residence Halls (KSUARH) is sponsoring a 64-hour softball marathon this weekend to raise money for the Mabel Strong Scholarship Fund, the K-State Marching Band and the Manhattan United Way.

The marathon will begin at 8 a.m. Friday on the Northeast field in the Manhattan City Park and end at 12 p.m. Sunday, Stewart Bowersox, Haymaker Hall president, said.

So far, 67 teams have signed up to compete in the marathon, Bowersox said. A one dollar entry fee will be charged per team and prizes for participants will be provided by Aggieville Merchants.

Donors specify to which fund they wish to make their donations, Bowersox said.

What's wrong with professional basketball?

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

He stood on the corner of Seventh Avenue and 33rd Street, just 50 feet from New York's Madison Square Garden, wearing the scalper's uniform of sneakers, dungarees and a torn leather jacket.

Business was lousy. It was half an hour before the tipoff of Tuesday night's game between the Knicks and the Houston Rockets, and he was standing there holding a fistful of orange tickets.

"Hey, mister, you need Knicks tickets?" he called out to anyone who passed by. "I got two, great seats, down on the floor—half price."

He repeated his cry dozens of times in a span of five minutes; not a single sale was made.

A few years ago those tickets went for two and three times face value, but lately the scalpers have been getting burned. The Garden attendance, once an automatic sellout of 19,694, was announced that night as 9,407, including 8,700 season ticket holders. Less than 5,000 people were in the building.

The National Basketball Association completes its six-month regular season this weekend, only to launch into two months of playoffs. The powers have decreed if the playoff finals go the maximum seven games, the pro basketball season that began on Oct. 13—if you don't count five or six weeks of preseason exhibitions—will end on June 6.

AND YOU ask what's wrong with professional basketball?

Is it really that difficult to figure out why the NBA is in the doldrums and the college game is coming off a banner year? The NBA may have the best players in the world, but the college game has enthusiasm—and a clearly defined, compact season.

Enthusiasm, as shown by Michigan State stars Earvin Johnson and Greg Kelser in the recent NCAAs, may be a problem for the NBA. Some say a 30-year-old pro playing for $200,000 a year cannot match the enthusiasm of a 20-year-old college kid playing for his school.

But, anyone who went through Portland's Blazermania a couple of years ago won't buy that argument. Pros can and do play with just as much enthusiam as the collegians when there is a clearly defined objective. You can't put a price on a championship ring.

Maybe pros have been taught that it's unprofessional to show enthusiasm, as in the old Walt "Cool Clyde" Frazier image. If so, the NBA ought to do some remedial teaching, and fast.

BUT MAYBE the problem is just that there is too much meaninglessness in pro ball—too many meaningless minutes in too many meaningless games in a season that seems to last forever.

College ball begins after Thanksgiving and ends in March. Four months—30, 35 games—with conference rivalries and tournaments to spice things up. Interest peaks with the NCAAs, which have become a truly major sporting event.

The same cannot be said of the NBA finals, which last year were stretched over 18 days. The NBA titlist is a survivor as much as a champion. If baseball can complete a seven-game, coast-to-coast World Series in nine days, does pro basketball really need twice as much time?

The first two games of this year's playoff finals are tentatively scheduled for Sunday May 20 and Thursday May 24, in the same city. Is there any logical reason for three off days, when there isn't even any travel involved?

And you ask what's wrong with professional basketball?

Recruiting...

the homes of the players who are high on K-State's recruiting list. Hartman also visits homes after his season ends.

While K-State recruiting often involves some quick travel—Hartman visited four families in two days last week—it doesn't involve the extensive travel of some of the more affluent schools.

"We don't have the luxury of alumni who can make private jets available to us," Hartman said.

Part of the extra expense of recruiting is often caused by the lack of a large amount of in-state talent and the fierce competition with KU and Wichita State for that talent.

Hartman said K-State has a recruiting disadvantage some schools don't encounter, because states such as Missouri have only one large state institution.

KANSAS and Missouri high schools produced a wealth of talent this year, Hartman said, and Missouri has already had a great recruiting year because of little in-state competition.

It's too early to tell if K-State's overall recruiting picture will be as good, but Hartman is optimistic as the recruitment winds down into its final week.

"We're talking to several kids who have good size," Hartman said. "And, we're talking to some players with a good reputation, and some fine prospects who haven't had a chance to establish a reputation."

Don't be fuelish.

'Obscure Object of Desire' misses the boat

By KELLY WILKERSON
Collegian Reviewer

"That Obscure Object of Desire," the Kaleidoscope film showing today in the K-State Union, is accurately described by its title.

While viewing the film, I had a desire to get sick, a desire to walk out, a desire to read a Flash Gordon comic book, a desire to do anything which might help me understand the film.

Collegian Review

As far as viewer enjoyment, the film has everything needed to make it a low-rate flick.

It's got subtitles, a plot which is impossible to understand, an old Frenchman who has the hots for an 18-year-old named Conchita and if all that doesn't turn you off, Conchita is played by two different women. Yep, two actresses in one role.

At first I didn't understand the reason for the two different women playing the one role, then it hit me:

The two women portray two different emotions of the same person; an interesting idea. Too bad it didn't help make the film any less confusing.

The plot for the film is simple. Ha!

ALL YOU have to do is take a Frenchman, a midget psychologist, a train, a burlap sack and the Revolutionary Army of Infant Jesus, combine all elements, age for about two hours and let the viewer come up with whatever plot he or she wants.

Don't get me wrong, the film has a plot, I read about it on the press release.

And if the people who made the film are serious about what they wrote in the release, the film makes a truly profound, meaningful statement about the distressing circumstances of the chaos the world is in today. Bull!

The film is just too complicated, confusing and complex for the viewer to understand.

As in all subtitled movies the acting gets lost because the reader only sees the bottom third of the screen.

What little acting the viewer may get quickly loses its impact because the viewer has to try and figure out just what is going on in the film.

THE FILM evolves around flashbacks of Mr. Fabert, the 50ish Frenchman, as he relates his life with Conchita (both of her), to a group of (are you ready for this one?) people traveling on a train with him.

People who live in Europe and travel by train must be some nice, concerned folks because his fellow travelers seemed to love hearing all the details.

If you're into mysteries where you have to figure out "who done it," this film gives you an excellent chance to exercise your mind.

Just try to find the meaning behind this confusing piece of imported cinematography.

Strong...

—small hall food services serve a social function.

—they provide employment for hall residents.

—they provide training for dietetics students.

—they are a major point of attraction for new students.

—the committee was not convinced the food services are an "unbearable strain" on Housing because the housing system runs in the black.

—further cuts in housing services will damage the whole housing system.

"I believe we would save money by consolidating all halls into one," Frith said. "I believe moving everybody to Boyd is money-saving and the least traumatic to residents."

ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR of Housing Jean Riggs said she proposed closing all three food services because of "fiscal responsibility." Providing food service to Strong residents costs more than providing the service to large-hall residents, she said.

"This means that Kramer and Derby students have been supporting the (small hall) food services," Riggs said.

Riggs emphasized the costs of renovating Van Zile's kitchen to satisfy fire code regulations and replacing Boyd's and Putnam's 29-year-old kitchen equipment.

The council estimated a cost of $174,000 for capital improvements to be made during the next three years to keep the food services operating. This would mean an increase of $40 spread over these three years for each of the 4,400 Housing residents. If the three food services were consolidated into Boyd Hall, housing payments would need to be inceased by $15. This represents a $25 difference between the two options.

"It is my judgment that $25 would be better spent in other areas to make them more attractive—like new furniture and new energy-efficient windows," Frith said.

"We have another dollar cost—the dollar cost of public relations, the dollar cost of student satisfaction and the dollar cost of an educational process," said Margaret Nordin, associate director of the Center for Student Development and council member.

"That's really what we're talking about—how much damage do you do to the system if you consolidate and how much...if you get your costs too high," said Chet Peters, vice president for Student Affairs and council chairman.

MUCH DISCUSSION focused on whether all housing residents would be willing to pay more to enable Strong residents to keep their food services.

"We've lost staff people, breakfast, weekend meals, we don't have air conditioning or decent furniture—the (small hall) students sort of feel they've been screwed," Young said.

As the vote was taken, the Strong students grasped hands and shed tears of relief.

Shortly after the consolidation motion was defeated, a second motion to operate the food services "as is" by increasing housing payments to pay for necessary renovations was passed by a vote of 3-1, with five abstentions.

Council members voting for consolidation were Beatty, Riggs and Frith.

'Save Nichols'

Students take case to governor, state legislators

Managing Editor

TOPEKA—About 120 K-State students, led by a four-man team of student representatives, voiced a personal appeal to legislators Thursday in an attempt to preserve K-State's Nichols Gym.

"What we've been trying to get across is that the 1960s students were upset and they decided to burn it (Nichols Gym) down. The students of the 1970s are concerned and would like to build it back up," Student Body President Greg Musil told Gov. John Carlin during an interview in Carlin's office.

The caravan of concerned students arrived at noon and gathered on the south steps of the Capitol. Student representatives read their official statement of position to rally members, newsmen and television interviewers.

The statement called for the renovation of the existing shell of Nichols and the enactment of a state feasibility study to determine alternate uses of the building. The statement also stressed the support students showed in Wednesday's rally and the 1,600 signatures on petitions which had been circulated for 24 hours.

As rally members outside the Capitol cheered statements by student representatives criticizing the lack of student involvement in the decision, in an unofficial vote at K-State—using ballots in Wednesday's Collegian—students voted 15 to one that the plan to raze Nichols was wrong.

FOLLOWING the initial rally on the south steps, students dispersed to seek out and state their case to district representatives.

When it was learned later that many of the representatives were being bombarded by lobbying students, leaders of the group assigned people to visit specific representatives to stop confusion.

Meanwhile, four representatives, Musil; Rich Macha, Student Senate chairman; Tom Hollinberger, organizer of the caravan and Wednesday's rallies; and Randy Tosh, state and legislative affairs director for Musil; were presenting their arguments to the joint House Committee.

After their five-minute presentation, they were allowed to give a more detailed presentation to Carlin at 2:30 p.m.

In that meeting Musil explained the recommendation to Carlin and what he thought were the student's reactions to K-State President Duane Acker's recommendation to the Legislature Wednesday.

"We don't quite see how one year the Legislature would support saving it (Nichols), and one year later turn around 180 degrees and state that it is no longer worth saving and want to tear it down," Musil said.

Musil also said he thought the proposal to make an outdoor "commons area" or amphitheater could be carried out through classes in the schools of Architecture and Design, Constructioon Science and Horticulture—which he said were some of the finest schools in the country.

Carlin asked if the idea of students working on such a project had ever been seriously considered at the University.

"That's another problem" Musil said. "There has never been an official state feasibility study done on this building.

"There has never really been an official state feasibility study done on this building," he said.

CARLIN COUNTERED and said: "Hasn't the charge always been 'What's it going to cost to go in and use the shell and rebuild?' Has anybody ever looked at the possibility of an outdoor amphitheater?"

"We have a rough scenario, and some costs to that effect," Hollinberger said. "We presented that scenario to the joint committee and referred it to one of the professors at K-State (Gene Ernst, associate professor of architecture). One of Union board aims for 'decency,' bans showing of x-rated films

"X-rated movies will not be shown in the K-State Union."

That is the official Union policy decided last night by the Union Governing Board (UGB) during its bi-weekly meeting.

The policy was made after members of the committee and Union Program Council (UPC) objected to the resolution submitted by William Honstead, faculty member of the board.

The original resolution said: "Be it resolved: The UGB desires that the entertainment provided to the students at KSU in the Union contributes to the cultural and educational aspects of the University.

"At the same time, we insist that the programs presented in the Union meet a high standard of decency and good taste. Programs which do not conform to these guidelines should not be presented.

"It is our intention to review the offering of the Union Program Council again during the second semester of 1979-80 with the purpose of evaluating how these guidelines have been followed."

Members of UPC objected to the original resolution, calling it too vague and ambiguous to serve as a guideline.

"The charge that I have somehow violated standards of decency and good taste is a knee in the groin to me," UPC member Dave Colburn said of the resolution.

Student Senate puts $10,000 into 'Nickels for Nichols' drive

By THE SGA STAFF

In an effort to influence the Kansas Legislature, Student Senate unanimously reaffirmed its "commitment to preserving the Nichols Gym structure" to the tune of $10,000.

The resolution, introduced by Student Body President Greg Musil, was written by students returning from Topeka after lobbying legislators to prevent the leveling of Nichols Gym.

Senate allocated $10,000 in 1975 for reconstruction of an art gallery in the gym and extended this allocation unanimously in 1978.

Musil said the purpose of last night's resolution is to "show the intent is still there" and to make the $10,000 available for preserving the gym's structure as well as for renovation or reconstruction.

"It's essential we move rapidly on this," Steve Hentges, arts and sciences senator, said. "I don't like part of my university being torn down for a road."

Hentges said senate should support the resolution because of student protests, petitions and a vote of support for saving the gym from a proposed $125,000 destruction.

Following a recommendation Wednesday by K-State President Duane Acker to partially raze the gym to construct a road, K-State students held protest rallies outside the administration building.

A POLL published in Thursday's Collegian and tabulated by Student Senate showed 76 students agreed with Acker's recommendation while 1,532 disagreed.

Dana Foster, junior in political science and coordinator of the election, said $6.85 was donated in a "Save Nickels for Nichols" campaign.

Bill Shay, a campus member of the Associated Students of Kansas (ASK), told the group that letters of support for preserving Nichols Gym were sent to Gov. John Carlin and key legislators by six ASK-member universities.

A resolution for senate to give more consideration to the recommendations of Finance Committee during tentative allocations was defeated 17—12.

A resolution to allocate honorary 4.0 grade point averages and three-minute standing ovations at future senate meetings to students who lobbied in Topeka was declared out-of-order by the chair.

Nichols...

the representatives (Sen. Jack Steineger, D-Kansas City) said that he knew the professor and requested that the professor call him. That (Ernst's plan) has been called in and verified.

"The proposal basically amounts to a little bit over, if not less than, the $125,000 that's proposed to tear down the structure and pour that $125,000 into stabilizing the entire shell. We would landscape the interior and simply exercise the option of using the entire structure as a building," Hollinberger said.

Musil added, "If we use that $125,000 to $150,000 or even $200,000 to stabilize the structure, at least we will have some options available in the future."

Carlin then offered the four crusaders a fantasy situation to consider.

"What are your priorities, top to bottom? If you had your druthers—just list out your options—if somehow the money fell out of the sky?"

Musil said the first priority, if unlimited funds were available, would be to rebuild the "castle" and turn it into an art center.

The governor then dismissed the fantasy and posed another question.

"Now going back to reality, because those dollars are not available, you are saying then that your next priority would be to preserve the structure as is, or build a temporary outdoor something, so if the money fell out of the sky, you would still have a structure—some way to keep that dream alive?" Carlin asked.

MUSIL EXPLAINED the students' reactions of the previous 24 hours, and said those actions were an "accurate gauge" of the students' feelings.

Thirty seconds of silence followed. Carlin studied the information the group had provided him. The four representatives looked to each other and anxiously waited for Carlin's reply.

Carlin thanked them for the information and indicated the meeting was nearing an end.

"Don't feel like you have to win or lose your cause in the next 48 hours because you'll have a chance at the end of April," Carlin said.

Carter to lift ceiling on oil prices

WASHINGTON—President Carter told the American people Thursday night "each one of you will have to use less oil and pay more for it" as he announced plans to gradually lift ceilings on U.S. produced crude oil by 1981.

In his text for a television-radio address from the Oval Office, Carter said he is asking Congress to impose a "windfall profits tax" that would sop up half the extra revenues that oil companies would get from higher prices under decontrol or from price increases dictated by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Although Carter may legally lift controls without congressional approval, the House and Senate must approve the tax, which faces an uncertain fate on Capitol Hill.

Emphasizing that revenues from the tax would go to poor families, mass transit projects and efforts to develop new energy sources, Carter sought to put lawmakers on the spot by declaring:

"Every vote against it will be a vote for excessive oil company profits and for reliance on the whims of the foreign oil cartel."

Carter argued that these and other measures he is taking or proposing will combine to cut U.S. demand for imported oil while increasing domestic energy resources.

"Even with the windfall profits tax in place, our oil producers will get substantial new income—enough to provide plenty of incentive for increased domestic production," the president argued.

Carter said he will demand that the oil industry use the extra income for energy development "and not to buy department stores and hotels as some have done in the past."

Administration officials, briefing reporters on condition that they not be identified publicly, asserted that the gradual oil decontrol proposal will add 4 to 5 cents per gallon to the price of gasoline and home heating oil by September 1981.

Some other estimates have ranged as high as 15 cents a gallon.

Sadat: Bombs won't build homeland

NEW YORK—Terrorists waging an underground war against the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty bombed a bus stop in Arab Jerusalem and struck Israeli and Egyptian targets in Cyprus Thursday. In Cairo, President Anwar Sadat told the Palestinians "a bomb here and there" will not build a homeland and appealed to them to join in the peace process.

Sadat also warned of stern retribution for attacks against Egypt.

Meanwhile, Egypt and Israel continued moving toward normal relations.

In the Sinai Peninsula, Egyptian civilians were allowed for the first time since the 1967 Middle East War to come and go as they pleased, without military passes, along the main roads and in the villages of Egyptian-held areas.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin traveled to the Israeli settlement of Yamit in the occupied Sinai, scheduled to be abandoned in the Israeli withdrawal from the peninsula, and appealed to residents to "accept the situation" for "the sake of peace, for the sake of your children."

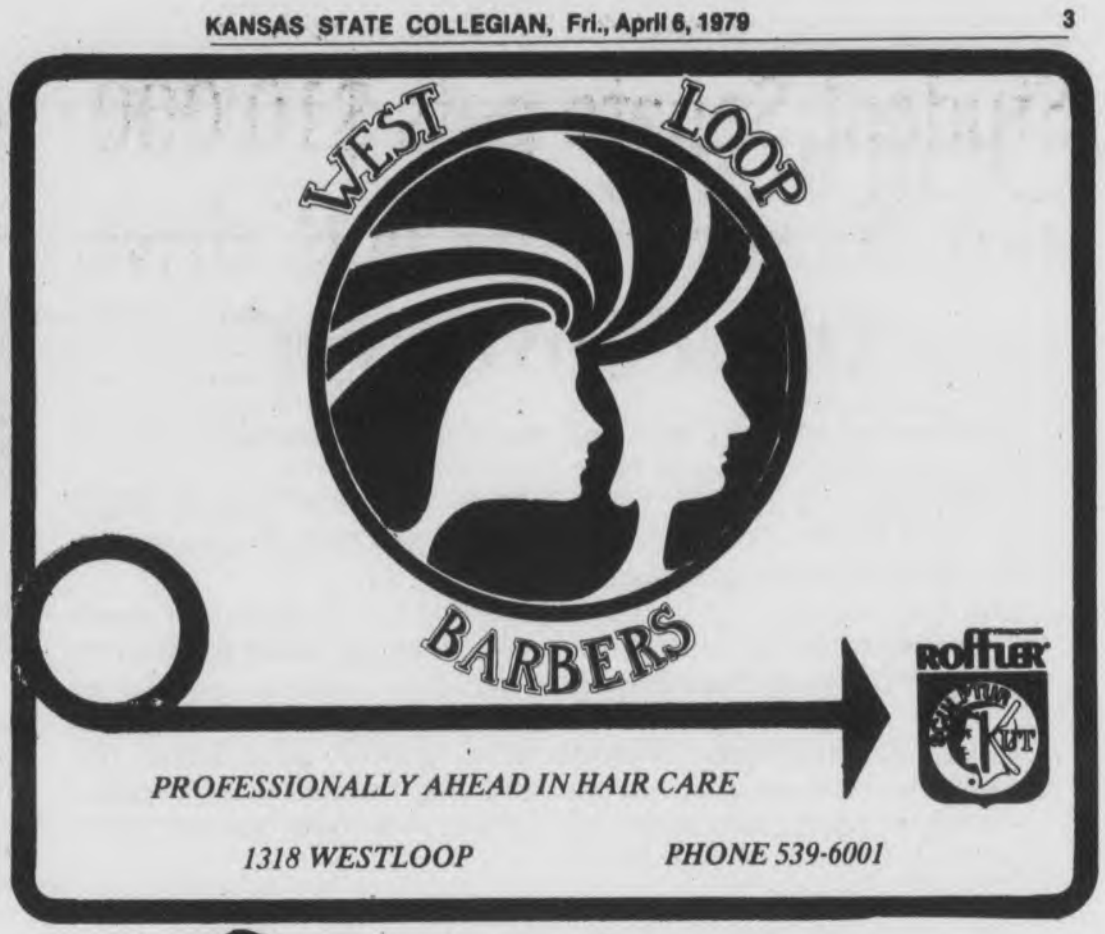
Settlers booed and shouted "Go home!" to the Israeli leader.

U.S. officials in Washington said Secretary of State Cyrus Vance would join Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin in a meeting at the Sinai capital of El Arish on May 27. At that meeting, the two leaders will formally open the border between their two nations.

Mother buys time for condemned son

ATMORE, Ala.—John Louis Evans III was spared from death in the electric chair Thursday night when U.S. Supreme Court Justice William Rehnquist stayed the sentence for one week on an appeal by Evans' mother.

John Carroll, attorney for the killer who had said he wanted to die, said less than six hours before the scheduled 12:01 a.m. CST execution that the Supreme Court justice had delayed it until April 13.



Rehnquist said in Washington that the sentence was stayed for "further consideration of the application of Betty Evans," mother of the convicted murderer.

Since Evans had said he would rather die in Alabama's yellow electric chair than spend the rest of his life in jail, Mrs. Evans had made the last minute appeal for his life.

Evans, who had refused to fight his death sentence for the slaying of a Mobile, Ala. pawn shop owner, had no immediate comment.

Opinions

'It isn't over yet'

They poured into the Capitol in Topeka. Organized rapidly, the 120 K-State students contacted their representatives.

They didn't have much time, K-State President Duane Acker announced his decision Wednesday and the state Senate passed the recommendation to raze Nichols the same day.

But, they did their best, including getting 120 students to Topeka the day after the announcement and contacting most of the key representatives; four students met with Gov. John Carlin. Later Thursday, students organized a rally for Nichols.

Even though student interests were ignored at K-State, the students had the pleasant surprise of being listened to in Topeka.

For their work, they received a comment from Senator Wint Winter (R-Ottawa) who said:

"It isn't over yet."

The group who went to Topeka, led by Greg Musil, student body president, deserves the thanks and support from the many who couldn't attend. Musil, in particular, deserves thanks for his wonderful job of representing the student interest in Nichols since the first time he was asked for a recommendation by Acker.

Those who were unable to go to Topeka Thursday, expressed their support for "The Castle" by voting 1,532 to 76 against razing the structure. The results of the vote were given to Gov. Carlin by telephone.

But Winter is right, "it isn't over yet." There is still plenty to be done if Nichols is to stay.

A rally will be held at 5 p.m. today on "The Castle's" lawn. Go if you care about Nichols' fate.

Keep on contacting your representatives. The more letters and phone calls they receive, the greater chance Nichols has.

Somebody will have to go to Topeka when the House considers the bill. It hasn't been scheduled yet, but when it is, take a "road trip" to Topeka.

Above all, remember that if $100,000 can be spent to renovate "the landmark of campus" then another campus landmark—one that students can use—deserves more than a driveway in its future.

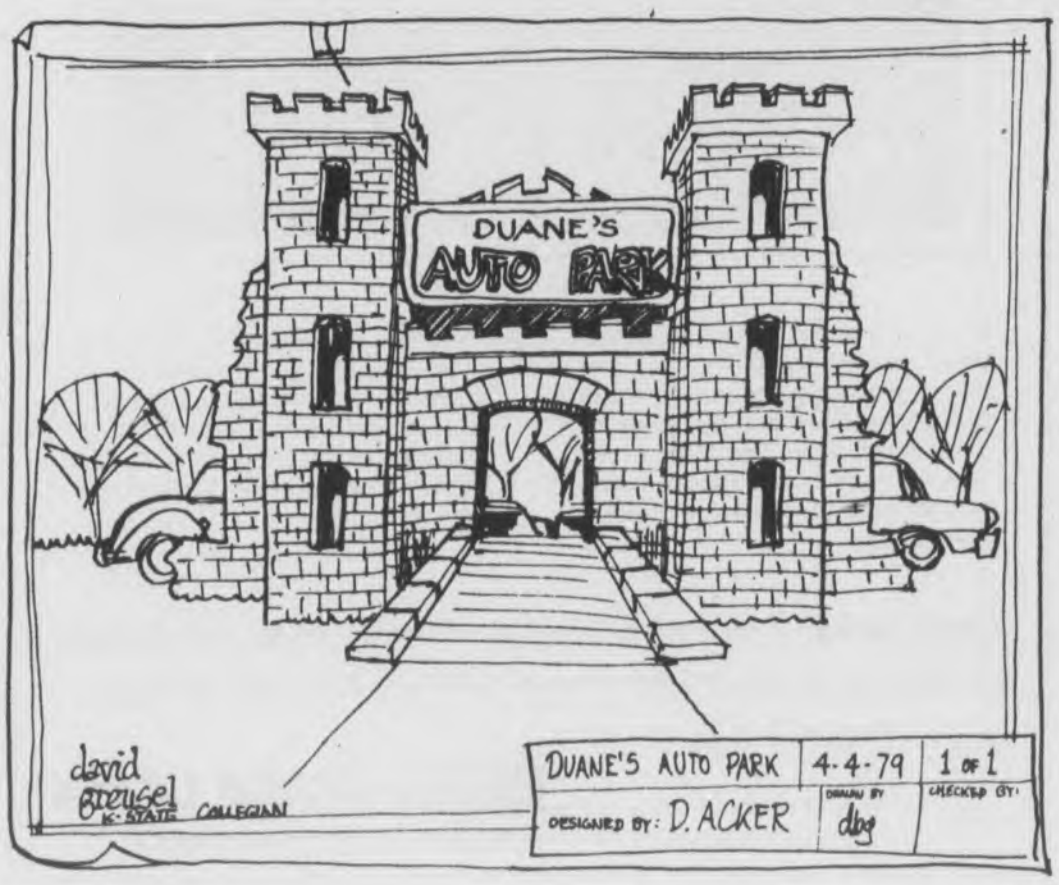
Strong student victory

Somebody on this campus listens to students. Even though it looked like the small hall residents would lose their food services, they didn't.



Many adminstrators were against it, and it was hard to interest the campus in an issue involving only 640 students. But they succeeded.

They succeeded by publicizing the issue, paying for ads in the Collegian, writing letters, putting up posters and uncovering facts proving the residents pay their way.

They have themselves and a few administrators to thank for this. Even those administrators who voted for the food service probably wouldn't have stuck their necks out if students hadn't campaigned so vigorously to keep their services.

So give yourselves a pat on the back, folks. You've done more than keep your food services, you've proven students can accomplish something when they try.

Fast food farce

Another fast food haven has hatched in Manhattan. "Andy's," home of "hot and juicy, country fresh" burgers and hot dogs on Bluemont Avenue, had its debut about 3½ weeks ago and had been swarmed ever since by customers seeking culinary convenience and quickness.

Yes, another all-American hamburger stand has been added to the brood. Manhattan—a germinating garden of fast food sanctuaries. Whether a craving for fast food attacks you at the east or west end of town, or whether you hanker pizza, tacos, chicken, seafood or hamburgers—Manhattan will accommodate.

If your appetite hungers for a cardboard-thick burger sandwiched between spongy, toilet paper-tasting buns, then try McDonald's, the Sonic Drive-In, A&W Root Beer Drive-In or Burger King. Or for something a bit more robust, opt for Vista or Andy's.

If it's not the all-American burger you ache for, maybe it's the all-American pizza—manufactured by any of three Pizza Huts in town, or by Straw Hat Pizza. And alas, the choices aren't complete without recognizing the three Mexican food outlets, the two Country Fried Chickens and the Long John Silver's Seafood Shoppe anchored in Manhattan.

But does this host of options acutally constitute a choice? What makes Andy's so different from Hardee's? Its new indoor-outdoor carpeting, the sneeze-guard hovering over the salad bar, or the salad bar itself?

AGREED, Andy-burgers aren't nearly as tasteless as Hardee-burgers, but it may be argued that Andy's is still in its infancy. The mediocrity acceptable to patrons has yet to become apparent at Andy's. The grease hasn't stifled the enthusiasm or encrusted the grills. But, boiled down, they yield the same end product.

And this not only applies to Andy's and Hardee's, but to all quick food shops. They not only sell comparable after-tastes, but provide identical decors and atmosphere (excluding the varying colors of the Formica tabletops found within, and the hard plastic arms coating their exteriors.) To revive the expression of musician Bill Haymes, who played in the Catskellar this semester: We are leaving the next generation a legacy of plastic and golden arches.

The lament of busy bodies (no, not busybodies) who haven't the time for a relaxed, thoughtfully prepared meal, doesn't go unheard. There is a place for some convenience stands, but when this form of dining exceeds 50 percent of the possible dining alternatives, not including private clubs, one begins to re-evaluate their purpose.

AND WHAT ABOUT those who will sacrifice time for a well-prepared meal? Where in Manhattan, besides a private club, may one be surrounded with unusual, or at least tasteful, atmosphere while nibbling on a two-inch thick burger, dripping with juice, on a hard roll? What about a sandwich shop tempting with homemade soups, deli meats such as pastrami, salami, hot ham, turkey, roast beef, corn beef, and bakery-fresh pumpernickel and rye bread (the kind that chews like leather but is your tastebuds savor)?

Regardless of the number of yellow-page dining ads in the Manhattan phone directory, the restaurant choices are still limited. There are extremes. It's a choice between the fast food counters and the 10-day waiting periods required for admittance to a private club. No happy medium.

Places resembling Andy's will continue to sprout and prosper in Manhattan, however. As long as there is a clientele to cater to, fast foods will cater. But will abiding acceptance of fast food service act only as reinforcement for their flourishing activity, making fast foods the most profitable and lucrative of all food business, until they reign in the restaurant kingdom?

As long as there are complainers rebelling their spreading contamination, probably not. But Haymes may be correct in saying we are burdening the next generation with a fabrication of plastic and Formica.

Spitting opinion abusive

Editor,

An incident happened last week to a friend of mine that I consider pathetic and despicable. It shows how low and sick some people are. The incident occurred when a girl I know was spit upon in the Union by a person I'm sorry to say was of the male gender and apparently claiming to be of the human race.

At this point I would like to give this courageous man a brief statement in citizenship that every high school student is subjected to in the form of one course or another. What we were taught was "one person's freedom ends where another person's freedom begins." This is basically what our (American) system is all about. The reason I'm giving this reminder is that I'm not sure they teach these principles in Arab countries or not, apparently they don't.

I would like to think others from this gentleman's culture would deplore this act even knowing the girl he spit upon is Jewish. My friend does have a Jewish heritage which she is proud of but she is also an American, born here with an Amercan heritage.

I'm not involved in the conflicts of the Middle East and neither is she so I become very obstinate when a guest of our country uses freedoms we fought for to express his own bigoted ideas in such an ugly manner. I hope he is pround of his manly act.

Let me say the U.S. is not perfect as the blacks and other minorities may agree but we are above spitting on people—let alone women because of religious heritage.

Any other day the same two people would have passed without incident, but on this particular day the girl was wearing a necklace with a Jewish emblem.

We American's cherish our religious freedom and I don't appreciate any visitor even from an oil-rich country violating that priviledge.

If you have to spit, save it, custodians don't appreciate saliva on the Union floors.

Nichols... preserve integrity

Editor,

Re: Nichols Gym. I believe the razing of Nichols Gym is a grave error and not in the best interests of the students.

Though President Acker has the right to make a decision, I also believe the students should have and MUST have a say in it; after all, we use the University too.

The $125,000 set aside for the demolition and landscaping should be used, but for the landscaping of the structure as it is. Fill it with dirt and plant tulips around it if you must, but please preserve the integrity of the entire building as it stands now. (Why demolish parts of the building when it would be easier to landscape around and through it?)

Surely we have enough architecture and landscape architecture students and faculty to present even a few viable alternatives short of total destruction of a campus landmark.

This University already has one Golden Fleece Award; we don't need another for $25,000 more.

John Karpiscak
junior in architecture

beginning of pride

Editor,

As a student at K-State, I have formulated many of my own opinions of this university over the past semester and a half. I have witnessed more stupidity on the part of students and faculty than I ever thought possible.

I'll begin with the Nichols Gym controversy. I cannot understand President Acker's justification of demolishing "The Castle" at the estimated cost of $125,000. The students of K-State are definitely opposed to this decision and this campus and university should be for the students.

After all, we pay the bills for offices, etc. I support the idea of converting Nichols Gym to an arboretum for educational and recreational purposes. I am certain Nichols Gym could be converted to an aesthetically pleasing structure that would continue to enhance the beauty and personality of the K-State campus for years at a cost much cheaper than $125,000.

As it is, the campus lacks personality. The campus needs another "rose garden" type atmosphere like the days of old.

At the same time, I do not understand the students of K-State either. It is time we rid ourselves of apathy. I applaud the action of students protesting the Nichols Gym destruction. But why doesn't that concern carry over to all aspects of campus?

This campus is coated with trash. Litter is everywhere I look. The streams, sidewalks, paths, fields and everywhere else is covered with trash. What is the matter students? Don't you have any pride in your campus?

As for the "TNE graffiti clan"—take a hike gang. Start showing some respect for the beautiful structures that exist here before President Acker has them torn down.

If the students, faculty and community work together, K-State would become the pride of the Midwest. If the students will show respect for the campus, the administrators may begin to listen to our opinions. And, as the university improves, the community will take pride in K-State also.

Acker proposal logical

Editor,

There it sits, a monument to nothing except to the firebug who put it to the torch—a pretty structure, very well worth compromising a section.

But with all the troubles and needs this university has, renovation of Nicvhols Gym is not too probable. Oh, yes we want—a coal plant, Farrell library fixed, new classroom building, a new field house AND renovation of a dilapidated relic. Everyone wants their cake and eat it too.

President Acker's proposal was and is one of the most logical solutions. The view of the students has been known for some time and it was not necessary for another poll. The money is just not available.

To some of the loud-mouthed protestors whose idea of civil disobedience is an exchange of cheap Johhny Carson one-liners I say—put up or shut up.

Brian Flattery
senior in milling science and management

asinine monument

Editor,

As I stood in front of Anderson Hall Wednesday evening listening to President Acker defend his position on razing part of Nichols Gym, his reasoning became flawlessly clear to me:

President Acker doesn't want to leave all of Nichols Gym standing—as a monument to his indecision.

Instead, he wants to leave a part of it standing—as a monument to his asinine decision.

Larry Kopitnik
senior in fine arts

dbg

Nichols Gym has stood for 10 years as a monument to indecision, which, we think, is one hell of a lot better than letting its front door stand forever as a monument to bad judgment.

Working vacation

Company uses questionable recruiting tactics for summer work

By MIKE REAM
Staff Writer

The summer vacation begins in Nashville, Tenn.

A student awaits sales training after contracting to knock on doors 12½ hours and call on at about 30 prospects each day, six days a week, selling books.

The Southwestern Company has recently been recruiting K-State students to experience such a summer, according to Diane Robson, student manager (and recruiter) for Southwestern.

They'll train you (at your own expense) to sell either "The Volume Library," of encyclopedia nature, a selection of preschool children's books or religious books, Robson said. She said this may be invaluable training a student will need before graduating from college.

After training the student is assigned to a territory at least 1,000 miles from Kansas where he or she must pay room, board and transportation expenses with down payments from books sold, Robson said.

She said the law of averages show if the salesman visits at least 30 prospects each day and gives the 20-minute sales pitch every time, then the salesman should make two or three sales a day.

ROBSON HAS been arranging interviews with students to select those to go through training in Nashville.

According to students who attended the interviews, no mention is made before the interview of what company is interviewing or what kind of job the interview is for, unless the student specifically, asks the caller. Even then, no mention is made of the type of job.

"We've gone 'round and 'round with them (Southwestern) for basically the same reasons," Walter Smith, director of the K-State Union, said. "They won't tell anybody what they're going to do (in the interview). They won't tell them (students) they're a book company until they've got them right in the room."

Smith said Southwestern should be scheduling rooms in the Union to use for the interviews. He said there is a $25 charge every time a room is used by outside companies who conduct on-campus interviews.

Robson said she was not aware she had to reserve rooms for the interviews, or that there was a charge involved.

She said she asks students to sign a contract on the night of the interview. She said this commits the student to a summer job with Southwestern.

EXPLAINING WHY a student should make such a sudden decision without taking time to think it over or to consult parents, Robson said she is looking only for decisive and independent people.

"Don't accept a job offer the first time you ever meet anybody from the place of business. Check them out," Melanie Stockdell, director of the Consumer Relations Board, said.

"The manner in which Southwestern is conducting their recruiting efforts at K-State is far from ethical," she said.

According to consumer complaint reports, Stockdell said Southwestern recruiters use "extremely high pressure tactics" when trying to convince students to sign up for the summer job program.

She also said Southwestern recruiters don't tell prospects about the job before the interview "because it's door to door sales in the deep South. They're (students) selling to people who they've never met before—never seen before—because the whole thing is tied to religion.

"The main thing to look for is somebody who wants you to make a decision right away. If they want you to make a decision right away, there is something that they're covering up," Stockdell said.

"They (Southwestern representatives) don't want you to know how much leverage they're going to have over your life," she said, "but when you sign this contract or make the agreement to go with them for the summer, you're really giving up more than just the summer.

"It's 24 hours a day, literally, seven days a week. Your life is absolutely theirs for that period."

Need financial aid? Not too late to apply

Although February 14 was the priority date for students to turn in aid applications for next year, students who have not yet turned in applications are still eligible to receive Basic Education Opportunity Grants (BEOG) and National Direct Student Loans (NDSL), according to Glenda Walters, assistant director of student financial assistance.

Students turning in applications at a late date, however, risk the chance of not being considered for work study and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants (SEOG), Walters said.

"These two programs run out of money fairly early in the consideration of aid applications because those who apply by the priority date are those considered for the programs," Michael Novak, director of student financial assistance, said.

Students applying for loans for the beginning of the school year should turn in their applications by June 1.

A variety of scholarships also are available to students in all colleges.

Ballet troup to grace McCain stage

By ROBIN PEPPERS
Collegian Reporter

Following two years of preparation, the Pennsylvania Ballet arrives on campus today.

The company will perform at 8 o'clock tonight and Saturday in McCain Auditorium, and also will conduct a master class for K-State dance students today in the Dance Studio at Ahearn Field House.

The Ballet is a 32-member company under the direction of founder Barbara Weisberger. They tour with their own orchestra, the Pennsylvania Orchestra, under the direction of Maurice Kaplow.

Each performance will feature different works, employing a mixture of classic and contemporary ballet.

Tonight's performance includes "Divertimento Number 15," by George Balanchine, director of the New York City Ballet. It is an abstraction on a score by Mozart.

The company also will perform "Eakin's View," an acknowledgement of Philadelphia painter Thomas Eakin and the impact of his art on the nation, and "Coppelia," choreographed by Nicolai Sergeyev in 1870. It is the story of a marionette and her love for a prince.

"It is very lively and filled with love and all the things that accompany a festival and a wedding," said Roseanne Uhlarik, director of the Manhattan Arts Council.

SATURDAY'S PERFORMANCE will feature "Signatures," choreographed by Benjamin Harkarvy, artistic director of the company. The number introduces each dancer and reveals their personal technique and style, according to Uhlarik.

"Don Quixote Pas de Deux," an old duet ballet, also will be performed Saturday night, along with "L'Ardeur," another duet, choreographed by Dane LaFontsee assistant artistic director.

Robin Preiss, a member of the company, taught classes for intermediate and advanced ballet students Thursday and LaFontsee will conduct a master class of contemporary ballet at 10 a.m. today.

Because of space problems involved in setting scenery and props for the company in McCain, the ballet will rehearse at Theodore Roosevelt Grade School this afternoon and the orchestra will rehearse in Manhattan High School's auditorium. The rehearsals are open to the public.

The Pennsylvania Ballet was founded by Weisberger in 1963, one year after she opened a school of ballet. Funds for the school and the ballet came from the Ford Foundation.

THE SCHOOL focuses on apprenticeships for pre-professional dancers; many are members of the company.

The ballet avoids using highly publicized guest artists so they may achieve ensemble perfection through motivation from within, Uhlarik said.

Their appearance, which will cost $29,000, in Manhattan is co-sponsored by the National Endowment for the Arts, the Kansas Arts Commission (locally the Manhattan Arts Council), the Mid-America Arts Alliance and McCain Auditorium.

"There would be no possible way for us to bring them to Manhattan without the subsidy," Uhlarik said. She began making arrangements for these peformances two years ago.

Tickets for each performance may be purchased at McCain Box Office. Public admission is $6, $7 and $8 and admission for K-State students, senior citizens and some military personnel are $5, $4.50, and $4. Groups of 10 or more persons will receive reduced rates.

Convincing performances in original one-acts

Collegian Review

By CAROL WRIGHT
Collegian Reviewer

Excellent acting, dramatic writing, and simplicity of stage design, movement and costume made the three one-act plays of the Playwrights' Workshop a special treat.

An audience of more than 50 people were presented a better-than-average debut performance in the Purple Masque Theatre.

Sponsored by the K-State Players, the three plays were "An Experiment in Verbal Acrobatics," directed and written by Harry Pattison; "Switchboard," written by Velina Houston and directed by Augustin Stucker; and "For This We Thank You, Playboy," written by Augustin Stucker and directed by Ed Shiappa.

"An Experiment in Verbal Acrobatics," a performance of reader's theater by 11 actors, was divided into three cantos (one was not presented because of technical difficulties). One canto, "The Bells," by Edgar Allan Poe, was especially enlightening. The chorus did a magnificent job singing and echoing to the poem's light, breezy air.

HOUSTON'S "SWITCHBOARD" was a beautiful, powerful piece of imagination, filled with explicity emotional and vivid suffering.

It expanded upon family ridicule, the insanity of marriage, and a woman whose wounds run so deep it might be difficult for her to ever mend completely.

Patty Wirtz, sophomore in theater; Carol Moore, senior in theater; Deward Robinson, junior in crop protection; and Sean Clipsham, junior in business, were convincing in their character portrayals.

The highlight of the evening was "For This We Thank You, Playboy," a satirical look into the philosophy of love, sex and moral conduct.

Mark McCarthy, freshman in journalism and mass communications, gave a humorous performance in a rich, naive manner, strutting about the stage wearing sunglasses and all decked out in a tennis outfit for the benefit of the ladies.

Collectively, the writers, directors, technicians, musicians and actors should be commended for their fine presentation of these three plays.

Camelot: a dramatic story with a fairytale backdrop

Collegian Review

By JANET DAVISON
Review Editor

Many words have been used to describe the film "Camelot," but the best is "magic."

Watching this movie is like a trip to the land of Oz, a flight with Peter Pan, and every child's fairy tale fantasies rolled into one and splashed across the screen for a glorious 2½ hours.

This captivating adaptation of Lerner and Lowe's stage musical stars Richard Harris, as King Arthur; Vanessa Redgrave, as Gwynevere; and Franco Nero, as Lancelot du Lake, the noblest knight of all.

Nero turns in an especially fine performance as the young Frenchman who strives for perfection in body and soul, much to the chagrin and disgust of his fellow knights.

Whether he is jousting, praying, crying or singing, Nero is the epitome of every little girl's knight in shining armor. His rich baritone voice is the better of the lead performers and his rendition of "If Ever I Should Leave You" is beautiful.

As the humane, valiant Arthur, Harris displays the fine talent which brought him notoriety. His is funny, touching and powerful as he changes moods with his character, a slightly bewildered, thoroughly charming ruler not quite sure of himself.

HARRIS' VOICE is well suited to the songs he is allotted and he does a convincing job on the title song and the lesser known "What the King is Doing Tonight" and "How to Handle a Woman."

Redgrave, portraying the beautiful, passionate, strong-willed queen, does an adequate job. In those days women, particularly royalty, weren't expected to do much but sit around and look great, so I guess you can't expect another "Julia."

As for her singing voice, Redgrave will never make it to the Met, but Queen Gwynevere probably didn't either; at least she stays in key.

The scenery in the film is magnificent. The grandeur of medieval castles set against azure skies, lush green fields of clover and grass, and sparkling clear waters provide the backdrop for the enchanted land of the round table.

The costuming ranges from regal to near bawdy with enough variations in between to keep you entranced, waiting to see what the characters will wear in the next scene. Clothes must have come cheap in those days.

Whatever your age or romantic inclinations, this film should have something in it for you. It will seize your imagination and transport you to another world where you'll remember the childhood dreams you may have long ago forgotten.

As the song says, "...there's simply not a more congenial spot for happily-ever-aftering than here in Camelot," and who can afford to pass up a little happily-ever-after for only $1.25?

Kiwanis invites group to Toronto

Last year K-State Singers could only sing a song about "Canada in Springtime." This year they get to see it; well, almost.

The group has been invited to sing July 1 through 4 at the International Convention of Kiwanis in Toronto, Canada, according to Gerald Polich, assistant professor of music and director of the group.

"We were asked by the Kiwanis of Kansas to send a tape recording and supporting materials to them (the Kiwanis in Canada) and we were selected to sing. I don't know how many other groups auditioned," he said.

Making a trip, as a group, during the summer could pose problems for the Singers since some members will graduate and others may be working. Polich said to avoid this they will only use songs in their present repertoire for the Canada concerts.

The group will meet to rehearse briefly before flying to Canada. Polich said he expects to do at least one show a day.

The Kiwanis will pay for the Singer's flight, food and lodging expenses, he said. They are currently in the process of raising funds for this.

Polich isn't sure how the international organization or even the Kansas chapter heard about them, but there is a K-State graduate in Great Bend who belongs to a Kiwanis club there.

Students help select next year's movies

By SALLIE HOFMEISTER
Staff Writer

"Midnight Express," "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," "Foul Play," "Heaven Can Wait." These four films were among those favored by students selecting next year's Feature Films, according to Feature Films chairman Kevin Kneisley, junior in speech and theater.

About 40 student volunteers gathered Tuesday evening in the K-State Union Ballroom for the 3½-hour film screening. Excerpts from 140 movies were shown to interested students by the Feature Films Committee, part of the Union Program Council (UPC).

"We wanted student input," Kneisley said. "They are helping pay for the films so they should have the right to choose what films they want to see."

In previous years, the film committee has chosen the films, he said. But this year, a different procedure was used.

After viewing the demos put out by film companies such as Paramount, United Artists, Tyman and Swank, students checked their choices on answer blanks. The committee will tally the choices next week, Kneisley said.

MANY PARTICIPANTS indicated a desire for X-rated films on the "comment" section of their scorecards, he said. One suggestion called for renovation of the Little Theatre disposing of the chairs, so it would be possible to lie down while viewing an X-rated flick.

Kneisley said 50 films are budgeted for next year. There will be 30 weeks of Friday and Saturday night films, 15 weeks of matinees and five midnight shows.

Selecting midnight shows is still in its trial stage, he said. "Rocky Horror Picture Show," one of this year's midnight specials, attracted two sellout crowds. "Star Trek," however, didn't go over as well. Some shows just aren't midnight material, he said.

There also will be an increase in ticket prices next year, Kneisley said. The current Friday and Saturday night ticket price of $1.25 will be increased to $1.50. All other shows will cost an additional 25 cents.

In addition to scheduling next year's movie program, the committee has been compiling a budget. A tentative $41,000 budget will be proposed to the UPC for approval on April 8.

KNEISLEY SAID film rentals cost about $21,000. The average rental costs are about $420 per film. Publicity, speakers and sound system repair and maintenance, telephone bills, supplies and student wages comprise the other $20,000.

The committee also is arranging a visiting artists program. This plan would bring film directors, producers, actors, writers, editors, music directors and other film spokesmen to campus where they could present guest lectures to theater, radio and TV classes.

Snafu

Howdy, SNAFU fans. Yes, not even campus demonstrations, censorship or sunny skies can stop SNAFU-man from keeping his appointed rounds.

SNAFU,
Has disco taken over the world?
N.N.

Dear N.N.,
Oh boogie! That's a good one. I called Disco King John Revolta to get his answer. Revolta politely answered our questions, but some of his comments were hard to understand because he was eating a double cheeseburger as he talked.

Anyway, Revolta seems to think disco will officially take over the world on May 27.

Revolta said there's money to be made in disco, which brought people back to the dance floor, and dance floors back to the nightclubs. "Night fever, night fever, yeeaah," he commented.

When asked if disco could survive competition from square dancing and tap dancing, Revolta said, "Stayin' alive, stayin' alive, oooh, oooh, oooh..."

I hope that answered your question, and by the way, Revolta said to tell you, "Get down, get funky."

SNAFU
What happens when you get on a toll road, and when you're ready to get off, you don't have any money?
K.G.

Dear K.G.,
It's like this. You'll save yourself a lot of trouble if you either have the money or stay away from toll roads.

If you get to the booth and don't have any money, the booth employee tells you to drive to the side of the road. A highway patrolman is called and comes to the scene. If he determines that you are a good credit risk, he gives you an unpaid toll form, which will allow you to mail the money later. If you're not a good credit risk, you might have your car impounded, but that doesn't often happen.

If a patrolman can't get to the booth within 30 minutes he gives the booth employee the authority to issue the form.

So, K.G., if you don't have the ready cash, sell your car and take the bus.

Hornets to provide last tune-up before Big 8 opener at KU

The K-State baseball team will have one last chance today to put an end to its dry hitting spell before the start of conference play Saturday against the Kansas Jayhawks.

K-State's opponents today, the Emporia State Hornets, should provide the 'Cats with tough doubleheader competition. The Hornets were the 1978 NAIA champions. The first game is scheduled to begin at 1:30 at Frank Myers Field.

Sports

Although K-State boasts a 15-6-1 record, the 'Cats lost their last four outings in a home series against Iowa last weekend.

K-State's Coach Dave Baker said the team needs to come through with hits more often when the 'Cats are in scoring position.

"We need to drive in more runs when opportunity knocks," Baker said. In their series with Iowa, the 'Cats went 21 innings without scoring a run.

The 'Cats also lack solid contributions throughout the lineup.

"Only a few guys are hitting. One guy might get three hits and others nothing," the coach said.

On the defensive side, the 'Cats have been effective and no changes will be made for the conference opener.

Both K-State and Kansas (16-3) come to Myers Field with their best baseball starts in history. The doubleheader will begin at 1 p.m.

"It doesn't make any difference who we open with," Baker says. "None of the teams this year are any easier than another. You've got to beat them now or later."

Other Big 8 openers Saturday find Missouri (20-6) at Oklahoma (15-14), Nebraska (15-4) at Colorado (4-10) and Iowa State (5-10) at Oklahoma State (17-8).

Royals open season with 11-2 victory

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—John Wathan drilled a bases-loaded triple and Darrell Porter added a two-run single in a nine-run second inning last night to carry the Kansas City Royals to an 11-2 opening night rout of the Toronto Blue Jays.

The Royals, the American League West's defending champions, pounded Tom Underwood for all nine second-inning runs on four walks, four hits and two Blue Jay errors. Only three of the runs were earned. The Royals finished with 11 hits.

Dennis Leonard, 21-17 last year, worked six innings for Kansas City and allowed six hits. He was nicked for two unearned runs in the fifth after third baseman George Brett's second error.

Playing in 40-degree temperatures, Al Cowens walked to lead off the second. Another walk and Roy Howell's error loaded the bases for Wathan.

Kent Gaston

Jayhawk image haunts K-State

KU basketball coach Ted Owens may face the biggest challenge of his coaching career next year.

Owens, who has an uncanny knack for taking a group of proven winners and molding them into a mediocre team, may be signing too much talent to overcome.

Extra points

Thursday's papers carried the announcements of three high school stars who have narrowed their choices to KU and a few other schools.

Ralph Sampson, a 7-3¾ stringbean from Harrisonburg, (not Harrisburg) Pa., has narrowed to KU, Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland, Virginia Tech, Kentucky and Michigan State.

Newton High School's David Piehler, who scored about 30 points a game this year, has narrowed his field to Arkansas, Oklahoma, SMU and KU.

And, alas, Ricky Ross of Wichita South announced that he's narrowed his choices to KU and Arkansas.

Rarely am I a rabid Arkansas fan, but if a few measures of "Ooooooooooooooo! Pig! Sooey! (the Razorbacks' equivalent of "Eat 'em up," will help send Ross and Piehler to Arkansas, I'm willing.)

AT LEAST KU won't pull off the coup of the year. The Jayhawks had a shot at Sam Bowie of Lebanon, Penn., the nation's most highly-recruited player. He's 7-1, reportedly plays quick, handles the ball like a forward and could turn anybody's program into a national powerhouse. And, he's going to Kentucky. Hurrah for the Wildcats. If we aren't going to get them, send them away from the Big 8.

K-State Coach Jack Hartman isn't terribly concerned with these developments, because he had a young team this year and really doesn't need too many new players for next year, other than some big men.

However, 6-11 Greg Prudhoe and our 6-7 people who often manage to play as if they're about 6-10, will be hard pressed to keep up with a fairly agile giant such as Sampson.

THE ROSS THING still upsets me. Any school can use a superstar like him, whether it's a national champion or second in the Big 8.

I'm not upset often, but two things have done it lately. One is the Nichols Gym decision (I can throw in my plug. After all it is a gym). The other is Ross' decision.

After narrowing to KU, Arkansas, Georgia, North Carolina and K-State, Ross dismissed K-State because "it's a farm school and I really didn't like the atmosphere."

It's easy for K-Staters to say, "if he doesn't like our friendly little atmosphere, to Lawrence with him." But, if we want a national contender, we need people like him. If basketball recruiting is important and our image is a deterrent, it's unfortunate.

Ross may not be the only one who has ruled out K-State because of the image. It's not only a "farm school" image—that's nothing to worry about, because that's what we are and we should be proud of it. It's often a problem of being "the other school" in Kansas.

We can yell "Kill Snob Hill" until our faces turn blue—well, purple—but I'm sure most non-Kansans think of the Jayhawks when they think of Kansas basketball.

What can we do? I think we're doing it. Every sport in the school is either improving or staying at a steady level.

AND, THE large student turnout for the arena referendum was encouraging. Sports are more than people running around in colored underwear—they are big business and probably the school's No. 1 representative to the general masses. Many K-Staters showed that sports are important to them by voting on the arena—yes or no.

Nonetheless, that won't help anything for a long time, and we may have trouble keeping up with KU, which already has stars to complement its recruiting; Missouri, which signed two nationally-known high schoolers from its state and Oklahoma, which returns great players such as Ray Whitley, Al Beal, Terry Stotts and Aaron Curry from its championship team.

What else can we do right now? Not much. I guess until we think of something, we'll have to resort to "Ooooooooooooooo! Pig! Sooey!

Red Cross is counting on you.

Tracksters travel to Texas, Emporia

The K-State track team members will go their separate ways this weekend as 19 men and women compete in the Texas Relays in Austin and the rest go to the Emporia State Relays.

A group of 10 men tracksters left for Texas Thursday, while about 20 will compete at Emporia.

A rash of injuries and uncooperative spring weather limited the number attending the Texas meet, Coach Mike Ross said.

Although no team scores are kept at the Texas meet, the 'Cats are expected to make a strong showing.

Frank Perbeck, the best returning collegiate javelin thrower in the country, and Joe Bramlege, who leads the Big 8 with a 234-8 javelin toss, are expected to do well.

TIM DAVIS, the reigning Big 8 Indoor mile champion, will run in the prestigious invitational mile.

Other Wildcat entries in Texas are Kevin Sloan in the long and triple jumps, Doug Knauss in the pole vault, Ray Bradley in the shot put and discus and Leonard Scott, Willie Major, Mack Green and Ray Hanf in the 440-yard relay.

Joining the men in Texas are nine women tracksters, while the rest will go to Emporia.

"Going to Emporia provides an opportunity to improve on individual performances and hopefully qualify some additional people for the Kansas and Drake Relays," women's coach Barry Anderson said.

Competing against some of the finest sprint relay teams in the country will be three strong Wildcat squads. Pat Osborn, Wanda Trent, Lorraine Davidson and Freda Hancock will compete in both the 440 and 800-meter relays. Trent, Davidson and Hancock also will run in the mile relay along with Leesa Wallace.

Senate scraps plans for K-State coal plant

TOPEKA (AP)—An effort to restore an $18 million appropriation to begin construction of the coal-fired power plant to supply steam heat and electricity to K-State failed Thursday in the Kansas Senate by a resounding 10-28 vote.

The primary supporter of the plant declared after the vote that the Senate's decision amounted to a "multi-million dollar blunder that will echo through to November of 1980."

The substantial vote in opposition to building the plant spelled doom for the proposal for this 1979 session, advocates agreed.

The vote also scuttled the hopes of some who thought construction of the K-State plant would serve as a precedent for having the state operate its own power plants to avoid purchasing energy needs from private companies.

INSTEAD OF appropriating construction money, the Senate decided to accept the recommendation of its Ways and Means Committee and authorized a third feasibility study of the plant, which will review energy needs of the campus.

The House earlier this session approved funding for the plant—estimated to cost a total of about $28.6 million.

Noting the power plant dispute had been around legislative halls since 1973, Senate Republican Majority Leader Norman Gaar declared it was time for lawmakers to act.

"There isn't a cotton-pickin' thing to study except what we have studied already, and it's going to cost us far more to do it later," Gaar said in support of his motion to restore the construction money.

Gov. John Carlin urged the Legislature to begin immediate construction. The House accepted that recommendation, but with some qualifications.

Gaar noted two other feasibility studies relating to the plant had both concluded that a centralized coal-fired plant was the most practical way to meet future energy needs for the University.

He accused Kansas Power and Light Company of Topeka, which presently supplies natural gas and electricity to the campus, of lobbying heavily against construction, so the company can continue selling energy to the state at a profit.

Tickets 'movin' out'; almost 4,600 sold

Tickets for the Billy Joel concert are "moving out."

About half of the front seats have been sold for the April 28, Rob Cieslicki, Union Program Council (UPC) adviser, said.

"I would estimate that 4,600 tickets will be sold by the end of today (Thursday)," he said.

About $29,000 in tickets had been sold by Thursday afternoon. Although tickets are not being sold in order of price, no $6 obstructed view tickets will be sold until the $7, $7.50 and $8 tickets are sold, Cieslicki said.

Howard Segal, UPC concert chairman, said there are 11,145 seats for the concert.

Governor may lift radiation warning at Three Mile site

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)—Gov. Dick Thornburgh's advisory that preschool children and pregnant women stay outside a five-mile radius of the damaged Three Mile Island nuclear reactor may be lifted today, the governor's spokesman said.

Thornburgh decided Sunday to continue the advisory for at least another day after meeting for about 90 minutes with Joseph Hendrie, chairman of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC), and NRC operations chief Harold Denton.

"He's hopeful he'll be able to announce it sometime Monday," said Thornburgh's press secretary, Paul Critchlow.

Thornburgh issued his directive on March 30 after several leaks of radiation from the nuclear power plant.

Critchlow said the decision to lift the advisory "will be based on the fact that they (NRC officials) believe they can continue the cleanup without further significant escapes of radioactivity."

EARLIER SUNDAY, sign-carrying demonstrators conducted "last rites for Three Mile Island" on the capitol steps here, saying it is time to bury the damaged plant.

Eleven miles away, engineers continued the tedious task of bringing the damaged reactor to a cold shutdown, a job that authorities say could take at least five more days.

"The eyes of the world are on Harrisburg. We have come here to conduct the last rites for Three Mile Island," said William Vastine, coordinator of Three Mile Alert.

The anti-nuclear group fought Metropolitan Edison's building of the atomic plant eight years ago and at one time its membership had fallen to 15. But the protesters stood 1,000 strong Sunday.

"We will not pay for Met Ed's fission folly," said Vastine as men, women and children—their ranks swelled by some who traveled from as far away as Germany—cheered lustily.

The company is paying $1.1 million per day to buy electricity needed to replace power lost in the accident, but the bill has not yet been passed on to consumers. Utility officials say a 35 percent rate increase also may be needed to pay for the cleanup.

THE CROWD braved chilly temperatures to listen to protest songs and 15 speakers express outrage and fear in the aftermath of the worst accident in the nation's 22-year-old commerical nuclear program.

Handmade signs read "Drop Dead, Met Ed," "No Nukes Is Good Nukes," "The Monster Is Crippled...Shoot It" and "TMI, Rotten To The Core."

At the plant, chemicals were added to waste water contaminated with radioactive iodine, the last source of low-level radiation coming from an auxiliary building.

"It sort of traps the iodine in the water," said Jim Hanchett, spokesman for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

The iodine can then be filtered and disposed of through normal operating procedures, Hanchett said.

Acker changes recommendation

Nichols withstands fiery debate

By LISA SANDMEYER
Staff Writer

Nichols Gym will stand—for now.

K-State President Duane Acker rescinded his recommendation to raze the burned-out building, and the Legislature isn't going to give K-State money to tear Nichols down.

See related pictures and stories, p. 10 and 11

The $125,000 the Kansas Senate included in the state appropriations bill for the razing of Nichols was struck in joint-house conference committee Friday in Topeka, giving K-State time and $2,500 to figure out what to do with the "castle."

The decision came just a few hours after Acker backed off from his recommendation given to the Legislature Wednesday, saying he would leave the decision to legislators.

There was no argument when Rep. Mike Hayden (R-Atwood) moved that the funds be deleted, but Hayden and Sen. Wint Winter (R-Ottawa) played tug-of-war with the state's purse strings before reaching a compromise on how much to give towards a study.

HAYDEN RECOMMENDED K-State students be asked to put up $5,000 for a study to be reviewed by an ad hoc committee composed of two legislators, one from each house, and one representative each from the K-State administration, Student Senate and Faculty Senate.

The committee "can come back in November and tell us what they want us to do," Hayden said. He said there would be no limits on what options the committee could study but that it "should operate within the parameters of reality."

"It would show a good faith commitment on both sides," Hayden said.

Winter countered Hayden's proposal, saying that student money shouldn't be spent on a "state obligation." He recommended the state give $5,000 and said if the committee needs more money, "they can go to the Student Senate for it."

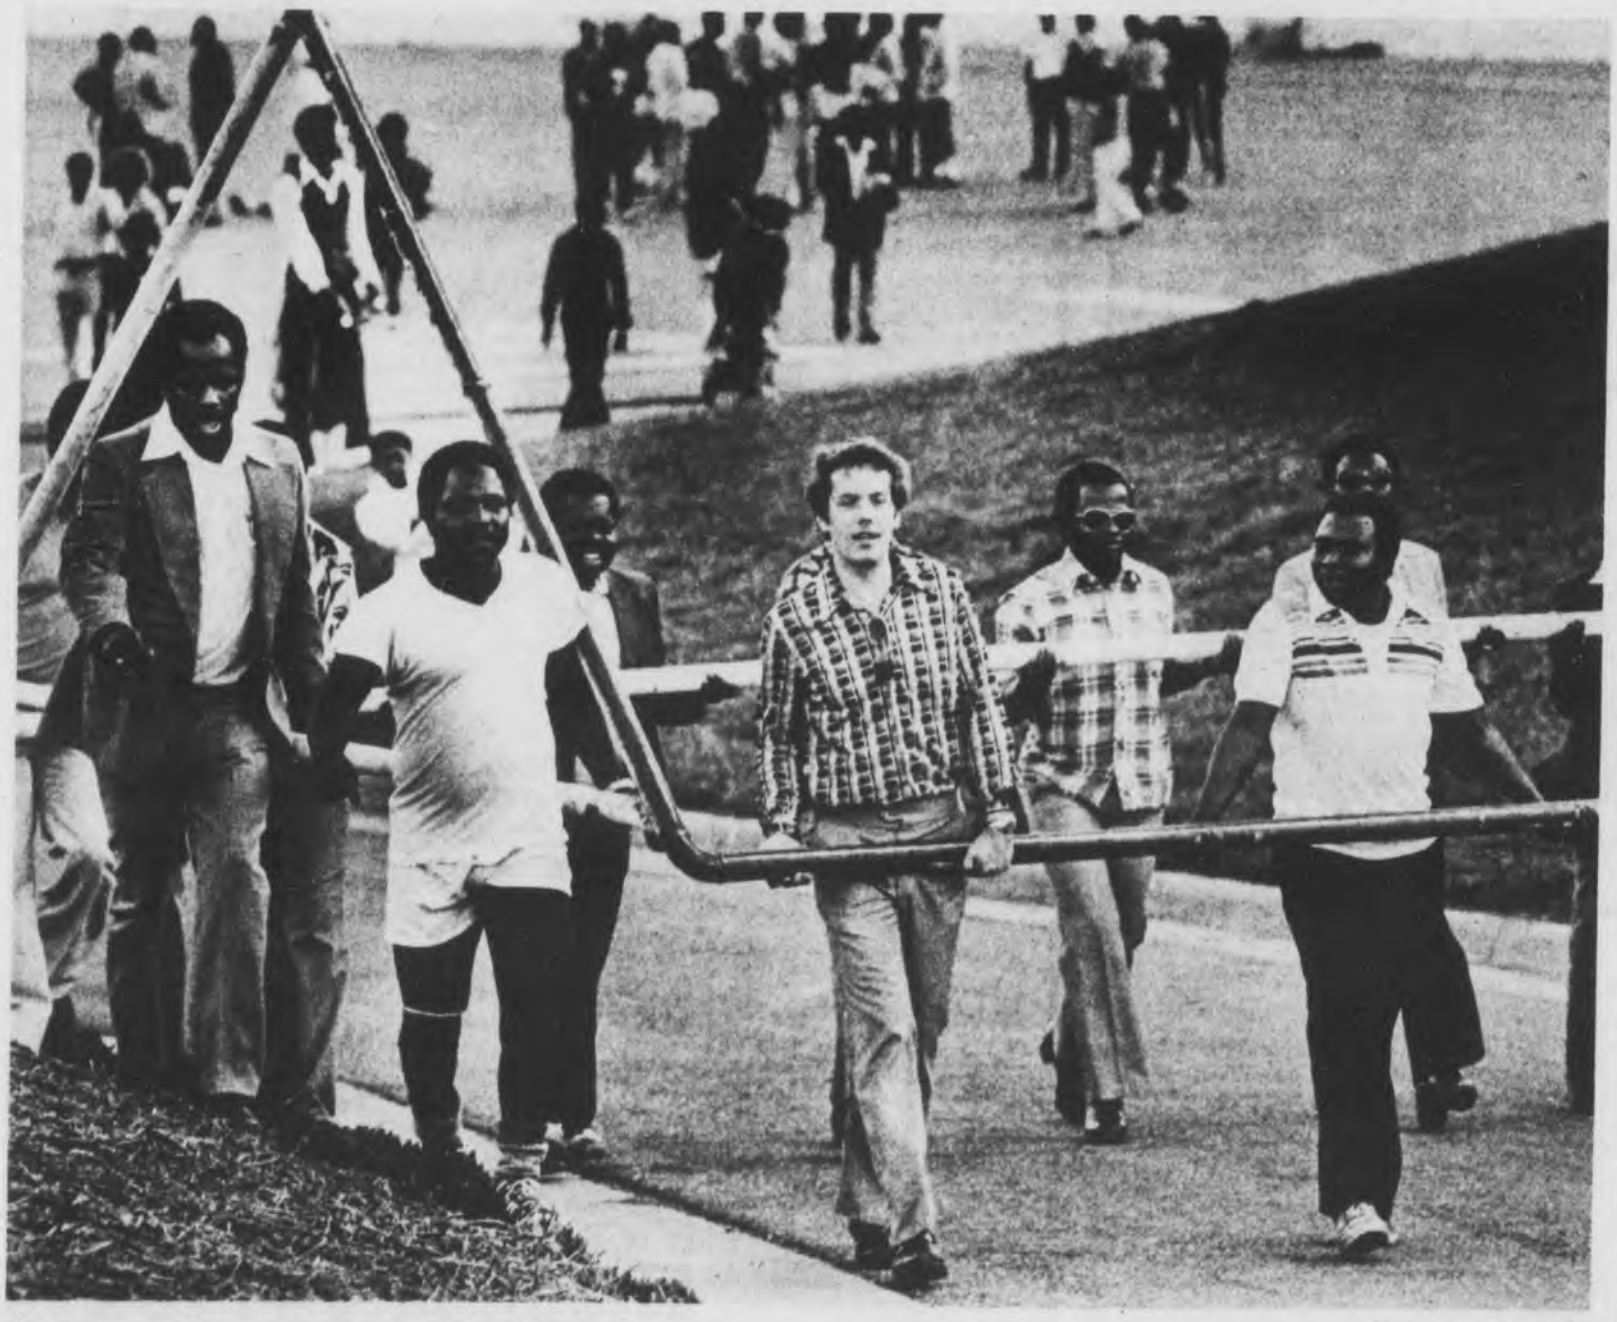
Hayden came back with the compromise—$2,500 from the Legislature to be matched by K-State students, alumni or endowment.

"We'll meet them halfway," Hayden said. "Just to show you the House's position on this, here's $5," he said as he tossed the bill across the table to Winter. Winter added $10 of his own to the Nichols' cause.

The appropriation for the study and the rest of K-State's budget will be finalized April 25 when the Legislature begins a clean-up session.

STUDENT BODY President Greg Musil said in a press conference prior to the committee vote that Sen. Ross Doyen (R-Concordia) had indicated the Legislature would not appropriate the money for razing.

Musil said students had accomplished what they set out to do in Topeka Thursday—stopping the $125,000 appropriation, though he wasn't sure that morning they would.



"I figured it was mainly a symbolic effort, that the decision (to tear down) had been made," Musil said.

"That was just the first step," Musil said. "Unless we can find some way to use the building for somewhere in the vicinity of what they would have spent to tear it down, it's going to get torn down next year."

Though Student Senate Thursday night reaffirmed its support for renovation or reconstruction of Nichols, the $10,000 allocated by senate in 1975 is still legally for that purpose, and the ad hoc committee is under no obligation to not recommend razing.

"I don't want to see student money spent on it with no control," Musil said. "If they say 'We're not going to tear it down,' we'll put the money up."

Musil said he would look to places other than senate for the matching money before asking senate for it.

Official execution toll stands at 80

Ten killed by Iranian firing squads

TEHRAN, Iran (AP)—Ten more persons, including several top officials in the shah's government, were executed by revolutionary firing squads Sunday and Monday, reports here said.

Tehran Radio reported early Monday that former air force commander, Gen. Amir Hossein Rabii, Gen. Mohammad Ali Khajehnuri, a former section chief under the army chief of staff, Dr. Manuchehr Azmun, former minister of labor and a senior police constable identified only as Balili, accused of killing people in a public bath, were the latest to be executed.

The radio said the four were all "corrupt to the core," and "traitors to the Iranian people."

Six others died before Islamic firing squads on Sunday, Tehran newspapers reported.

New violence flared in the streets of Tehran in the aftermath of Saturday's execution of Amir Abbas Hoveida, who served as prime minister under the now-exiled shah for 13 years.

IN THE CAPITAL'S eastern section, women fired from a passing car at a group of militia guards of the Islamic revolutionary government, wounding several of them, news reports said. The women were reported to have escaped.

In northern Tehran, five militiamen were killed and four others injured in an explosion late Saturday. The cause was not officially announced, but news reports speculated the militiamen were trying to defuse a bomb or hand grenade when it exploded.

Sunday's six executions took place before dawn in four cities, the newspapers said. Those executed included two pro-shah army men, three of the shah's policemen and a landlord who was charged with illegally seizing land and raping several women.

State radio reports confirmed only that three of the executions had taken place.

The official execution toll stands at 76 since revolutionary tribunals began their work after the Feb. 12 fall of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's last government. They included 15 military and police generals who served the deposed monarch.

As the courts continued to dispense their Islamic justice, the government brushed aside international protest over the execution of Hovieda, the highest-ranking former official shot thus far.

Jury declares former K-Stater guilty of second-degree murder

Marvin Farris, a former K-State student, was found guilty late Friday of second-degree murder in Riley County District Court.

Farris was accused of the shooting death of Floyd McSpadden, a 23-year-old resident of Emporia and also a former K-State student, in Farris' apartment on Oct. 28, 1978. The killing apparently happened during an argument over money. Farris and McSpadden had roomed together for a time while they were students.

The jury of five men and seven women returned a verdict of guilty after more than eight hours of deliberations that began Thursday. Sentencing was delayed awaiting defense motions for a new trial.

The jury reconvened Friday morning after failing to return a verdict Thursday, when Judge Ronald Innes recessed the court for the evening.

Farris had told police that McSpadden had forged his name on some checks, one for $2,500, to pay off some gambling debts he had incurred while in Emporia.

FARRIS TOLD police he and McSpadden had a fist fight early on Oct. 28, but that McSpadden had left his house in the early evening, which the defense said accounted for McSpadden's blood found in Farris' apartment.

The prosecuting attorney, Charles Ball, said that Farris shot McSpadden on the evening of Oct. 28 at least five times with McSpadden's own gun, then put his body into the trunk of his car and drove the car to Emporia.

After parking the car outside McSpadden's apartment in Emporia, Farris supposedly took a bus back to Manhattan. Witnesses testified that they saw Farris in an Emporia eatery, where he took a taxicab to the bus station. A Manhattan taxi driver testified that he took a passenger to Farris' address in the early morning of Oct. 29.

But the defense produced two waitresses and a busboy who testified they had seen McSpadden in an Emporia restaurant with some other men late Oct. 28 and early Oct. 29, after he was allegedly killed.

The busboy testified he had found a wallet and a set of keys in the restaurant bathroom that belonged to McSpadden, containing a photograph of him from which they made an identification.

Child star to politics topic of Black talk

Shirley Temple Black, former United States ambassador and child movie star, will deliver the third and final Landon Lecture of the semester at 10:30 a.m. Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

Her lecture, entitled "It's All Perceptions Now," deal with her past experiences on stage and in public service.

Black is well-known as Shirley Temple for her roles in more than 40 major motion pictures.

She also has held prominent posts in business and government service, and is a former delegate to the United Nations. Black served as U.S. ambassador to Ghana from 1974 to 1976 and U.S. Chief of Protocol from 1976 to 1977.

Black currently serves as a director of three corporations and two public affairs organizations, the World Affairs Council of Northern California and the United Nations Association.

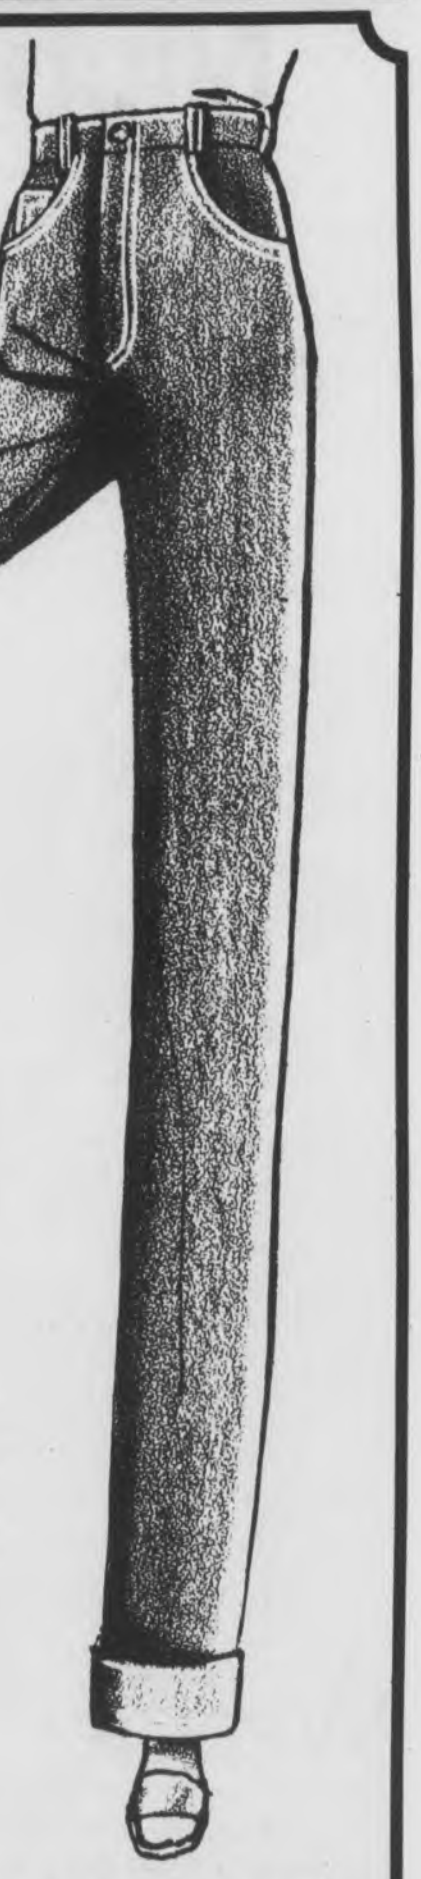
Union Governing Board

UGB, is a group of ten students, three faculty members, and one alum, who participates directly in the management and operation of the K-State Union. The board works with the staff to see that the Union is the kind of operation K-State should have.



If you are the kind of person who would enjoy the chance to make the Union a better place and have a few hours to devote to a worthwhile interest, come in and fill out an application. We can use your help.

Applications for the five positions may be picked up in the Union Directors Office and are due by noon, April 13.

Man armed, wounded and still loose

PAXTON, Ill.—Authorities continued to search Sunday for an armed and wounded man who escaped a gun battle that left five persons dead, including two police officers and two of his brothers.

Twenty officers scoured the farmland of east-central Illinois searching for Monroe Lampkin, named in a murder warrant after the Saturday night gun battle, police said. Lampkin's age and hometown were unavailable.

Two of Lampkin's brothers, Cleveland, 46, of Harvey, Ill., and Davis, 32, hometown unknown, were killed in the shootout, authorities said. A third was taken into custody.

State police investigator Clay Boyer said three .357 magnum pistols were found in two pickup trucks and a Thunderbird that had been stopped by one of the slain officers. Police added that shell casing found at the scene led police to believe that Lampkin was armed.

Thousands celebrate Palm Sunday

JERUSALEM—Thousands of Christian pilgrims, waving olive branches and palm fronds, followed the winding path down the Mount of Olives on Palm Sunday, celebrating Christ's triumphant entry into Jerusalem.

Only hours before the procession, police found a Katyusha rocket launcher on the outskirts of the city overlooking the procession route.

Police disarmed the missile, apparently aimed at the center of the city. Despite the early sign of possible Arab sabotage, security for the procession seemed lighter than in previous years.

Singing hosannas and reading from the Latin litany, the faithful followed the steep path past the garden of Gethsemane to St. Anne's Church within the walls of the Old City. There they received a blessing from the Latin patriarch of Jerusalem, Monsignor Giacomo Guiseppe Beltritti.

In Vatican City, Pope John Paul II ushered in the Holy Week with an open-air Mass before 100,000 people in St. Peter's Square.

No banners or parties, just peace

ADAMS, Ind.—There were no bands, no banners and no welcoming party as Marine Pfc. Robert Garwood came home in the silence of the night more than 13 years after he was captured in Vietnam.

While a typical Saturday night party blared at the American Legion post in nearby Greensburg, Garwood, 33, relaxed with his family away from the public glare aimed at him since he left Vietnam last month.

"The roads are still here. People are still the same. I was glad my hometown hasn't changed," he said in an interview Sunday. "There's no place like home."

Garwood woke up to "good ole country cooking" of bacon and eggs, went to church with his family and made a nostalgic visit to his boyhood swimming hole.

"I've been dreaming about my family; dreaming, hoping and praying for 14 years. It's hard to put into words how I feel now. The only guy who knows is the guy above," he said.

Gonzo party 'too wild for words'

BOULDER, Colo.—Few college students need an excuse to have a party. But a University of Colorado fraternity staged a party with a purpose—to prove Boulder is the nation's "wildness capital."

The brothers at Delta Tau Delta were inspired by a Playboy magazine contest based on the film spoof of college life, "Animal House."

"We are the ultimate partying house on campus," boasted Delta Tau Delta social chairman Jim Seifert.

To prove the claim, the Delta brothers threw a "gonzo party" at which "1,000 of our most intimate friends showed up to get too wild for words," Seifert said.

Even if they don't win the contest, they can console themselves with the $1,100 profit Seifert said they reaped from an admission fee and charges for mixed drinks, beer and spiked punch.

The reward if the Deltas are among the six winners picked by Playboy is a chance to do it over again, in front of Playboy cameras.

Weather

Fire up the silver dart, Iggy—football tickets go on sale today. The Collegian received word at 12:30 this morning that a few Wildcat fanatics were camped outside Ahearn Field House for football tickets. You should've warned us—we could've forecasted better weather. Anyway, today's weather should be mighty nice. Today's highs are expected to be in the upper 60s to low 70s with low tonight in the mid 40s. Increasing cloudiness is expected Tuesday with a chance for showers. High Tuesday should reach the upper 70s.

Movie ban a mistake

Censorship has arrived at K-State.

In a 6-5 vote Thursday, the Union Governing Board (UGB) decided to ban all X-rated films from the Union.

The board did this, despite the popularity of X-rated films among students—who pay for and support the Union.

The board has no business trying to decide the morals for the university population. Students are adults and should be allowed the privilege of deciding their own morals.

The University is not a parent and shouldn't act like one.

This isn't an argument in favor of X-rated films, just an argument in favor of freedom of choice—something this country was founded on.

One of the main reasons used in passing the policy is it "embarrassed" many board members to show the films on campus. Some board members looked in as an X-rated film was being shown and were shocked. If they didn't want to see X-rated films, they shouldn't have looked.

Just because some people object to X-rated films is no reason to stop others from seeing them. If you don't like ketchup, you shouldn't put it on your hamburger. You're within your rights there, but you wouldn't be if you tried to outlaw ketchup simply because you don't like it.

Apart from the morality question, the policy wasn't well-thought out. The policy would continue to allow foreign films to be shown. Foreign films aren't rated and many contain sexually-explicit scenes.

Some films are rated "X" for reasons besides sexual content—some animated films are X-rated. The policy doesn't say whether speakers who wish to bring in portions of X-rated films to illustrate part of their lecture will be included.

If the policy is interpreted to cover speakers, Student Attorney Nyles Davis said it is "of questionable constitutional validity."

Even if the policy only covers scheduled shows, it is possible the UGB has violated the law, according to Orma Linford, assistant professor of political science and instructor of constitutional law.

UGB members seemed to think they were exercising the right of choice, just like any theater management. But there is a major difference between the Union and privately-owned theaters.

The Union is on state property and its actions might be considered state actions. If it sounds far-fetched, consider the decision in Burton vs. Wilmington Parking Authority (1961).

In this case, a restaurant refused to serve a black, saying it was acting in a "purely private capacity." It just so happened the restaurant leased the land from an agency of Delaware. The Supreme Court ruled it was state action because it happened on state-owned land.

This doesn't mean the Union doesn't have the right to choose what movies it can or cannot show. If the action is considered state action, it means the Union might have to follow guidelines on obscenity set by previous cases. An X-rating isn't considered a legal definition of obscenity, Linford said.

American Civil Liberties Union-K-State Affiliate (ACLU) is concerned about the policy and "intends to take immediate action," Judy Davis, executive director, said.

This policy is a mistake any way you look at it. Morally, UGB has no business forcing their morals on others. Practically, it doesn't stop sexually-explicit films from being shown. And legally, it is questionable, at best.

Just call me Joe Lobbyist

I'm not normally a student leader, but when I heard about Nichols' proposed razing, I decided I had to get involved. I went with the group to Topeka, and learned a little bit about lobbying.

Having been one of the "common folk" for so long, I know it feels not to know the interesting little details about incidents which affect me—the newstories I read don't include them.

TOPEKA—After Greg Musil, student body president, and Tom Hollinberger, fifth year in architecture and rally organizer, gave speeches on the Capitol steps, 120 K-State students swarmed inside. After spending half an hour wondering, "Where do we go?" we started to get the feel of the layout and locate our legislators.

Musil and three other student representives disappeared to talk to Senate President Ross Doyen. I proceeded to set up a scale model of Nichols outside the door of House of Representatives chamber.

Right as I was finishing, somebody called (from two levels up) that a joint committee was in session, and needed our presentation any minute.

IF ANYBODY wants to know what heart failure feels like, ask.

I grabbed a handful of our position papers and other handouts and ran up two flights of stairs. Stopping outside just long enough to gain some composure, and send someone to find Musil, I entered the room and found the committee haggling over parts of some bill (not ours, though).

When I sat down, Sen. Wint Winter (R-Ottawa) turned around took a copy of our papers and gave me a copy of what he said was "My angry-student defense kit." (It was a copy of Acker's letter recommending Nichol's razing.) Then Musil arrived, sparing me the honor of speaking, and the day was saved.

Later, I talked to Sen. Merrill Werts (R-Junction City) in the Senate cloakroom (he hadn't heard about Nichols), and Rep. John Stites (R-Manhattan).

Stites told me that word of our efforts was all over the House floor, and he was plainly impressed with our efforts.

One of our people went into Sen. Doyen's office to talk to him, and found a member of the Board of Regents waiting ahead of him. The regent didn't realize a student was in the room, and told both him and the secretary that the students were wasting their time; that the Legislature would do what the regents wanted, and he wanted Nichols torn down. The regent then went into Doyen's office with a big smile.

HE DIDN'T come out smiling.

I received word the people who staff the governer's special hotline were being deluged with calls concerning Nichols, and they were becoming very irritated with us.

We used every means we could think of to contact legislators. A student's father had bought insurance from a representative. Another student's father knew a man who played rugby with a senator. And so on.

I went with two of our people to talk with a representative, but we arrived to find there were two students already with him. We went in anyway, and about three minutes later, two more K-Staters arrived.

On Friday, only seven K-Staters went to Topeka, but the secretaries were horrified. They saw our seven people as the first wave of another flood of students.

Senators Ronald Hein (R-Topeka) and Arnold Berman (D-Lawrence) graciously opened their offices to our people, and so I was able to receive periodic status reports and panic calls from Topeka (I did not go to Topeka Friday, I sat in the Student Government Services (SGS) office all day and answered the phone).

OUR PEOPLE split up Friday—one to a committee member—and followed them around all morning, as well as leaving behind a multitude of notes for other legislators.

The upshot of the two-days work was, that when the committee's attention finally arrived at the Nichols Gym item, the first comment made was "Of course, we can't leave this in," and the item was immediatly disposed of.

To finish up, together we as students have accomplished something—something we can be proud of. However, we're not done yet. Let's use the power we demonstrated we have, and make sure what we've done so far doesn't go to waste.

Ironic note in '60s spirit

Editor,

Re: Dave Hughes' article concerning the protest in front of Anderson Hall.

"The spirit of the '60s revisited K-State Wednesday as students and faculty, outraged by President Acker's recommendation to the Kansas Senate to demolish Nichols Gymnasium, converged on Anderson Hall to voice their indignation."

Wasn't it the spirit of the '60s that put Nichols in the shape it is in today?

Nichols...

thanks to students

Editor,

We would like to take this means to say an inadequate thanks to the many K-State students who went to the Capitol on Thursday to help in our efforts to stop the razing of Nichols Gymnasium. The hours these students spent in the Capitol that day, presenting this student concern to state legislators in the most professional way possible, is to be highly commended. This group of students organized and conducted themselves in a manner of which all K-State students, faculty, administration and alumni can be proud.

Our thanks as well goes to those students who took the time to call or write the legislators, who voted in the Collegian survey on Thurday and gave suppport in any other way to this cause.

It was truly you, the concerned students, who acted promptly and intelligently who aided us in making sure student input counted in this important decision.

proud of it

Editor,

In reply to Brian Flattery's letter of April 6:

Mr. Flattery, obviously you know little about architecture, heritage and,or pride. Although I am not an architecture major, I've become concerned enough to try and learn about the Nichols' structure, and I've talked with people knowledgeable about such matters.

"A monument to nothing," you stated. According to assessments from accredited individuals (architects) who noted that Nichols is one of the finest ruins of its type in the U.S., let alone Kansas—is this nothing? Nichols is structurally sound, Mr. Flattery, and if logical to you is razing a structure for $125,000 when as you stated, "the money is not available," then why don't we not use this unavailable $125,000 and let our castle remain as is, at least for the time being?

At least some of us concerned individuals took time to show our concern and support by rallying, even the "loud-mouthed protesters." We tried our damnedest to stick up for what we believe—saving all of Nichols—and we did so quite respectively and impressively.

I am proud to be a part of the students who want to save Nichols. I believe I can speak for a great many who haven't given up and won't! Long live Nichols, Mr. Flattery, and until you become more informed, why don't you "put up or shut up." Good day!

radical concern

Editor,

Hello Father,

This is from your son the radical. I don't know if the news has gotten as far east as St. Louis but K-State is back in the papers and airwaves.

It seems our beloved university president wants to tear down a piece of K-State history and give the college a decent reputation. He has some kind of dream about K-State rising above obscurity and becoming America's number one college. (Kind of like the famous American myth of two cars in every garage, you know.)

He sure has some funny dreams. Too bad he's not facing reality in his dreams the way he faces it when talking to us. I think if he did he'd find us pretty responsible people. We know what we want, we know what we need and, by God, we're gonna have it.

I know that my receiving a degree in architecture is pretty important to you, but there's something inside me telling me this is more important right now. I hope you understand what I'm trying to say to you.

I'm not a radical, I'm just concerned.

Both sides of nuclear power

Editor,

The only hope for you and your kind is your freshman status.

My advice to you is to grow up and out. Study both sides of an issue rather than mouthing the words of the recruiting technical elite. Intentionally spend a couple of elective hours in a course which you know will logically and methodically refute the nuclear myth. If there are no free alternative electives being encouraged in nuclear engineering, then ask why not, and what purity is being protected.

Above all, learn to really listen rather than summarily reject all which does not already fit your preconceptions. Relearning only that which you already know is reductive schooling and will gain you nothing.

At the very least, you will once again be in control of your own life.

Spitting incident...

Letter biased, stereotyped

Editor,

I was shaken by the article written by a fellow student named Jan Paul Donelson for taking the act of one individual (supposedly) from one of the Arab countries and stereotyping all Arabs.

I wish our fellow student had come to one of the Arab students or their organization and explained what happened, preferably when the incident occurred. At least it would have been nice if he had mentioned it to one of the Arab guys during the International Week at the exhibition booth.

If we find the facts of the incident with the girl (supposedly Jewish) we will confront the supposed Arab guy and teach him a lesson in politeness. Arab or not, he must have led others to believe he is an Arab and represents them causing a biased, stereotyped letter.

Three points I'd like to state: 1) Jan Donelson wasn't present at the incident, thus his information is second-hand. His letter is an angry, emotional response. 2) What are the facts—like name—and how do you know the guy was an Arab from an "oil-rich country?" 3) Why do you criticize the culture of the Arabs in general?

As an Arab, my background taught me lots of things to consider about politeness. I wish you would ask others around you who have known Arabs in person, not by hearsay alone, and then decide. We have been taught about the freedoms of others and how to respect their feelings and freedom. I feel Jan stepped on the Arab students' freedom when he generalized and used a biased stereotype in his letter.

As Arabs, we have nothing against Jews in their religion; we respect everybody's religious beliefs. For general information, Arabs are against the Zionist movement. Zionism is condemned by the United Nations as a racist movement.

I think it would be nice if Jan apologized and explained the facts as he knows them, if he was involved, to our fellow students who don't know us personally and especially to those who do.

We come here to study, share our culture and exchange constructive ideas about life and learning.

We want to leave the Americans with a good impression of Arabs and our culture so when we leave there will be less stereotyping and biased opinions of people of other cultures.

Like all people, we judge character and a man's worth by his actions towards his fellow man—as an individual.

Kayed Khalil
junior in civil engineering

Slur on Arabs unintended

Editor,

In reference to Spitting Opinion Abusive by Jan Donelson it should be pointed out that the article was not to be a slur to the Arab countries, teachings, beliefs, or people, but to let that one person that created the incident know that it could not to be tolerated. The background of the article was to let others understand the prejudice that initiated the incident.

It is sad that misunderstandings and actions by one cloud the whole picture for others to become involved, expanding prejudical views.

As for myself, I do not intend to offend the Arab people but to point to all the alarming prejudices that overshadow all people.

Spitting opinion futile

Editor

I'd like to comment on the spitting incident in the Union last week. Was it really called for? Did it serve any useful purpose? Was there any forethought involved? I think the answer is no to all of these questions.

This act is comparable to my striking a black American because I was upset over the Tanzanian invasion of Uganda. Although the black American and the Ugandan share a common ethnic culture, as does the Israeli and Jewish American a religious one, the similarity ends there. Neither individual shoud be held responsible for a series of events over which they have absolutely no control. So, this gesture, in addition to being a infantile display of disrespect, is also a futile one.

Whether foreign studnets realize it or not (and I'm quite sure most do) their behavior on campus is the only exposure we Americans have of their customs and politics, and the only purpose this incident served was to sway opinion against the Arabs. This bothers me personally as I am an enthusiastic proponent of Palestinian autonomy.

So please my salivatng friend, use restraint next time when stating an opinion, and perhaps a bit more intelligence as well.

Scared to tell instructor off? Try 'relay' method

By SUZANNE SCHLENDER
Collegian Reporter

Arts and Sciences students who shake in their boots at the thought of telling off their instructors now have a way to express themselves without a confrontation.

Arts and Sciences Council has devised an alternative form of student-faculty communication called "The Relay."

A committee consisting of three council members and a faculty adviser, The Relay is now operative for students with compliments, questions or complaints about an instructor's teaching effectiveness, council president Doug Cook said.

Cook said he has received "1,000 percent support, if that is possible, from the students on this (The Relay)," but the reactions of instructors and administrators have been mixed, he said.

"I'm not at all convinced that there is that much need for the program," William Stamey, dean of arts and sciences, said.

"It's kind of different and it won't work if the faculty doesn't support it," he said.

THE OBJECTIVE of The Relay is to provide a timely service, Cook said. Instructors should know whether or not their students think they are effective teachers, he said.

Direct communication between the student and his instructor is the ultimate goal of the council, but sometimes a student hesitates to speak openly because he believes his grade might be in jeopardy or he doesn't want the instructor to think he is making compliments to influence his grade, Cook said.

The Relay can be activated by leaving a message in the Student Governing Association office in the K-State Union. A meeting with The Relay team is then set up to determine if the student's concern warrants any action by the team, he said.

Cases will be referred to other University committees, when possible, to avoid duplication of services, Cook said.

A letter is written to the instructor, describing the student's concern or commendation. The letter also requests a meeting with the instructor.

A TEAM MEMBER will meet with the instructor to explain the student's reaction and to gain an understanding of the instuctor's point of view. The results of this meeting will be "relayed" to the student to try to bring about a mutual understanding, he said.

If the student returns a second time with the same problem, the student must show that his feelings are held by other members of his class before the team will approach the instructor again, Cook said.

The team will send a copy of any commendation letters to the instructor's department head if the instructor wishes.

If the student returns a third time with the same problem, the department head will be notified and the team will administer a questionnaire about the instructor's teaching effectiveness to the entire class, Cook said.

The questionnaire is designed so that the instructor can benefit from the students' responses and the department head can be aware of how the students perceive the instructor's teaching effectiveness, Cook said.

Finance Committee hears funding pleas

By THE SGA STAFF

With about $30,000 to be shaved from budget requests, Student Senate's Finance Committee held budget hearings last weekend with 15 groups requesting student funds.

Immediately after the last of 24 budget hearings, the committee began working on budget cuts to stay within the number of dollars that will be available next year from student activity fees.

After the committee reaches budget recommendations tonight for all the groups, a tentative allocations bill will be drawn up for senate to consider. Senate will meet Tuesday and Thursday nights to consider the bill until distribution of about $718,000 is agreed upon.

Students for Handicapped Concerns wants almost $8,000 more to spend next year than what it was allocated this year.

The additional money would be used for renting a van to shuttle handicapped students to and from campus and for the salary of its driver.

THE OFFICE of Admissions and Records is requesting an additional $4,692 for making student ID cards.

Arnold Air Society, an Air Force service organization, wants $756 for food and lodging for members to attend various conventions.

International Coordinating Council (ICC), sponsor of K-State's International Week, is asking for about a $1,000 increase from last year's budget.

The money would be used to bring speakers about international matters to K-State, Fred Sorrels, ICC representative, said.

K-State's student radio station, KSDB-FM, is asking for an increase of $83 from last year's allocation.

The budget shows a decrease in the chief engineer's salary but increases in servicing and repairs and telephone expenses make up the net budget increase.

Emily Compton, campus director of the Associated Students of Kansas (ASK), is asking Student Governing Association (SGA) to follow the ASK constitution and allocate 25 cents per full-time equivalency (FTE), an increase of about $1,100.

Full-time equivalency is the total number of credit hours enrolled in at K-State, divided by 15 hours for full-time students, 12 for veterinary medicine students and nine hours for graduate students. The sum of these is the FTE. Previously, ASK has been funded 25 cents per full-time student.

If the University of Kansas doesn't join ASK, Compton is asking for $525 for the campus director's salary. She said the state ASK budget is not large enough to cover campus directors' salaries without KU's membership dues.

STUDENT BODY President Greg Musil is requesting $36 less for SGA than it received this year.

Because the SGA secretary's job is a classified position, a salary increase is mandatory, Musil said. But salary cuts for the student body president and senate chairman along with having only one student election per year enabled Musil to decrease the total SGA request.

Isaac Turner, former president of Black Student Union (BSU), is requesting $240 less than last year because of major cuts in career planning and state car usage.

BSU plans to combine career planning activities with the Big 8 black student government conference it is sponsoring next year, Turner said.

Touchstone Editor Ken Shedd is requesting $200 for publication of the literary arts magazine.

Money was allocated last year with the idea that Touchstone would become self-sufficient, according to committee member John Martin. Shedd said the magazine is no closer to self-sufficiency now than last year.

Shedd said he will request an additional $650 during tentative allocations for printing costs.

OFF-CAMPUS Student President Robert Altland is requesting $200 for the Off-Campus Student Association (OSCA).

This new group has not been funded by SGA before, and Altland said he wants funding "simply to get a start." OCSA will try to become self-sufficient through fund-raisers, Altland said.

Recruitment of minority students is the main priority in budget requests for MEChA, a Chicano student organization. Chris Rodriguez, MEChA vice president, requested $500 to bring in prospective students form Topeka and Wichita.

Members of the Native American Indian Student Body (NAISB) also want funding for recruitment. NAISB wants $400 to recruit students from the three Indian reservations in Kansas, Haskell Junior College and Wichita, NAISB representative Jeanne Sandoval said.

NAISB is also requesting an additional $400 to sponsor a speaker for American Indian Day on Sept. 27, Sandoval said.

PREGNANCY COUNSELING Director Ivri Messinger wants $412.50 more than last year for the director's salary.

The amount of education required for the director of Pregnancy Counseling is more than for other social services, Messinger said, and the salary should be considered separately from the other directors' salaries.

Niles Davis, students' attorney, wants a salary increase, too. He is requesting an increase of seven percent to raise his salary from $12,326.40 to $13,189.25.

Davis requested $200 to pay fees for another attorney if a case arises in which two students are involved in a dispute. Davis said both parties would be entitled to legal cousel, but said he could not represent them both because of a conflict of interests.

A $100 increase to replace obsolete materials in the students' attorney's library is also on the budget request.

Heavy artillery pounds Kampala

Amin's reinforcements stall invading troops

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP)—Tanzanian forces pounded the southern approaches to Kampala with heavy artillery fire Sunday after apparently being stopped by unexpected resistance from fresh Ugandan troops, according to exile sources and residents of the Ugandan capital.

Travelers arriving from northeastern Uganda reported, meanwhile, that President Idi Amin's soldiers were rounding up members of two Christian tribes that have been persecuted repeatedly in the past for alleged disloyalty to the Moslem Ugandan strongman. Their fate was unknown.

Amin's harsh eight-year rule seemed in its final hours Saturday when the last of an estimated 2,600 Libyan troops defending him were reported to have fled toward an air base in the north.

BUT EXILE sources said Sunday the invasion force of Tanzanian soldiers and anti-Amin Ugandan rebels had run into new opposition—the Bondo Battalion, loyal troops recently brought down from Amin's home area of West Nile province in northwestern Uganda.

These sources said the reinforcements were believed to have stalled the invaders along the road to Kampala from Entebbe, site of Uganda's international airport 21 miles to the south.

KAMPALA RESIDENTS contacted by telephone said there had been heavy firing about five miles south of central Kampala both Saturday and Sunday. Some said their homes shook from fierce shelling of two hills—Old Kampala Hill and Mengo Hill—lying between the invaders and the heart of Kampala.

City commission approves mass transit system study

By LISA BEAM
Collegian Reporter

Those of you footing your way around town have been recognized.

The Manhattan City Commission approved a $25,000 feasibility study for a mass transit system in Manhattan.

Wilbur Smith and Associates is the consultant firm from Denver chosen to do the study.

A federal grant provided for $20,000 of the total cost and the University and the City of Manhattan each are paying $2,500.

"When the funds were available to do such a study, we approached the City Commission about it to see if they might be interested," City Planner Gary Stith said. "After the commission approved it they (commissioners) set up an advisory committee composed of both city and campus individuals to work with the study," he said.

The firm will conduct a random survey to discover the transit needs of Manhattan. The survey will cover 10 percent of the households in the city and a smaller-scale survey will be sent to K-State students, Stith said.

If an interest in a transit system in indicated from the surveys the firm will propose a system designed to suit Manhattan's needs, Stith said.

"It might be as little a thing as organizing those forms of transportation already here, to a dial or demand responsive system, such as setting up an appointment for a bus. Another proposal might be a fixed-route bus system," Stith said.

THE SURVEY is to be sent out over the next four weeks, he said.

This type of study will focus on people without access to a car, the handicapped and the elderly, he said.

If a transit system was implemented in Manhattan, it would cut down on the use of cars and decrease gas consumption and congestion, he said.

Stith said the firm will be analyzing all the data once the surveys are returned. Once compiled, he said, the data will be returned to the advisory committee along with a proposal, if applicable.

If the study shows a mass-transit system is feasible, he said the city would then have to apply for federal funds to implement it.

"Even though we're doing a study and may find out that a transit system would be feasible, that doesn't guarantee that we will obtain federal money to implement it, although doing this study will give us an advantage," Stith said.

Several inquiries about the possibility of a mass transit system in Manhattan led to the decision to do the study, Stith said.

May the best plan win...

By SALLIE HOFMEISTER
Staff Writer

Students will have another chance to express their views on Nichols Gymnasium when the College of Architecture and Design sponsors a Nichols designing competition, Gene Ernst associate professor of architecture, said.

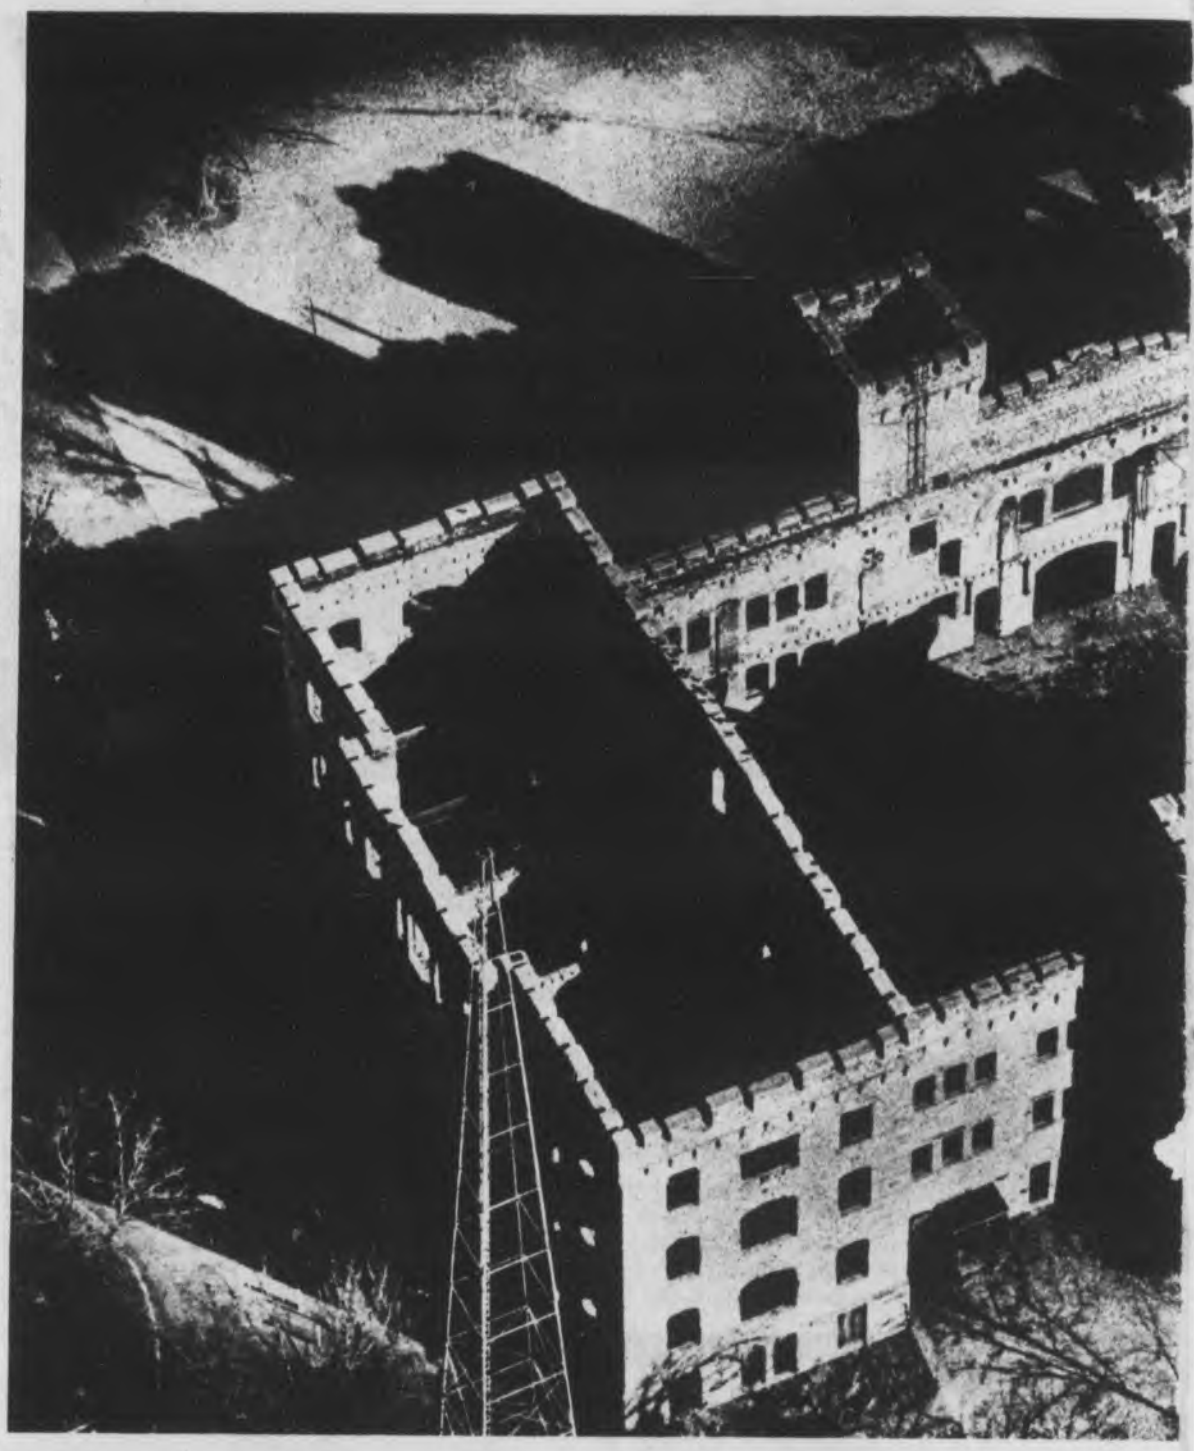
Ernst said the students and faculty of the college hope to devise a plan to turn Nichols into a useable structure.

A tentative plan has been drafted for the competition, which will be open to all K-State students and faculty.

THE CONTEST details are still sketchy, Ernst said and probably won't be finalized until Bernd Foerster, dean of the college returns this week from North Carolina.

"I haven't the slightest doubt that he (Foerster) will support this 100 percent," Ernst said. "That's why we have already started the planning."

The contest designs which are required to be coarse outlines or sketches, will be screened by students and faculty of architecture and design. Student and faculty volunteers will be sought to draft the plans of the best ideas submitted. The ideas will be completely developed and presented to a committee set up to study the feasibility of reconstruction or renovation of the burned-out shell of the gym.



The five-member committee set up by the Legislature to decide Nichols' fate will be comprised of two legislators, one senator and one representative; and one representative each from the K-State administration, Student Senate and Faculty Senate.

"It's so vague at this point as to what their (the committee's) function is to be, but we'll turn over the best proposals to the committee and hopefully, they'll look at the plans," Ernst said.

THE $125,000 needed to raze Nichols could be used to stabilize the walls, Ernst said. Ernst said his original idea was to make Nichols a "landscaped and useable open-air ruin" by planting rose or arbor gardens inside and possibly building a small amphitheater within, where plays and bands could perform. It could also serve as a display area for art students' outdoor sculpture works, he said.

"By stabilizing it with money available now, then sometime in the future, when more money is available, it could be further developed," he said.

Ernst said the castle-like design of Nichols is not found elsewhere in Kansas. It is a Manhattan peculiarity and should be preserved because of its rareness to Kansas, he said.

A $500 reward has been offered by Gov. Robert Docking for information leading to the arrest and conviction of persons responsible for the Nichols Gymnasium fire.

Docking said late Tuesday that "information received by agents of the KBI will be held confidential.

"Wanton destruction of public property on a University campus or any state institution can not and will not be tolerated," he said.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN
DECEMBER 18, 1968.

Historic ruin or rubble...

By MIKE CORN
Collegian Reporter

After a close brush with destruction, Nichols Gymnasium may be nominated for designation as a historical landmark.

Greg Musil, student body president, said he expects a committee to be formed this week to look into nominating the burned-out building for registration as a historic landmark.

The nomination, if accepted by the Kansas State Historical Society, would keep Nichols from being razed, Musil said.

However, according to Martin Stein, archeologist in the historic preservation department of the historical society, if a building is named a historic landmark, it is not necessarily safe from destruction.

"Our main goal is to identify a wide range of property in communities which has value to that community," Stein said. He said that identifying these properties could act as a deterrent to destruction.

NOMINATION of a building for either the National Register of Historic Places or the Register of Historic Kansas Places, can be made by anyone, Dick Pankratz, director of the historical society preservation department, said.

The proper forms must be filled out and returned to the historical society at least 30 days prior to a meeting of the Kansas Historic Sites Board or Review, Pankratz said. The board usually meets quarterly and is expected to meet in late May or early June.

If the nomination is approved, the building would then be placed on the state register, Pankratz said. It takes longer to put the building on the federal register, he said.

General criteria for being placed on the historic register are that the building must be at least 50 years old and must have either architectural merit or been associated with an historic event, Stein said.

Musil said a major concern in nominating Nichols is that future renovations may be limited by the historical society or that contruction may be limited to restoring Nichols to its former design and use.

STEIN SAID some limitations may be imposed but that many of the buildings on the lists have not been restored to their original design and use.

"We're not looking for museums—but want a building to continue to play an active role in the community," Stein said. "If the proposal (for renovation) is feasible and logical and can be shown as a feasible alternative, then I don't think there would be any objection to it."

Both Pankratz and Stein said Nichols' situation is unique because the structure is a ruin. There are no ruins on the Register of Historic Kansas Places.

"Since it is a ruin it is hard to say what the outcome of the committee will be," Pankratz said. "Nothing similar has been done in Kansas."

If the building is put on the list, K-State may be eligible to receive financial assistance for restoration projects.

No buildings at K-State have been recognized as historic landmarks.

A change in mind...

By CINDY FRIESEN

K-State President Duane Acker refused to heed the wishes of angry, protesting students Wednesday afternoon, but 36 hours later the students knew they had been heard.

Although Acker repeatedly said Wednesday afternoon he wouldn't rescind his recommendation that the Legislature appropriate $125,000 to raze Nichols Gymnasium, he changed his mind early Friday morning.

"My recommendation has been made," Acker said Wednesday standing on the south steps of Anderson Hall before about 1,000 students requesting that he save the "castle on the prairie."

Early Friday morning, however, after more than 100 students traveled to the state capital to plea for the salvation of the burned-out gymnasium, Acker issued a statement suggesting the Legislature take no action this session on his recommendation.

"Discussions with the legislators and students the past 48 hours make it apparent the issue of Nichols cannot be resolved in the few days remaining in this session," Acker's statement said.

"I am responding to these discussions and suggesting that the topic be left open by the Legislature for discussion in the year ahead," it said.

THE SESSION closed Saturday and will reconvene April 25.

Leading up to Acker's controversial decision Wednesday, State Senator Wint Winter (R-Ottawa) called for the University's judgment on three alternatives regarding Nichols gymnasium. Included in those alternatives was a $10,000 feasibility study or $50,000 appropriation to landscape and preserve the site.

"Though we were concerned about such an issue coming to a head this late in the legislative session we sought advice from about 40 campus leaders—faculty and students—and followed their collective judgment in respondng to the senator," Acker said Friday.

When Student Body President Greg Musil heard of Acker's statement Friday, he said he believed the students at K-State support Acker's role at K-State, but didn't agree that his recommendation to raze Nichols was the appropriate action to take.

"The time period allowed by the Legislature for a recommendation was not sufficient to provide for adequate evaluation of necessary information.

"Students have in the past, and will continue to vigorously support the preservation of Nichols and could not support the president on this specific issue," Musil said.

THOUGHTS HAD turned from the week-long demonstrations and threats to K-State basketball and Wildcat stars Steve Honeycutt and Jerry Venable.

And, K-State had won that night 88-68 over Syracruse in Ahearn Field House. As students began to find their way back to fraternities and dormitories in the 15-degree weather, a fire was being started—a fire which gutted Nichols and destroyed the K-State music department and two radio stations, KSAC and KSDB.

No one has ever been tried in the 10-year-old case, but many think protestors were responsible for the blaze.

"I can remember being absolutely shocked and appalled that this (the fire) was happening," former K-State President James McCain said. "I remember wondering to what extent it was a manifestation of the nationwide protest movement, and whether this would be just the beginning of a holocaust of our own."

THE HOLOCAUST never came. Other fires were set before and after the Nichols' blaze, including one near Kedzie Hall and another on the north side of Anderson Hall, but they were quickly extinguished and caused no damage.

Eventually, the fires stopped, the war came to a halt, and the protests ended. Only Nichols remained as a reminder of the war-torn years.

Now, more than 10 years later, it still stands.

To some, it's a reminder better razed.

For others, Nichols holds memories of 1940 dances with Cab Calloway and the 1947-48 basketball team dubbed the "Cinderella kids" which went 22-6.

Architectural design and artistic value are yet other reasons for the preservation or renovation of Nichols.

But to many, Nichols is simply a burned-out shell that could be razed and used for other purposes...such as an access drive to McCain Auditorium or a future building site.

Faculty says...

By LISA BEAM
Collegian Reporter

Most K-State faculty members believe Nichols Gymnasium should be razed, according to a poll.

When K-State students began rallying on the steps of Anderson Hall Wednesday to protest President Duane Acker's decision to raze Nichols, Charles Litz, president of Faculty Senate, decided to find out how the faculty felt by conducting a telephone poll.

"I started out by calling the faculty executive committee members and then I began to randomly pick out faculty members from the phone book," Litz said.

From 121 faculty members polled, Litz said approximately 60 to 65 percent were in favor of Acker's recommendation. He said that there are approximately 1,000 to 1,300 faculty members at K-State and he believes this was a representative sample.

LITZ MADE it clear he had conducted the poll in no way scientifically, but that he had just haphazardly picked out names from the phone book.

Litz said all the University departments, including veterinary medicine, were covered by the poll and most of those individuals polled were not faculty senators.

"I would have to say that the College of Architecture and Design was in favor of the restoration of Nichols," he said. "What surprised me is the number of people who had no opinion one way or the other because they were not interested in the situation."

The questions Litz asked were, "Do you support the president's decision concerning Nichols Gym?" and "Did you believe the decision-making process concerning this issue was made available enough to the University community?"

In regard to the last question, Litz said, "Most of the individuals felt that Acker had certainly contacted enough people and groups around campus before making his decision.

"I don't think people realize that the majority of the faculty and people from the town are in favor of tearing down Nichols."

"Through the years, basketball has attained considerable popularity, but the lack of sufficient space in the gymnasium for spectators is against the development of great popular local interest."

The game should not be promoted as a college sport because the contests are conducted in the evenings when students should be studying.

Accident shakes public confidence

Nuclear Regulatory Commission defends actions

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) faces what may be an even greater challenge than the near-disaster at Three Mile Island—a fight for credibility and public confidence.

Critics and supporters alike say the 5-year-old agency is going through the most crucial time in its history, with investigations into the accident at the nuclear plant in Pennsylvania expected to put the NRC on trial.

"Congress is going to ask, 'Can we depend on these people?'" said a prominent nuclear physicist, who is a supporter of the NRC and a key member of its advisory committee on reactor safety.

"It's a crucial time for them," he added, asking not to be identified. All five commission members are to appear this week at a congressional hearing into the accident.

President Carter's special commission on the Three Mile Island accident also will focus on NRC performance as it examines "the nature and adequacy of the response...by all levels of government," according to a White House document.

ESTABLISHED IN 1975, the NRC is charged with licensing nuclear plants, regulating operation and acting when violations occur. Its predecessor, the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC), had an official role of promoting nuclear power; the NRC does not.

But the agency's critics claim the NRC has maintained, as one said, "a mystifying, obstinate enthusiasm" for nuclear power at the expense of protecting the public. Many key staffers as well as Chairman Joseph Hendrie are former AEC officials and strong advocates of atomic power, these critics argue.

And although the agency's performance at Three Mile Island has been praised, it also was marked by early confusion and conflicting statements. Furthermore, the causes for the accident—a broad range of human, mechanical and design flaws—opened questions about the NRC's monitoring procedures.

Henry Kendall, a professor of physics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said the agency over the years has fought an attempt to lower radiation standards, lobbied against lifting the ceiling on insurance coverage in a nuclear accident, and "misrepresented the public on the hazards of nuclear power plants."

NRC SPOKESMAN Frank Ingram strongly denies any of the commissioners or key staff members compromise their roles as regulators to promote nuclear power. None of the commissioners or any key staff member was available for interviews. Ingram said they are "too busy" dealing with the Three Mile Island situation and preparing for hearings.

Big Lakes plans to build new playground equipment

New playground equipment for preschool children at the Big Lakes Developmental Center should be installed by the end of April, partly due to the efforts of a K-State service fraternity.

"Alpha Phi Omega (APO) and the parents of the children who attend the center are in the process of building a 'play-deck,'" said Charles Fry, junior in health, physical education and recreation and project chairman.

The play-deck will have three different decks of various heights, climbing and walking ramps, slides and a captain's wheel, he said. The project also will include a picnic table, swings, chinning bar and a balance beam, he said.

The project has been in the planning stage for a year and started last summer in a Design 2 studio, he said. Mallory Ann Rooks, junior in interior architecture, drew the original plans, and Larry Wareham, senior in construction science, is reworking them.

Fry said the project has received $1,000 in funding from the Federation of Handicapped Citizens in Manhattan.

The project is planned for three workdays:

The first workday, Saturday, was to consist of removing old equipment and cleaning the site, he said. On the second workday, Monday, April 16, poles for the play-deck are to be set in the ground and cemented. Saturday, April 21, will be the major workday.

NOT SO SQUAREDANCING

By ALAN WINKLER
Collegian Reporter

"Swing yer partner 'round the floor, circle to the left and swing 'er some more!"

Leading the K-Laires through their swingin' and stompin' routines, this call echoes through the KSU rooms of the K-State Union each Sunday night at 7.

For the 150 K-State students who are members of the square dancing group, it's a way to get together and meet other students in an informal atmosphere.

The group, which used to be called the Hoedowners, grew from seven members to 150 by what Ken Oppenlander, caller for the group, said was an image and name change.

He said the name was changed because "Hoedowners" depicted country, and therefore had negative connotations.

"The first thing people think about when you mention square dancing to them is a farmer in bib overalls in a hay barn dancing to fiddle music," Oppenlander said. "Square dancing has a bad image because the square dancing people get exposed to is what is exhibited at 'The Grand Ole Opry.' This is not modern square dancing, but an old type of square dancing called 'clogging.' Modern square dancing is no longer a western act. It is more of a cultural thing."

"Many people believe square dancing is just for cowboys and that just isn't true," Harry Stenvall, senior in biology and president of K-Laires, said. "Back East where I am from, and in the metropolitan areas around here, such as Kansas City and Wichita, square dancing is more competitive and considered an art."

SQUARE DANCING has become popular recently, Oppenlander said, because it isn't used totally with country and western music anymore. Another reason is square dancing's appeal to a large age bracket.

"Anyone from 12 to 70 can learn and it is very challenging personally," Oppenlander said. "There are 85 different moves in modern square dancing."

The background of square dancers also has changed. Formerly, 90 percent of the people in K-Laires had a farm or small town background, he said. Now, students from almost every kind of background, including foreign students, are involved in K-Laires.

With the changing backgrounds, it has become more fashionable for students to square dance.

"Students used to take a lot of flack for being associated with K-Laires," Oppenlander said. "Members used to be afraid to let people know they were in K-Laires because they were afraid of people's opinions.

"I know a girl who would never tell the girls in her house where she was going every Sunday night because she was afraid of what they might think," he said. "After they found out, they all came with her."

Members bring varied backgrounds to the dance floor and share their experiences with each other.

"People in K-Laires don't polarize into their own little groups. They mix well with others. They are a group of people coming together and having fun while being involved in an organization," he said.

K-LAIRES ALSO are involved in community work. They have performed at area nursing homes, and are working with other area square dance clubs that are having trouble getting members, Oppenlander said.

Recruitment for the club is every fall, and Stenvall said turnouts are good.

"We are always glad to get more members," he said. "We like to get as many people involved as we can. That way, when members graduate, they may start square dance clubs elsewhere."

It isn't necessary for those who join K-Laires to first know how to square dance, Stenvall said. Membership fees are $5 per semester.

"It's really a cheap way to have fun," he said.

FLUID FORM...A member of the Pennsylvania Ballet warms up prior to Friday night's performance.

Versatile style found in Pennsylvania Ballet

By DEBBIE RHEIN
Collegian Reviewer

Versatile, delightful, humorous, romantic, colorful, lighthearted, sensuous, classic. The words only hint at the wonders witnessed by the audiences in McCain Auditorium Friday and Saturday nights.

The Pennsylvania Ballet, accompanied by the excellent Pennsylvania Orchestra, performed before an appreciative audience each night, closing to standing ovations.

Collegian Review

Versatile is the word for the range in styles. From choreographer George Balachine to the company's own Benjamin Harkarvy, the dance styles ranged from classical to modern abstract. Versatile also describes the music used, as the company danced to music by Wolfgang Mozart and Charles Ives.

"Divertimento No. 15," choreographed by Balachine, was a delightful abstract classical that followed the lyricisms of Mozart's score.

"Eakin's View" followed with choreography by Rodney Griffin. This dance was a satirical rendition of the world painter Thomas Eakin knew in the latter 1800s. It was downright hilarious in parts, especially the boxers' scene, as male dancers took jabs at each other.

"Coppelia Act 111," which closed Friday's performance, was a joyous, romantic dance. Performed in classical style, it told of the marriage between the Marionette Coppelia and Franz. The dances of dawn and twilight were complemented by the beautiful costumes and lighting by Jose Varona. In the dance of dawn, the joy of a new day was felt. And the bittersweet beauty of a day gone was mirrored in the haunting dance of twilight.

SATURDAY'S performance began with "Signatures," a colorful frame for each dancer's range. Choreographed by Harkarvy, the dance had several interesting variations. It was a bit long though, for an abstract. There wasn't enough visual variation in the costumes to excite interest. This dance was unusual in that it had the dancers on toeshoes, something rarely done in contemporary abstracts.

"Grand Pas Espagnol" replaced "Don Quixote Pas De Deux" on the program. A lighthearted classical dance, it borrowed heavily from the Spanish dance, although the steps were ballet.

The highlight of Saturday's performance was "L'Ardeur" choreographed by Dene LaFontsee. The lighting was a striking backdrop to the two figures on stage. The sensuous dance pointed out the beauty, anguish and exquisite torture of love—physical and mental. Dancers Magali Messac and Edward Myers were magnificient! The figures floated with ecstasy and drowned with pain.

"Pas De Dix," classical to a T—toeshoes, tutus and tulle—closed the company's McCain performance. William Degregory in particular shone in his solo in this dance. His leaps, stunning turns and total composure captured the audience.

Come Fly With UPC!

So what is UPC and most important . . . what can UPC do for you?
Well, the initials stand for Union Program Council. But knowing the name doesn't begin to reveal the exciting fun things UPC can do for K-State students like you.

UPC gives you the chance to break away from the everyday routine.
—see bands in concert
—find excitment in a challenging outdoor adventure
—view hit movies and innovative international films
—experience quality entertainment in a coffeehouse atmosphere
—fulfill your dreams of a vacation get away to a ski or beach resort

What's especially appealing is all this (and more) is your free or at unbelievable affordable prices.

But these opportunities don't just materialize out of thin air. They are the product of hard work and a lot of fun by UPC members and chairpeople who serve on the nine UPC committees.

UPC activities are so successful because UPC members are students just like you, who know what they like and what other students like to do. The whole idea is students serving students.

The best way to make sure you get what you want is to be a part of UPC. If you're interested in making fun things happen, just stop by the Activities Center, third floor of the K-State Union and pick up an application. The filing deadline is April 11.

'Cats split doubleheader with KU

The frustration of seven losses to the University of Kansas ended Saturday for K-State Baseball Coach Dave Baker as the Wildcats beat the Jayhawks 8-7 in the second game of Saturday's doubleheader at Frank Myers Field.

The 'Cats trailed 7-6 going into the bottom of the fifth inning, but rightfielder Tyrone Hudson led off with a single and scored the tying run on second baseman Jeff Sherrer's line-drive triple into left-center field.

Third baseman Cal Alexander then batted in Sherrer with a single to score the winning run.

Hudson and Alexander were also instrumental earlier in the game with second and fourth-inning home runs.

"The kids were down and came back," Baker said. "That's what you have to do to be a good ballclub."

Winning pitcher Mike Wright (2-1) came on in relief of Mark Harrison in the fifth and allowed only one Jayhawk hit.

"He (Wright) came in in a tough situation and handled the pressure," Baker said.

Wright stymied the Jayhawk hitters with his knuckleball and kept the ball in the ballpark, a job that 'Cat pitchers had trouble doing in the first game.

KU blasted four wind-aided homers in the opener to win its ninth consecutive game, 12-5.

Terry Sutcliffe (3-2) the ace of the KU pitching staff, picked up the victory, throwing a no-hitter for the first four innings.

"Sutcliffe is without a doubt as good a pitcher as we'll see this year," Baker said.

The doubleheader was the first conference action for both schools.

K-State's record is 17-8-1 while the Jayhawks are 18-3-1.

Perbeck and Urish top Wildcats in weekend Texas Relays

If it hadn't been for seniors Frank Perbeck and Renee Urish, the K-State track team might have had a tough time making its presence known at the Texas Relays in Austin last weekend.

In the first of three Midwest relays, Perbeck took second place in the javelin with a throw of 255-9. Perbeck's effort was just 7 inches short of Texas's Gerald Lyons' winning performance.

Urish's second place time of 9:45.3 in the 3,000-meter run broke the K-State record of 9:46.1 set by her sister, Joyce, in 1977. Freshman Janel LeValley placed sixth in the event 9:56.2 seconds.

In the 1,500-meter event, Urish and LeValley were just .2 seconds apart as they were the seventh and eighth runners to cross the wire.

"I'm real happy with the performances of Renee and Janel. They're coming along right on schedule," Barry Anderson, women's coach said.

While 19 members of the men's and women's track teams were in Texas, the rest traveled to the Emporia State Invitationals.

ALTHOUGH no team scores were kept, the women turned in seven first-place performances highlighted by freshman Jeanne Daniels' personal best of 45-11½ in the shot put. Daniels was followed by teammate Janice Stucky's second-place heave of 41-5½.

K-State's Karesa Robbins and Annette Sittenauer combined for a first and second in the long jump, while Dana Schaulis and Connie Prince were to top two in the 1,500-meter run.

Other winning women performers were Loletia Williams in the 100 and 400-meter hurdles, Carla Nealy in the 800-meter run and Schaulis in the 5,000-meter run.

Earl Jones' first-place time of 47.98 seconds in the 400-meter run was called "outstanding, considering he finished into a very strong wind," Joe Ryan, graduate assistant coach, said.

Paris, Hobbs perform well in first spring scrimmage

By NANCY ZOGLEMAN
Collegian Reporter

Football season is here.

The spring version of the K-State football season began Saturday as the Wildcats hit the field for the first of several spring scrimmages.

Coach Jim Dickey said he was happy with the performances of his players, considering they've only practiced for one week.

"We have a lot of walk-ons, so we have lots of players to look at," Dickey said.

He said the weather was a little windy, but it was a good day to teach a lot of things to the team in a game-type situation.

"The wind minimizes our throwing game because it blows the ball off target, but this gives us a chance to execute everything else," Dickey said.

During the scrimmages, Dickey said he wants to eliminate mistakes and teach all the new players "our system."

"We teach them during the week so they'll be pretty hungry for action and be ready for the scrimmages," Dickey said.

THE SCRIMMAGE gave Dickey a chance to begin to clear the cloudy quarterback picture, as Sheldon Paris and Paul Hobbs turned in good performances.

"Sheldon took right off in running the offensive team," Dickey said. "Hobbs showed improvement in running, throwing the ball and has great speed.".

The coach said he was also pleased with the performances of running backs L.J. Brown, Keith Dearring and Darryl Black. He said Eddy Whitley executed well in the tight end position.

"The defensive team did well today," Dickey said. "There were some good plays made by the team."

Center Chuck Bowling sustained a knee injury Saturday, but Dickey said the knee was immediately packed in ice and the injury was "not too bad."

Dickey said the scrimmages, to be played every Saturday for the rest of the spring season, should give the team plenty of game-situation experience before the alumni game April 28.

Men's tennis team grabs Big 8 victory

Freshman Steve Webb had a hand in three K-State men's tennis victories Saturday, as the 'Cats beat Missouri 7-2 during a four-team match at Lawrence with KU, Missouri and Oklahoma.

Webb won his No. 6 singles match against Missouri and won a singles and a double match (teamed with Dave Krizman) in the Wildcats' 7-2 loss to KU.

"For a freshman, he had a super weekend," Coach Steve Snodgrass said.

The Wildcats lost to Oklahoma 9-0 Friday.

According to Snodgrass, the 'Cats also played well against KU, as "five of our losses were really close matches."

Women's tennis hits 'turning point'

Despite a score which indicated a thorough pounding at the hands of the University of Kansas, the K-State women's tennis team showed no signs of the lethargy that plagued it last weekend in a loss to Iowa State.

The 'Cats lost 9-0 to KU after losing 9-0 to Iowa in Lawrence, but "we've reached a turning point," Coach David Hacker said.

"We looked more like a major university tennis team today than anytime since last September," Hacker said.

The Wildcats traded deep, hard shots and lacked only consistency against "the best team we've faced all year," Hacker said.

He commended the play of Shelly Christensen, who lost 6-0, 6-2 to Carrie Fotopoulis; Anne Krizman, who lost 6-0, 6-0 to Shari Schrufer and Brenda Bennett, who lost 6-1, 6-1 to Valerie Block. Hacker called Block "the finest player we've faced this year," and "the only one I've seen in Kansas with a chance to be world class."

KC Kings clinch division title

INDIANAPOLIS (AP)—Guard Otis Birdsong scored 32 points Sunday, including 16 in a five-minute spurt late in the third quarter, as the Kansas City Kings clinched the NBA Midwest Division championship with a 107-101 victory over the Indiana Pacers.

The Kings scored 13 straight points midway through the third quarter after the Pacers took a four-point lead, and a jumper by Scott Wedman off an assist from Birdsong put Kansas City ahead to stay, 70-68.

Wedman added 25 points, including Kansas City's first 10 points of the final period to hold off an Indiana rally.

Indiana's Johnny Davis scored 27 points, but he had only two in the fourth quarter.

Round-the-clock softball raises money for charity

The clock strikes the hour and out comes another team dressed in various costumes, ready for an hour of softball.

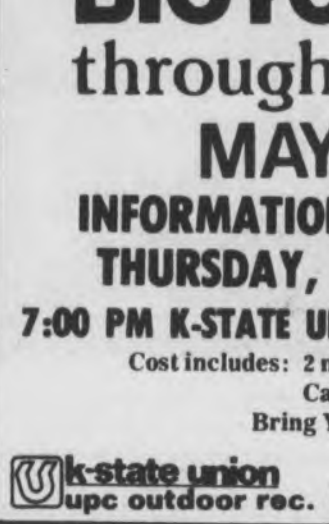
On and on went the procession Friday and Saturday during the softball marathon at the Manhattan City Park.

The scheduled 63-hour event, which was cut short Saturday night at the 41st hour because of rain, was sponsored by the K-State Association of Residence Halls to raise money for the Mabel Strong Scholarship Fund, the K-State Marching Band and the Manhattan United Way.

"We haven't got anywhere near the total figures but it should be about $500," Stewart Bowersox, Haymaker Hall president, said.

Women's teams, men's teams, mixed teams, and even a mother-daughter team from Putnam Hall comprised the 67-team event.

With 63 games planned for the three-day marathon, many of the teams had to go beyond the call of duty and play several games.



One of these teams was the Cosmic Cowboys from fifth floor Haymaker. The Cowboys played from 9 p.m. Saturday to 3 a.m. Sunday with only one break at 10 p.m.

"You don't usually play ball at 1 or 3 in the morning, so it's something a little different," team captain John Janson, sophomore in accounting, said.

The pitcher for the Cowboys was Kevin "Zero" Magee.

"We're not expecting to make any great strides, but we just want to have a lot of fun," Magee said.

Students 'wrap up' International Week

International dress and food came to dinner as K-State's international students sponsored a potluck supper Saturday, organized by wives of foreign students.

According to Sami Sorrells, graduate in adult and occupational education, wives of foreign students attend a class, Orientation to International Home Economics, which helps them prepare for the supper.

The wives prepared a supper consisting of four main dishes from Malasia, Sudan, Nigeria and Mexico.

The dinner attracted the largest crowd for any event during the week, said Joseph Cousins, graduate in counseling.

"The purpose of the supper was to wrap up International Week and get together with different countries and the sharing of foods," he said.

"It's a celebration of understanding so people can be exposed to other cultures, the realities of the world as seen through the eyes of people who live in other countries rather than by the press, word of mouth, prejudice or the stereotype of other people."

Perception theme of Shirley Black Landon Lecture

Former ambassador to Ghana and child actress Shirley Temple Black will give the semester's final Landon Lecture "It's All Perceptions Now" at 10:30 this morning in McCain Auditorium.

"Being amabassador to Ghana was the most important job in my life," Black said, adding that she would like to serve as an ambassador again, possibly under the next president.

Black served as U.S. ambassador to Ghana from 1974 to 1976 and was chief of protocol at the White House in 1976 and 1977.

Developing countries hold a special interest for Black, who said she would prefer to serve as ambassador to a Third World nation.

"All of us (U.S., Canada, Soviet Union and People's Republic of China) are wooing Africa and the rest of the developing nations," she said.

In the past the United States has been accused of taking advantage of Third World nations such as Ghana, she said. It's the reponsibility of the ambassador to make sure trade is reciprocated.

"The United States is popular in Ghana," she said. "They are much like us. They are outgoing, industrious, intelligent and have a fine sense of humor. There are a lot of similarities."

Black said that the same parallel could not be drawn with other African nations.

"In Africa, each country is like an individual fingerprint," she said.

'We need a more professional attitude'

Nuclear power: energy for emotional clashes

By ALAN WINKLER
Collegian Reporter

Jean Green, a soft-spoken, former grade school teacher and government employee is not usually thought of as a radical.

Yet, Green and 35 of her Kansas Natural Guard (KNG) colleagues were arrested for protesting in January's arrival of the nuclear reactor vessel at the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant near Burlington.

For their act of "civil disobedience," the protestors were fined $100 each, although they could've received a maximum penalty of a year in jail and a $2,500 fine, Green said.

Green's group is similar to many groups nationally that fear the type of accident that happened at Three Mile Island nuclear plant near Harrisburg, Penn.

Meanwhile, nuclear experts maintain that the benefits of nuclear energy far outweigh the dangers.

"This is not a group of young people just looking for something to do," Green said of the protestors.

"We have people of all ages and occupations. Engineers, as well as priests, are involved in the organization. It's largely community people," she said.

THE SUNFLOWER Alliance and KNG are the two major anti-nuclear organizations in Kansas, Green said.

The organizations' primary objectives are to stop construction of Wolf Creek plant and to promote alternative sources of energy and conservation.

"Everybody in Kansas should be concerned," she said. "This is something all Kansans should vote on."

At January's demonstration at the Wolf Creek site, 200 people showed up, she said.

"We made no resistance or violence of any kind," Green said. "Everyone took nonviolence training so there would be no incidents of violence. We would be defeating our own purpose if there were."

The business people in Burlington are pronuclear, but they are not considering the long-term effects of the plant, Green said.

Farmers also are protesting the plant because their land was confiscated under the power company's right of eminent domain.

Green said she opposes the plant not only because she believes nuclear power is unsafe, but also because the plant is not necessary. She then cited the utility companies' attempt to sell part of Wolf Creek's power to a Nebraska power company.

"Our trouble is we are fighting a corporate structure," Green said.

And, part of that corporate structure involves the introduction of alternative power sources.

BILL DORSETT, member of the Sunflower Alliance who has been working to develop solar energy in the Manhattan area, said power companies aren't investing in solar power because it isn't as profitable as selling power from centralized plants.

"If nuclear power is scrapped, or even cut back, they would stand to lose a great deal," he said.

"I don't think the government has done enough research into alternative energy sources. Allocations for the study of solar energy are a fraction of what they are for nuclear," Dorsett said.

The problems with solar power are the difficulties with mass production and storage of energy, he said.

Besides developing other energy sources, there is a great need for energy conservation, he said.

"West Germany uses one-half the energy we use per capita. We are using twice as much energy now as we did in 1963," Dorsett said.

HERMANN DONNERT, professor of nuclear engineering, said nuclear energy is an absolute necessity to meet U.S. energy needs.

"The United States has oil-fired plants in the East that produce electricity for many people. We are paying through the nose to get the oil to run them," he said.

Nuclear energy accounts for about 15 percent of the energy used in this country, Donnert said.

The dangers of nuclear energy and the accident at Three Mile Island have been overplayed by the press, he said.

There is an inclination to jump to conclusions on the basis of insufficient data, Donnert said. This is why the public is getting conflicting stories about what happened in Pennsylvania from company officials, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) and the press, he said.

REGARDING NUCLEAR waste, Donnert said long-term stortage is a problem, but there are short-term solutions.

"We have the technology to handle the waste temporarily," he said. All nuclear plant wastes are kept on the plant site in storage tanks or heavy metal containers.

"It's a better solution to put the waste in storage so it can be monitored than not using this type of energy at all," he said.

The quality control in nuclear plant construction is adequate, Donnert said, adding that more computer control in monitoring might be desirable. (A malfunctioning open valve was one of the reasons cited for the Three Mile Island accident.)

Solar energy can be of help in the future, Donnert said, "but there are certain things that money can't buy. They need a novel breakthrough of some kind and I don't see it in the cards."

"We need the power," Donnert said. "We shouldn't put all of our eggs into one basket. We should be trying to substitute coal and nuclear power for oil as much as we can."

DEAN ECKHOFF, head of K-State's nuclear engineering department, agreed, saying that coal and nuclear power will be the basic sources of power in future years.

"One of the reasons for the negative feelings about nuclear power is that it has been relegated as a dark, bad, filthy type of energy," Eckhoff said. "Many people who visit a nuclear plant are surprised to find an exceptionally clean place with high standards," he said.

"I am appalled that the formation of opinions on nuclear energy by many people is done in ignorance. They are uninformed or misinformed," Eckhoff said.

There are 72 commercial nuclear reactors operating in the United States. The reactor wastes from these account for only 1 to 2 percent of all nuclear waste in the country, he said.

Most high-level wastes come from the military and are stored in tanks located away from ground water where they are monitored constantly. The tanks have sprung leaks at times, but these have always been well contained, Eckhoff said.

"Nuclear power is the cheapest source of power known today and it is also the safest, with the possible exception of natural gas," Eckhoff said.

THE HIGH COST of a nuclear plant is often due to the construction delays caused by people who oppose the plant. A delay such as the one at Wolf Creek has almost doubled its cost, he said.

"We have the fuel for nuclear power which would cut our dependency on foreign oil," Eckhoff said.

There is enough stored uranium for a breeder reactor to meet all energy needs for the next 500 years, he said. This is equivalent to 20 trillion tons of coal.

"If you deny people nuclear energy, you deny them independence—a cheap way of getting energy," he said.

Eckhoff, who talked to a spokesman of Babcock and Wilcox (the builder of the Three Mile Island plant), said the accident was not as dramatic as reports would indicate.

The bubble at Three Mile Island, although made to sound totally unexpected, probably did not surprise too many people at the reactor site, Eckhoff said.

"There's always a possibility of anything happening. You are always in a learning process," Eckhoff said.

"What would benefit the public the most would be responsible information. Usually the more people know about nuclear energy, the more favorable they are about it," he said.

The people in charge of informing the public about nuclear power, such as members of the NRC, don't tell the whole truth because most of them are pro-nuclear, according to Dwight Nesmith, associate professor of engineering.

"We need a more professional attitude. This means the people in charge will have to put the public good before the buck.

"We can't phase out nuclear energy overnight," he said. "This is no solution. We need to develop other sources of energy so we can cut down in our dependency on nuclear power."

'Deer Hunter,' Voight, Fonda win Oscars

HOLLYWOOD—"The Deer Hunter," the shattering story of how the Vietnam War affected the lives of three Pennsylvania mill workers, was named best film of 1978 at the Motion Picture Academy Awards on Monday night.

Top acting honors went to another film inspired by the Vietnam war as Jon Voight, the paraplegic veteran in "Coming Home" and Jane Fonda, the officer's wife who falls in love with him were chosen best actor and actress.

Michael Cimino was named best director for "The Deer Hunter."

Maggie Smith, the nervous Oscar nominee in "California Suite," and Christopher Walken, a soldier corrupted by drugs and money in "The Deer Hunter," were named best supporting actress and actor.

The best picture award was announced by veteran actor John Wayne, who recently underwent surgery for his second major bout with cancer. Wayne received a standing ovation.

Sir Laurence Olivier was honored with a special award that paid tribute to his entire acting career. It was presented by Cary Grant, who called his colleague "the ultimate actor."

Journalists believed executed

NAIROBI, Kenya—Fresh Ugandan troops loyal to Idi Amin took up new positions east of Kampala Monday after Tanzanian forces blunted a last-ditch Ugandan counter-attack in bloody fighting south of the city, anti-Amin exiles said.

Amin's government announced, meanwhile, it had executed four "foreign mercenaries," sources reported. But the victims were believed to be two West German and two Swedish journalists who tried to slip into Uganda by boat across Lake Victoria.

The invasion force of Tanzanian troops and Ugandan exiles has been poised at Kampala's southern and western outskirts for the past week.

Exile sources, quoting eyewitnesses, said Ugandan reinforcements led by tanks and armored cars launched an assault against the invaders over the weekend on the road to Entebbe airport, 21 miles south of Kampala.

Thousands of Floridians return home

CRESTVIEW, Fla.—Thousands of Florida Panhandle residents returned home Monday, but hundreds remained in shelters as toxic chemical vapors continued to leak from ruptured railroad tank cars.

Meanwhile, Gov. Bob Graham inspected the site of Sunday's derailment by helicopter. And Secretary of Transportation Brock Adams said he had ordered the head of the Federal Railroad Administration to the scene of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad's latest accident involving hazardous cargo.

About 4,500 people were driven from an 80-square-mile area surrounding the pileup Sunday and spent the night in temporary shelters, including schools and National Guard armories.

Say 'cheese' for your driver's license

TOPEKA—Legislation signed into law Friday by Gov. John Carlin requiring Kansans to have a color photograph on their driver's license is expected to save the state about $60,000 annually in administration expenses, a state official said Monday.

The new law goes into effect July 1, so anyone applying for a new Kansas driver's license, or whose current license must be renewed, after that date is required to report to their local driver's license examining station for the photograph.

The additional fee for the photo must be less than $1 under provisions of the statute, but John Bottenberg, director of the state motor vehicle division, said Monday the fee is not expected to be more than 50 cents.

Presently, driver's license photos are optional. The only apparent exemption from the new photo requirement is for persons living outside the state who still qualify for a Kansas driver's license, such as military personnel.

"Administratively, it is a good bill just from the standpoint of saving the state some money," Bottenberg said. He explained the savings will result from a reduction in paperwork required when people applied by mail for renewals without a photograph.

Weather

When the red, red robin goes bob, bob bobbin' along in the spring, sometimes he slips on wet pavement because it always rains in the spring. Then he loses his balance and falls flat on his beak. And, usually a cat is nearby and pounces on the bird when he falls. And, then the cat eats the bird. Spring is a lousy time of year for birds.

The weather today will be great for cats. Cloudy weather with a chance of rain is expected. Highs should be in the upper 50s to low 60s.

Ready for a revolution?

This country is ready for a Technological Revolution.

A Technological Revolution would mean an uprising of ideas and innovations for practical solutions to pressing problems.

Where are the Thomas Edisons of today?

Industrial manufacturers like to stick with a good thing. It worked (and made money) for our forefathers so it will work for us, they reason.

The government has fallen in the same trap by investing so many dollars in the nuclear industry. By doing so, they have committed themselves to continued use of nuclear power—even though other alternatives have been or could be developed.

New techonolgy is exciting.

For example, the silicon chip is revolutionizing the computer industry.

The first computer was built in 1946. It used vacuum tubes, considerable energy, intricate programming and took up lots of room. Computer systems cost millions.

Silicon-chip technology, developed in the early '70, has made desk-top microcomputers affordable to small businesses and homes. These microcomputers are being used to peform a variety of bookkeeping and secretarial chores.

But people are resisting this new technology because they are afraid microcomputers will put secretaries, accountants, etc...out of work.

It's a hard-to-shake belief because there is some truth to it. However, people should remember, as new technology is put to use there will be more, different jobs.

The effect of the silicon chip has been compared to that of steel during the Industrial Revolution. Let's move forward with the silicon chip and a Technological Revolution.

Package awards all wrapped up

Good morning, good morning, ladies and gentlemen, and welcome to the 1979 (small trumpet fanfare) Package Awards.

Yes, friends, once a year we recognize those people who have helped make our world better through the design and use of...(drum roll)...the PERFECT PACKAGE.

With the world wrapped up in dumb things like nuclear holocausts and world peace, we feel it is important to honor those people who are out to save mankind from stale products.

In honoring today's winners, it is necessary to look at the pioneers in this crusade—those people who have been giving it to the public for years and receiving no real recognition.

The number one trendsetter for the past few years is (drum roll) McDonald's. Yes, apart from the Big Mac, McDonald's has made other, less-known contributions to America. Those little Styrofoam packages which keep your food from freezing on the way to the table win the award.

As I'm sure you're aware, many people died due to eating a cold hamburger before this ingenuous device.

Another peachy benefit from those pretty, little, foam containers is the added decoration to the great American highways. Scientists say we'll be able to see Styrofoam containers brightening up our roadways for years.

WITH SPRING and sunny weather coming on it makes me feel great to see those cheerful splashes of color along the road, and we have some fast food chains to thank. (They could plant flowers, but we have the same colorful effect for nothing.)

Thanks are also due to Coors breweries for "doing their bit" to keep the environment clean through the use of their "push-top" cans.

Way to be folks, you really helped stop pollution with those tops. I mean, I hardly ever see one of those nasty, dangerous, old-fashioned pulltabs any more and we...what? Coors has gone back to those pulltabs? Oh well, on to the next category.

Let's see, our next category is "Better Health Through the Right Package." Yes, it's one of my favorite categories too.

The runner-up for this category is the Nature Valley Granola Bar. Nature Valley has brought its 100 percent natural granola to you as fresh as the day it left the factory. Nature Valley keeps its bar fresh by sealing it in a plastic-coated, tinfoil wrapper.

Now that's the natural way to health.

THIS YEAR'S award-winning "Better Health" product is Naturally Vitamin Supplements.

Naturally got rid of the age-old problem of cotton fuzz on their Vitamin E. Now, instead of having to take fuzzy vitamins, you simply pull the wadded-up sheet of plastic out of the bottle and pop down a couple of vitamins. Gone are the days of organic cotton with natural vitamins.

The honorable mention is shared jointly by those companies whose "products may settle in shipment." Many Americans have enjoyed the opportunity to guess just how much the product has settled.

It is also neccessary to mention the companies who are so concerned with our well-being, they seal potato chip bags with lots of air inside.

Not everyone knows if you fill the bag with air and put in about five chips, those chips will arrive unbroken and free from outside air which might be full of bad germs.

NOW FOR the Grand Award to the people who have really revolutionized ideas about packaged foods.

Without further comment, I would like to announce this year's winner—the K-State Union.

Yes, by sealing its sandwiches in handy, dandy plastic cases, the Union not only keeps its sandwiches fresh, but aids digestion because you have to tear the sandwiches to shreds in order to get them out.

Well, friends, that concludes this year's Package Awards. Join us next year when we will have a tribute to the lightweight, unbreakable, pop-bottle industry.

Relay's purpose—feedback

Editor,

RE: "Scared to tell instuuctor off? Try 'relay' method" (April 9).

I feel the general content of your article on the Relay, a new program designed by the Arts & Sciences College Council, was very objective. The headline and first paragraph though were no doubt added for sensationalism. This sensationalism is flat-out a misrepresentation.

First—the intent of the Relay is not to represent "Arts & Sciences students who shake in their boots at the thought of telling off their instructors." The Relay is for the use of any students in this university, who have compliments, questions or complaints about the teaching effectiveness.

Secondly—although the Relay is designed for students who won't or can't personally talk to their instructors, there is still a "confrontation." Students wanting to use the Relay must be responsible and concerned enough to "confront" the Relay committee composed of students.

The Relay is not an easy way out for students with vibration boots as your lead paragraph implies. The Relay is for the use of students who want to give feedback to their instructors. Thank you.

Consumers need specifics

Editor,

Re: Susan Brink's Consumer Sleuth column (March 22).

As educational adviser to Consumer Relations Board, I am writing to you regarding your Consumer Sleuth column. The column has been in the past associated with Consumer Relations Board, one of whose objectives is to provide K-State students with objective information to aid them in their roles as consumers. The column to which I refer slipped tremendously in maintaining that objective.

The portion of the column concerning "junk food" presents only one side of the issue, that is, the industry's bias. The enclosed information may provide you with additional insight which you might pass along to readers in a future column.

Fast food chains would not be prohibited from making nutritional claims for their products if full disclosure under Federal Food and Drug Administration guidelines were made. Most of the corporate agents who you quoted lauded the protein content of their meals. As the enclosed Comsumer Reports' article points out, protein is only one aspect of a balanced diet, and while many fast food meals contain adequate amounts of protein, they may be lacking in other important nutrients.

Furthermore, many of the foods in question are high in calories and sodium which may be undesirable for some people. This is not to say that fast foods are always a bad choice. Rather, if the consumer is to be provided with nutritional information, it should be complete information, so he can make a more rational choice. If their foods are indeed as "nutritious" as they claim, the corporate heads should not object to providing consumers with the specifics.

Anybody seen a clock?

Editor,

Well it seems the reorganization of the Physical Plant into the department known as University Facilities is quite an improvement. Why just the other day (mid-October) Music Students Council requested they install a clock constructed by a student in the coutryard of the Music Wing.

The money for installation had been appropriated by the department and the clock was delivered to University Facilities. Now five months later we still do not have our clock. We would like to ask if it might have been placed in Van Zile by accident?

The only other problem as we can see it is maybe University Facilities doesn't know where the Music Wing is—we're the one next to Thompson Hall.

Let '60s spirit live

Editor,

RE: "Ironic Note in '60s spirit" (April 9).

The spirit of the '60s cannot be summarized as one of violence. There were those who chose to burn buildings and bras, but for the most part all we wanted was an end to injustice and a beginning of a planet at peace with itself.

May the spirit of the '60s live on as long as profit overrides freedom, as long as there is war, pollution and hunger.

Cooperation helps check-out

Editor,

This is an open letter to the Saturday afternoon users of Farrell Library. I wish to apologize to those people checking out books between 3:45 and 4:10 p.m. and my fellow workers for my rude behavior and lack of patience. There was no excuse for my behavior and I'm sorry if I offended you.

But just as two wrongs don't make a right, I also feel there was no excuse for all of you being there at that time. Farrell closes at 4 p.m. I didn't set the time and I won't take responsibility for that fact. I was hired to see to it that NO ONE checked books out after that time because apparently for the last two years people using the library on Saturdays have lined up at closing time to check out books.

By closing at 4 p.m. that means we close at 4 p.m.! ALL library services are supposed to stop at that time. It doesn't matter who you are, what time you got to the library, how long you have been waiting in line to check out a book or even when you began to wait in line to check out the book.

Preference of material, importance of research or miles travelled have no bearing on the 4 p.m. check-out time.

The library is open for six hours on Saturday. During five and one half of those hours the person at the front gate has little or nothing to do. During the last half hour there is suddenly a line of equally rude, inconsiderate people wanting to check out books. Does that make any sense?

But as I said, two wrongs do not make a right. I apologize for my behavior and hope in the future we will be able to cooperate and thus get along better.

EXPANSION..."Business is good"—Manhattan airport manager Larry Priest.

Expansion, remodeling improve city airport

By VINCE WHEELER
Collegian Reporter

If you need to get "Away From It All" just to be "Far From the Madding Crowd" and have no "Fear of Flying," then check out Manhattan Municipal Aiport.

"Our airfield ranks sixth or seventh in size over the state," said airport manager Larry Priest. "But in terms of air carries and passenger flights it's second only to Wichita."

The Manhattan Airport began in 1938 with a ground lease of 110 acres costing $1000. The project was financed by 10 Manhattan citizens donating $100 each. The facility will be worth well over $6 million, after proposed improvements are completed this spring.

"The process of remodeling the terminal building begins April 16," Priest said. "We're also expanding the main runway an additional 1500 feet."

THE RUNWAY will be lengthened to 7,000 feet, allowing Frontier Airlines to land their 737 jetliners at the airport.

"In connection with the runway expansion, Frontier won't serve us from April 16 through July 15. However Capitol and Royal Airlines are adding flights during that time to compensate," Priest said.

Priest said other improvements will include new runway lights, overlaying the taxing and ramp areas, and new instruments that will help planes land safely in bad weather. An airport limousine service providing transportation to Manhattan, Fort Riley, Junction City and Topeka began the first of April.

"There are future plans for a new terminal building," Priest said. "The planning period is two to five years." The new building will be located adjacent to K-18 and southwest of the present terminal building.

Most of the financing for the latest renovations will be granted by th Federal Aviation Administration: The city will pay 11 percent of the cost.

MANHATTAN HAS funded at least one half of the monies used in developing the airport since its opening. The city paid one-half of the $154,878 spent on the first hard surface runway for the airport, constructed in 1950. Runway lights were installed in 1952 and in 1953 the runway was extended and widened and new land was purchased for $133,453. Another runway was installed along wiwth a taxiway to the hangers, more lighting and another 110 acres of land for $565,993 in 1963.

Three commercial air services—Fronter, Capitol and Royal—operate at the airport. Of the three, Capitol is the most active—employing 25 people at the airport and offering 14 daily flights. Frontier and Royal each offer six flights daily. All commercial flights from the airport stop in either Topeka, Wichita or Kansas City.

Priest estimates that over 55 people are employed at the airport, over 40 being employed by the commercial airlines. Hertz Rent-A-Car is also available at the terminal.

IN ADDITION to handling commercial aircraft the airport also services many private planes. Flying lessons are available from four different sources at the airport: Capitol, two private instructors, and the K-State Flying Club, which is composed of students and faculty of K-State but has no other connection with the university.

"There are 16 planes available for lessons," Priest said. "Anyone who wants to earn their private license can count on spending around $1,000. When I earned mine in 1973 I paid only around $600," he said reflecting on rising inflation.

"Summer is our most busy time," Priest said. But it seemss as though the icy winter hasn't hurt the flying business any. He confidently says that currently "business is good."

Practicality

Special schooling needed to develop rural industry, says 1929 grad

By KELLY WILKERSON
Collegian Reporter

"What does that mean, retired? I have too many things to do, I'm too busy to die. I'm thinking about launching a new business—I've developed a new pen. It's an invention. That's a product of thinking, and thinking means to invent."

Mel Coffman is a creative thinker and an inventor.

"It's just plain dreaming, the person who doesn't dream doesn't think. Every dream starts with the little statement, I wonder," he said.

Class of 1929

Coffman, a 1929 K-State graduate in electrical engineering, said he regrets that not enough training in matching and design courses are offered in colleges.

He said since World War II, trends in engineering have been toward more theory and technological courses and not enough emphasis on classes "that are so practical that you can go back to the rural community and put them to use."

"I'm rather an oddity," Coffman said. "I've been advocating that we need a specialized schooling to develop rural industry."

Coffman said the rural community has been dying because of a lack of rural industry.

"If a rural community has it (industry), it grows on it's own. It doesn't have floods of people leaving," he said.

"When you start looking through the small communities, in about every tenth one you find a little industry. It's not important to anyone else, just to them," he said.

COFFMAN SAID the small industry helps keep the rural community alive, and without it, small towns will suffer.

"We complain about having very serious urban problems. There's nothing for the people to do in the rural community. We mechanized the farms and the people who worked on the farms had no place to work," according to Coffman.

He said he feels urban problems could be lessened if people had work in the rural community.

To maintain a rural industry, Coffman said a community needs a product, a monopoly on that product and independence.

"People have got to decide what they can make. The second thing is a monopoly so no one else can make your product," he said, adding that too much competition can cause a small industry to fold.

THE MOST important factor in setting up an industry is independence.

"If somebody gives you a product to make, it won't be long before you'll need another product to make and who'll give you a product then.

"You have to be able to invent, and right now there are no courses that teach inventing," Coffman said.

"Problem number one is to teach people to become Henry Fords, Tom Edisons, Alexander Bells. We need people who are designers not analyitical specialists," he said.

According to Coffman, universities and colleges are not filling the rural communities need for small industry engineers who can invent products for manufacture.

"An engineer is a trained, measuring person. Measure analysis, and decision, that is enginneering. It doesn't say anything about inventing," Coffman said.

"Anything that is the result of analysis is almost always never creative; it has the heavy hand of routine on it," he said.

COFFMAN SAID the whole thrust in schools is on statistical analysis rather than practical design.

"What we should be doing is to provide the atmosphere for them so they can think and they are forced to think. Something that each semester will bury them in the design problem," he said.

"When I come back to K-State, I still worry that something needs to be done," he said.

Coffman said with the proper grants K-State could develop a program which could educate and help a person to become useful to the rural community in forming an industry.

Just graduating from college does not mean a person will know all the answers, according to Coffman.

"A thinking person will learn anyway," he said. "It's not that I don't think a person doesn't need college, but many of the most important designers of all times had little or no college."

Coffman said the first step in thinking is "to become angry."

"You have to get so concerned that you psych yourself up; you feel you have to do something about the problem," he said. "The iron lung was first invented by a man who's child died from polio."

"If you say invent you mean to think, and to think means to combine or recombine old forms into new forms.

"You can invent in sociology, in almost anything. If you don't like a political system, you can think up a new one," he said.

"I'm very controversial, because, you see, I think, and when anyone thinks they challenge somebody's opinions," Coffman said.

"When you start to think, you become a rebel and you refuse to do things that others think are important—conform.

"If you think, you will never become a conformist."

Red Cross is counting on you.

A CLOSE CLIPPING...Happy to be in one piece, Brett Schuh is comforted by an unidentified friend. Schuh narrowly escaped injury Monday when the truck he was driving was struck by a Union Pacific train.

Train smacks truck; driver slightly injured

An employee of Kansas Lumber Company escaped serious injury late Monday morning when a company truck he was driving was struck by a Union Pacific train.

The train, traveling west at about 45 m.p.h., smacked the flatbed truck at the driveway crossing of the Hardman Lumber Co. on Fort Riley Boulevard.

Brett Schuh, 19, was driving the truck and said his knee was slightly injured in the accident.

Schuh said he stopped at the company's gate before crossing the tracks, but saw nothing.

The train clipped the rear of the bed, he said. The truck, minus the bed, spun off, bent a crossing sign and turned on its side.

Kansas Lumber manager Don Irelan valued the 1977 truck at $15,000 and considered it a total loss. The truck was carrying about $50 worth of plywood.

The train's engineer, Dave Troutman, said a brakeman spotted the truck coming through the gate "and it didn't look like it was going to stop."

Troutman said the train's whistle was blowing, the crossing bell was ringing, and the headlights were on. He applied the brakes, but not in time to prevent the collision.

According to Schuh, the train finally stopped several hundred yards down the track.

Cancer study award honors husband, wife

NEW YORK (AP)—Two biomedical researchers who identified the first virus regularly associated with human cancers were honored Monday with the second Bristol-Meyers award for distinguished achievement in cancer research.

The $25,000 cash prize was presented to Drs. Werner and Gertrude Henle, husband-and wife researchers on the staff of the Joseph Stokes Jr. Research Institute at the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia.

The Henles were selected by five judges from cancer research centers at Chicago, Baylor, Johns Hopkins, Stanford and Yale universities.

Furbearing animals focus of workshop

Learning about the management of furbearing animals will be the focus of the 1979 Midwest Furbearer Workshop Wednesday through Friday at the K-State Union Big 8 Room.

The workshop, sponsored by the Kansas Fish and Game Commission and the K-State Cooperative Extension Service, is open to the public.

Furbearer biologists from state and federal agencies will be there along with extension wildlife specialists, fur hunters and trappers, fur industry and marketing representatives, and landowners, conservationists and students.

Approximately 100 people will be at the workshop from fourteen different states and four Canadian provinces.

Furbearers are mammals which produce a fur pelt, such as beaver, muskrat, mink, ermine, coyote, badger, bobcat, fox and skunk.

Panels will make short presentations and then open a discussion for others attending the workshop.

Arab states want agreement with all parties

Mideast treaty may prove to be stumbling block

By ED REESE
Collegian Reporter

The Egypt-Israel peace treaty may prove to be a stumbling block rather than a step towards a more stable peace in the Middle East, according to Michael Sulieman, department head of political science at K-State.

A native of Palestine, Sulieman has made the Middle East the center of his academic interests. Because of his proficiency in Mideast studies, he was invited to discuss the Palestinian problem with President Carter in December of 1977.

Sulieman said the moderate Arab states (Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Morocco) want a comprehensive treaty between all the parties involved, not just an agreement between Egypt and Israel.

Israel will have to allow the Palestinians to set up an independent state for the West Bank and the Gaza Strip before the moderate states are satisfied, he said.

SULIEMAN SAID this is the minimum that Yassir Arafat, head of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) will accept.

"Up till 1967 there wasn't any talk of the Palestinians accepting anything less than a whole Palestinian state. Now since 1973 they have conceded to a smaller settlement," he said.

Sulieman said the moderate states will accept anything the Palestinians accept.

Arab states attending the Bagdad Summit in Iraq last week voted against the treaty. All the Arab states except Egypt, Oman, and Sudan attended the summit.

The Arab states at the summit decided to place a boycott on economic aid to Egypt and to withdraw their ambassadors.

"I think they are trying to say the are upset that Sadat (Anwar Sadat president of Egypt) spoke on behalf of the Arab countries and that he made too many concessions for the treaty. The Palestinian issue got less attention than it should have. The treaty amounted to no more than an agreement between Egypt and Israel, and the summit members feel they lost a major ally and had their own position weakened," he said.

He said the summit members specified the actions taken weren't intended as punishment against the people of Egypt, but were intended for Sadat and the Egyptian government.

THE DECISION to transfer the Arab headquarters from Cairo, Egypt, to Tunis, Tunisia, was also made at the summit, he said.

Sulieman said both Carter and Sadat were politically motivated to establish an agreement.

He said Sadat's position had weakened considerably since the October war of 1973 with a slump in the economy and military losses incurred in the war plus the rejection of the aid provided by the Soviet Union.

Carter wanted an early settlement while he could still have time to apply pressure on Israel to sign an agreement, he said.

Sulieman said the Carter administration won't be able to apply very much pressure on Israel as the election of 1980 draws closer.

He said Israel should be pressured into recognizng the Palestinians as a people and a nation, and until this happened they would remain at the root of the problem.

He said the Palestinians have been humiliated and dehumanized by being referred to since 1948 as Arab refugees.

Sulieman said the situation of the Palestinians reminded him of a limerick.

"As I was going up the stairs, I met a man who wasn't there. He wasn't there again today, I wish to God he'd go away. The man in the limerick is like the Palestinians," he said.

Somoza is not a 'shah,' says he will return home

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP)—Nicaraguan President Anastasio Somoza told a news conference Monday he plans to return home next Monday and scoffed at suggestions there is similarity between himself and the Shah of Iran, who left his country just before his government fell in a revolution.

"Yes, absolutely yes," Somoza replied when asked at a 20-minute news conference if he would definitely return to Nicaragua next week. He made the remark in a hotel room with eight representatives of the local media.

"The country is under control," he said when he was asked if his absence would give the rebels a psychological boost.

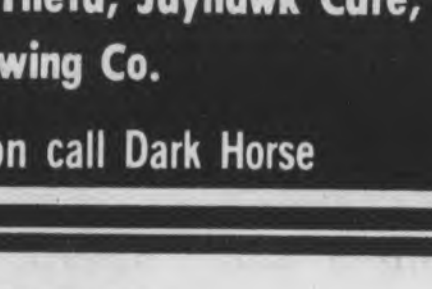
"Let's say that the Shah left Iran, taking a vacation, to sort of not hurt his feelings so much."

"But I am the president of Nicaragua and I didn't make any deals with anybody, and they are not hurting my feelings. I am coming over here to see my son.

"There is no parallel between the Iran situation and the Nicaragua situation. I am an elected president, the Shah was a dynasty."

Somoza said he is in frequent contact with his government at home, keeping abreast of developments. He confirmed that a heavily armed C-47 air transport used by his national guard was hit by gunfire Sunday and forced to make an emergency landing. He said he did not know the extent of damage but that the plane apparently cannot fly.

The president said a report Monday that the town of Esteli had fallen to rebels had not been confirmed to him by 10 a.m. Monday.



Somoza came to Topeka Sunday for a two-day visit with his son, Julio Nesto Somoza, 26, a senior studying history at Washburn University of Topeka.

Third man convicted in kidnapping case

Darwin May, 26, Junction City, was sentenced Monday in Riley County District Court to from 9 years to life in prison by Judge Jerry Mershon. He was the last of three men convicted of the Oct. 4 kidnapping of five-year-old Gary Thomason, Manhattan.

May was found guilty Feb. 17 for his role as the "pick-up man" in the kidnapping. Paul Thomason, Gary's father, was supposed to leave a $30,000 ransom, which was never picked up, in the restroom of a Junction City tavern. His son was being held in a nearby apartment.

May, Stephen Werle, 22, also of Junction City, and Marlon Holum a Ft. Riley deserter, were arrested a week later after investigation by police. Holum and Werle received the same sentence as May. Both testified against May.

TECHNICAL GRADS & MBAs:

Texas Instruments is opening a whole new world for you in marketing.

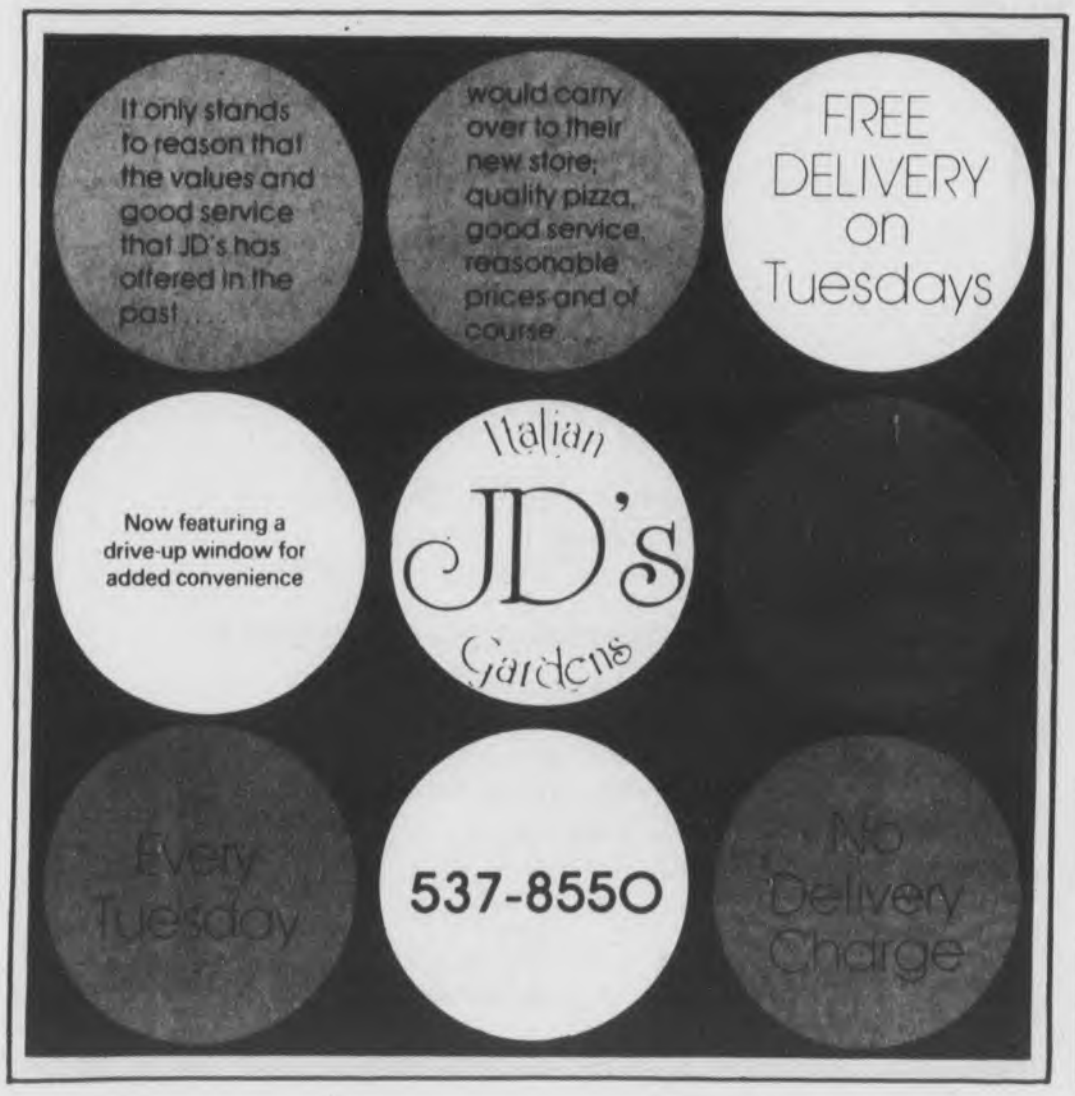
The revolution in consumer electronics is just beginning. The world market for consumer electronic products within the scope of TI's interest is projected to grow from $8.1 billion in 1978 to more than $25 billion by the late 1980s.

Openings/Benefits

Texas Instruments has openings for Bachelor of Science in Electrical Engineering, Computer Science or Physics. MBA preferred for all categories. If you have a high degree of motivation for marketing/sales, marketing development and planning, marketing research, etc., and would like to live in Dallas or Lubbock, Texas, with subsequent assignments to the field in major cities throughout the nation, then you are the kind of individual TI is looking for in our growth marketing program.

Frontier:

This market is still a frontier.
Consider these facts. See what they tell you about the career potential of marketing/sales at TI:
- TI's goal is to be a $10 billion company by the late 1980s.
- One of TI's three major growth thrusts is consumer electronics.
- TI has long been the leader in solid-state technologies. It is this catalyst technology that provides the foundation to TI's leadership in consumer electronics such as handheld and programmable calculators, watches, electronic learning aids, and other soon-to-be-announced new consumer products.



Opportunities

At TI we are aware of your efforts to receive the best education possible, and we recognize that you want to fully utilize your abilities—immediately. We need your knowledge and skills and will provide you with ample opportunities to demonstrate them. Can anyone offer you more?

If interested, send your resume to: Personnel Director/Consumer Products Group/ P. O. Box 225012, M. S. 87/Dallas, TX 75265.

Residential zoning studied by Urban Area Planning Board

Use of artificial brick and stone in and on buildings may soon be allowed in Manhattan.

An addition to the definition of "Residential and Commercial Contractors and Subcontractors" in the zoning Regulation of Riley County was requested last night at a meeting of the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board.

The proposed definition was to include the fabrication of stone and brick replicas to be used on the exterior and interior veneers of buildings, Lynn Cress, a local subcontractor, said. The fabricated stone and brick is to be sold through wholesalers and distributors throughout the Midwest, Cress said.

Also included in the meeting was a public hearing, requested by Keats Development Co., that real estate offices be permitted temporarily in certain residential zones.

The temporary offices would be in model homes north of town in subdivisions and developments, Richard Hill, Keats president, said. The offices would remain until 90 percent of the lots were sold, or 24 months, whichever occurs first, he said.

This proposal was recommended by the planning board.

A PUBLIC HEARING also was held on the request of Keats Development Co., that four lots in Valleywood Subdivision be rezoned from single-family residential and two-family residential to neighborhood business district to permit establishment of a convenience grocery store, a package liquor store and offices.

There is a state statute that does not allow a package liquor store in established townships of less than 11,000 people.

Robert Milgrim, a property owner in the Valleywood addition, brought a petition opposed to the proposal signed by all but one landowner in the area.

Milgrim said the proposal would drag traffic off of Tuttle Creek Boulevard, cause some excess amounts of debris and require some signs for advertising.

Blue Hills Shopping Center is 1.5 miles from the Valleywood addition.

The planning board recommended disapproval of the proposal.

ANOTHER PUBLIC hearing was held on a request to rezone one acre of land from single-family residential to planned-unit development district to allow construction of an office building on the northeast corner of the intersection of Hylton Heights Road and Anderson Avenue.

This proposal was recommended by the planning board.

Congress wrestles with legislation

System 'bungling way of removing judges'

WASHINGTON (AP)—As more and more political and social issues evolve into legal questions, a group of some 600 men and women plays a growing role in American life.

It is left to federal judges to pronounce the final word in fundamental debates and resolve seemingly intractable problems:

Should a convicted murderer live or die?

Should a pregnant woman have the alternative of abortion?

Should a race of people oppressed for so long be given special preference as compensation?

The answers, often unpopular with huge segments of society, carry force only as long as Americans remain confident in the judges who provide them.

Then what about a judge who deserves no confidence?

Congress has been wrestling with that question for years without result, but in one bill before it this year the issue is being given serious consideration.

The Constitution's Article 3 states that all federal judges "shall hold their offices during good behavior." Article 3 allows a judge's removal by impeachment "for and conviction of treason, bribery and other high crimes and misdemeanors."

As in the impeachment of a president, the House of Representatives is granted sole power to impeach a judge. Impeachment actually is an indictment, requiring a majority vote in the House.

Then it is up to the Senate to try the judge. Conviction requires a two-thirds vote.

IMPEACHMENT OF judges, however, remains little more than political theory. Only nine judges have been impeached in the nation's 203-year history. Four were convicted, four acquitted and one resigned during the process.

As early as 1819, President Thomas Jefferson complained about the impeachment process as "a bungling way of removing judges...an impracticable thing."

Not since 1936 has a judge been removed from office by the political process.

In 1972, Judge Otto Kerner of the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, was convicted after standing trial for conspiracy, bribery, income tax evasion, mail fraud and perjury.

He stepped down from his duties but refused to resign until the day after his final appeal failed—five days before he went to prison.

During the 14-month interval between his conviction and resignation, Kerner collected $50,000 in federal pay.

The Constitution, what's more, mentions nothing about judges who, although not dishonest, are physically or mentally impaired or who abuse their powers.

The problem is conceded. As a little-known federal appeals judge more than a decade ago, Warren Burger, voice a concern.

"I would not presume to say how many U.S. judges now in active service are not physically able to perform their work adequately, but every observer knows that there are more than a few," said the future chief justice.

As Congress considered early legislation to supplement the impeachment process, then-Sen. Joseph Tydings said, "It is uncertain whether senility, insanity, physical disability, alcoholism or laziness—all of which are forms of unfitness that require remedial action—are covered by the impeachment process."

CONGRESS RESISTED Tydings' attempt and subsequent ones, but now is considering a proposed law that would allow the judicial branch to police its own ranks. The proposed Judicial Tenure Act—often called the "Nunn bill" for its sponsor Sen. Sam Nunn (D-Ga.)—would make the judge's removal possible short of impeachment.

The bill would set up a council of federal judges to consider firing judges for "willful misconduct in office, willful and persistent failure to perform duties of the office, habitual intemperance or other conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute."

Passed by the Senate on a 43-31 vote last year but not acted on by the House, the bill is once again before Congress. It has won the support, in general, of the American Bar Association, and the enthusiastic backing of the American Judicature Society.

A 1978 editorial in a society publication, said, "If the competence and integrity of the judiciary is to be maintained...Congress must confront the infrequent but nevertheless troublesome problem of the corrupt or disabled federal judge."

Country's choice: voluntary control or worse

WASHINGTON (AP)—A nationwide citizens' crusade against rising prices got under way Monday with President Carter's chief inflation fighter saying if voluntary anti-inflation efforts fail, it could lead to mandatory controls or a recession.

But White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said Carter would not consider imposing mandatory controls.

Alfred Kahn told some 250 labor leaders the alternatives to Carter's voluntary wage and price guidelines "are unthinkably worse."

Kahn told the group: "There are a couple of commonly proposed alternatives that the president and I both feel are not acceptable."

BUT, HE added, "An honest person has to admit that if this (voluntary) program doesn't work, we may get one or another of those alternatives, whether we like it or not.

"We may get the one that some of you say you want—mandatory controls. With the mood of the country the way it is today, however, and the way it is likely to be if this inflation continues unabated, we may get the one that neither you nor I want.

"I refer, of course, to the option of clamping down on the economy so severely that we bring on a serious recession and throw millions of people out of work—your people—in a repeat of 1974-75. The president is determined not to use recession as a tool to cure inflation...

"The president is equally determined not to resort to the second method of restraining those excessive demands—mandatory wage and price controls."

Despite Kahn's comments, Powell said "absolutely not" when asked if Carter was thinking of asking Congress for authority to impose mandatory controls.

Powell said Kahn "in no way meant to imply that this president would under any circumstances impose wage and price controls."

KAHN'S STATEMENT came as the AFL-CIO kicked off its Operation Price Watch. The opening rally was held beneath a large red, white and blue banner reading "Bring down prices!!! An AFL-CIO community service."

The price watch was instituted, AFL-CIO President George Meany told the rally, to allow "thousands of union members across America to be the eyes and ears for the administration's inflation fighters."

The crusade also will involve COIN (Consumers Opposed to Inflation in the Necessities), a Washington-based coalition of some 60 labor, consumer, minority and senior citizen groups.

Participants will monitor the prices of food, housing, fuel and medical care—which together make up more than 70 percent of the average family's expenditures.

A similar effort in the early 1970s, President Ford's Whip Inflation Now program, ended in disarray when the 1974-75 recession hit.

THE NEW price watch, which will augment the Council on Wage and Price Stability's own monitoring, comes as the Carter administration is facing tough challenges to its voluntary wage-price program.

The Teamsters union is on strike for a new contract that experts say could exceed the wage limit. And the president announced last week that he plans to decontrol domestic oil prices, which would lead to higher fuel prices and could result in windfall oil-company profits if Congress does not agree to an excess profits tax.

The AFL-CIO has said since the guideline announcement last October that the voluntary program to limit wage increases to 7 percent while prices rose at much higher rates is discriminatory.

We are looking for a few good people

U.G.B.
Union Governing Board

UGB, is a group of ten students, three faculty members, and one alum, who participates directly in the management and operation of the K-State Union. The board works with the staff to see that the Union is the kind of operation K-State should have.

If you are the kind of person who would enjoy the chance to make the Union a better place and have a few hours to devote to a worthwhile interest, come in and fill out an application. We can use your help.

Applications for the five positions may be picked up in the Union Directors Office and are due by noon, April 13.

Baker dismayed as NU whips 'Cats

K-State Baseball Coach Dave Baker continued to shake his head in dismay Monday over the lack of clutch hitting by his Wildcat team.

In the first game of a doubleheader, which the 'Cats lost 2-0 to the Nebraska Cornhuskers at Frank Myers Field, K-State only managed two hits, both coming off the bat of junior Mike Akins.

Sports

The second game started off quiet, with both pitchers throwing no hitters until K-State's Mike Baker singled with one out in the bottom of the fourth inning. The action picked up when Husker pitcher Tim Pettit's attempted pick-off was missed by the first baseman and Baker safely advanced to second.

K-State catcher Don Hess, who batted next, moved Baker to third with a base hit. K-State put its first score of the doubleheader on the board when Baker crossed the plate after Tyrone Hudson knocked a single into center field.

K-State then loaded the bases as Nebraska's second baseman collected an error on designated hitter Bob Dubek's shallow hit to right field.

HESS WAS out at third on a fielder's choice after a base hit by Rob Holder.

Pettit put an end to the 'Cats hope of capitalizing on the full bases as he struck out Cal Alexander.

Nebraka's Pete Oakley ended K-State pitcher Mike Wright's no-hitter in the top of the fifth with a hit to left center field.

The 'Cats continued to remain on top, 1-0, until Nebraska came back in the sixth inning with a string of four hits, putting the Huskers ahead 3-1. Coach Baker relieved Wright in the fifth, replacing him with senior Mike Laughlin.

Laughlin's efforts held Nebraska to three runs, but the 'Cats, who finished the game with seven hits to NU's five, never crossed the plate again.

"We just didn't score and we didn't hit the baseball and that's all there is to it. We played good defense, though," Baker said after the game.

The Wildcats continue conference play with a doubleheader Saturday at Iowa State, followed by a two-game outing with Missouri in Columbia Monday. The 'Cats won't see any home action until they meet Colorado April 27.

Freshmen-dominated golf team takes sixth

K-State's young women's golf team went through more growing pains over the weekend as it finished sixth of seven teams in the Missouri-Stephens Invitational in Columbia.

"We did a lot better than last week," Coach Paul Anderson said. "They're all freshmen, so I think they'll get better."

At Columbia, Terrie Spangler shot 86-86, Nancy Hagen had 95-84, Ellen McBride had 90-94, Julie Navrat shot 96-98 and Kyla Chambers shot 108-112.

K-State's next action will be in the Big 8 meet at Stillwater, Okla. where the team will compete with tough conference competition including Missouri, the winner of Saturday's meet.

Let yapping dogs lie

After painting a depressing picture Friday of the K-State basketball picture in the light of possible signings by Missouri, KU and Oklahoma, I'll try to show K-Staters that all is not lost with an encouraging letter from Eddie Gwin, a K-State alumnus from Leoti.

Some excerpts:

Extra points

DEAR SIR:

Enclosed is a copy of a letter written to Basketball Weekly in response to an article entitled, "Kicking the Yapping Dogs," about Ted Owens and the University of Kansas (March 15, 1979 i9 issue, p. 2).

Mr. Larry Donald, Managing Editor
Basketball Weekly
Dear Sir:

I felt an urge to write to you after reading an article you wrote entitled "Kicking the Yapping Dogs" about Ted Owens and the University of Kansas.

THERE WERE a couple of things that I didn't understand. You stated that Kansas has "dominated basketball in this league from Dr. James Naismith through Adolph Rupp through Wilt Chamberlain and on through the Darnell Valentine era."

I would like to point out numerous facts that would seem to be a contradiction to that statement, though it seems to be a very common misconception among writers.

Kansas State has won 10 Big 8 titles to Kansas' seven. Even going back as far as 1949 to the beginning of the Big 7 conference, K-State has won 14 Big 8 and Big 7 championships to Kansas' 12. Go back to 1944 into Big 6 competition and it stands 15-13, with KSU in front. It seems to me that in the modern era of basketball, the team that has been the dominant power in "this league" is Kansas State University.

Through 1978 there were only three teams that had more NCAA appearances that Kansas State (13), and Kansas was not one of them! (UCLA, 19; Kentucky, 24 and Notre Dame, 15).

YOU STATED "in the last 15 years Owens' teams have won 14 assorted Big 8 Championships (Holiday and regular season), run up a 283-130 record and appeared twice in the Final Four."

Well, hear this. In the last 22 years, since 1957, K-State has won 16 assorted championships (Holiday, regular season and post-season), run up a 411-187 (.687) record and appeared in the Final Four twice. Over the same 22-year span Kansas has 17 assorted championships, but their overall record doesn't compare. Their record is 380-209 (.645) over the same 22-year span. That is .042 percentage points worse that K-State!

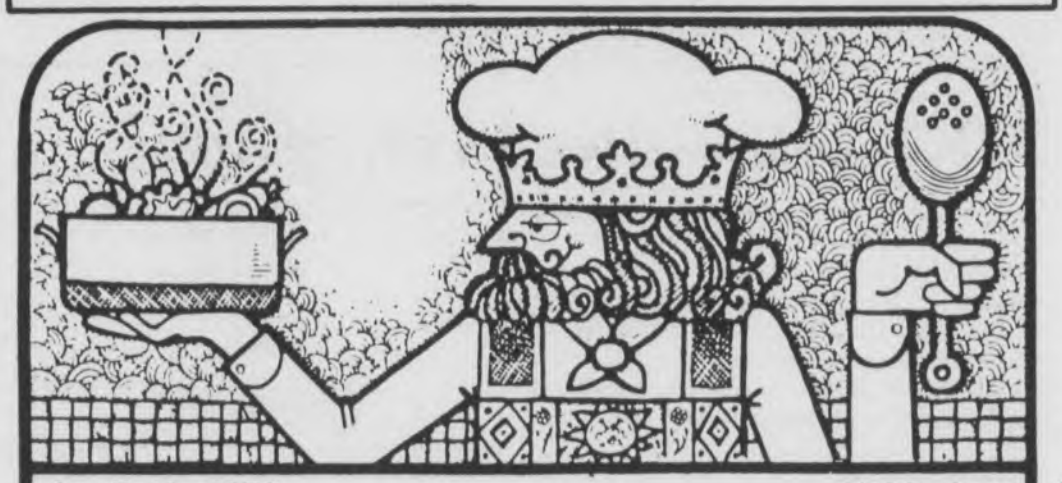
Now let's look at head-to-head competition between the two schools. That should clear the fog. In the last 10 years, K-State leads 14-11 in the series. In the last 12 years, the lead is 17-12, KSU. In the last 21 years it is 29-23, K-State. And going back 33 years, to 1946, K-State leads the series 43-39.

IN THE LAST 33 years, Kansas State has won 20 or more games 12 times to KU's nine. Believe it or not, Kansas State has also won 19 games more often (4-3).

KU dominated from 1900 to 1945 and World War II, but 33 years ago a new king arrived. But future basketball prospects will continue to read the fallacy being printed about Big 8 basketball king Kansas and never hear the truth about the 33-year king of the conference, Kansas State University!!

I guess that K-State will be destined to never getting the publicity, and recruiting supposedly "second-class" players, while winning more games and more conference titles than any other school in the conference, without the recognition of the nation.

But as long as we have Jack Hartman and five guys that can run up and down the basketball court for 40 minutes, Kansas State University fans will know who is king of the Big 8, and so will Kansas University fans. (Remember, we beat them two out of two again this year—one of them by 27 points, their worst defeat).



Isn't is time the nation learned the truth about Kansas State vs. Kansas in the modern era of basketball?

A disapponted reader and loyal Kansas State fan,

'Cats handle tough pitching to split softball twinbill

The K-State women's softball team split a doubleheader with Missouri Western Tuesday in Ci-Co Park, 0-2 and 4-3.

After a weekend tournament at Springfield, Mo. where the Wildcats had a 1-3 record, the women came back to Manhattan for their first home series.

In the first game, K-State could not cope with the pitching of Western's Debbie Maben, losing the game 2-0.

"Maben is a very seasoned player and our girls just had trouble with her," Coach Mary Phyl Dwight said.

But in the second game, K-State rallied in the seventh inning to win 4-3 after being down 3-1.

"This was a good win for us because in the last four games we have lost it in the seventh inning," Dwight said.

The 'Cats loaded the bases in the bottom of the seventh with no one out. Terry Mah batted in outfielder Eva Schmidt to bring the score to 3-2.

Western then sent in a new pitcher, but K-State's Kathy Leonard came away with a hit which sent Janelle Poppe across the plate to tie the game 3-3.

Western's coach then sent in Maben, but it was too late. K-State was ready to play ball.

With a bad pitch from Maben, K-State's Julie Laughery stole home to win the game for the 'Cats.

Dwight said she was happy with her team's performance but some improvement is needed in its hitting.

"If our hitting comes around you'll see a change in our (6-9) record," she said.

Rugby club seventh in Colorado tourney

The K-State Women's Rugby Football Club traveled to Fort Collins, Colo. Saturday and Sunday and came back wih a seventh place finish out of 16 teams in the Rocky Mountain Spring Classic.

In Saturday's competition, K-State beat the Scarlet Harlots from Denver, Colo., 4-0. Marci Lundhigh scored the K-State try, rugby's equivalent to a touchdown.

In the second game Saturday, K-State lost to Golden, Colo., 8-7. Amy Snider scored on a three-point penalty kick and Marla Jones scored the try.

On Sunday, Colorado State beat K-State 4-0, but in the second game, K-State crushed Colorado Springs 16-0. Jan Webster scored two tries and Cindy Walker scored one against Colorado Springs.

Snider kicked the extra points for K-State.

Brock announces retirement

ST. LOUIS (AP)—St. Louis Cardinals speedster Lou Brock, holder of the single-season and all-time major league stolen base records, will retire at the end of the current season, it was announced Monday.

Cardinals President August A. Busch Jr. told a news conference Brock's No. 20 uniform would be retired. Only three other Cardinals uniforms have been retired, those of Dizzie Dean, Stan Musial and Bob Gibson. Brock set the single-season stolen base record in 1974 with 118 bases, topping Maury Wills' previous high by 14. He broke Ty Cobb's all-time stolen base record of 892 in 1977 when Brock ended the season with 900 stolen bases.

The speedster also has 17-season career batting average of .292 and a World Series batting average of .391.

I've had to approach this decision to retire the same way I approach the game," he said. "It was a tough decision. It was not one made overnight.

"I wanted to retire at a time that I can still make a contribution to the team. It's a source of pride to me to have played during the championship years of the '60s, the challenging years of the early '70s and with this young club that is bouncing back now."

Chicago disc jockey works without seeing

CHICAGO (AP) — Disc jockey Eddie Williams spins tunes for crowds at a disco roller rink on the South Side without even watching the skaters.

Williams says some people think that a disc jockey's job is so easy that they can do it without looking. Williams does. He's been blind since age 6, when he had cataracts.

Williams, 22, handles the rows of electronic switches on the console before him at the campus radio station at Columbia College, where he is a senior. He confidently plucks out the 45 rpm records, flips the microphone switch and speaks into it with smooth, resonant tones.

Black parallels movies, politics

'Perceptions overwhelm reality'

By VINCE WHEELER
Collegian Reporter

In her early acting career, Shirley Temple Black let her loving audiences believe she was truly the prissy little girl with cutie-pie curls portrayed in "The Littlest Rebel" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

"The true reality was a kid in blue jeans and sneakers, with dirty hands and dirty face, usually climbing a tree," Black said, speaking at the 46th Landon Lecture Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

Black drew a parallel between the false perception of her film image and the false perception she said the American public has of current political and economic problems.

"Perception of events is becoming more valued than reality," she said.

She added that part of the danger lies in the lack of distinction between public relations and virtual lying.

"Sometimes the line gets fuzzy between public relations grease and flat-out manipulation of fact," the former ambassador to Ghana said. "Our perception of events often overwhelms reality. Some political careers continue to be based on public perception rather than harsh reality."

BLACK SAID Americans are being led to believe the government is holding down spending, reducing overseas arms sales and still holding the high cards of world-wide influence.

"The truth is, of course, precisely opposite," she said. "When perceptions of nuclear weapons, national ecconomy, arms sales and health are stressed more than realities, how can we produce rational judgments?

"Polls indicate about half of Americans think the energy crisis is phoney, and that with proper incentives we can satisfy American requirements from American resources," she said.

Black countered that half of the petroleum the U.S. now imports comes from Arab states and the proportion is growing constantly. Not many Arab nations currrently have good relations with the U.S. because of the recent peace treaty signed between Israel and Egypt.

Besides angering neighboring Arab states, Black said, the treaty has committed the U.S. to the Middle East for an indefinite period and made America an arms dealer to both Israel and Egypt.

"Taxpayers must pay all the bills, equal to about 30 percent of our total national deficit," Black said, referring to the eventual price of the treaty. "But most important, it (the treaty) provides a spectacular chance for the Soviet Union to extend its own influence—and it is."

NOT ONLY is the U.S. opening the door to more communist influence in the Middle East and Africa, Black said, but it is confusing its allies as well.

"How America is perceived by other states of importance is vital," she said.

U.S. relations with Saudi Arabia, once good, have now become a haze of confusion, Black said. She quoted a Saudi government spokesman as saying: "It (the U.S.) is pushing a Middle East peace agreement that is bound to fail. When this happens it will only add to the unrest in this region and further damage America's real interests."

Black also spoke of the growing problems of the developing nations of Africa, including Ghana, where she spent three years as a U.S. ambassador.

"There have been many problems where the United States has put its nose in areas of foreign affairs where it doesn't belong," she said at a press conference before the lecture. "I would prefer to see us assist countries through economic assistance, health, technology and agricultural development, but not take a partisan position on the internal affairs of developing African nations."

Black has stated that she wishes to obtain another post such as the one she had in Ghana, if the next administration offers it.

FOR THIS reason, Black is concerned with the results of the 1980 presidential race

Finance Committee seeks cuts; campus groups under budget ax

By SGA STAFF

How do student-funded groups spell relief? M-O-N-E-Y.

Finance Committee has recommended Student Senate relieve 24 student groups' budget requests of $30,000—cutting completely the budgets of four groups.

The committee is recommending Student Senate not fund Drug Education Center, Touchstone, Debate Squad and Arnold Air Society. Drug Ed received $3,872.72 this year and requested $4,896 for next year. Debate Squad and Arnold Air Society were not funded by senate this year.

The committee recommended merging FONE and Drug Ed by increasing FONE'S budget to include a drug crisis coordinator's position.

"They're (Finance Committee) making this recommendation blind," FONE Director Jim Bartlett said. "They made some blanket assumptions about what FONE and Drug Ed do being similar and they're not."

Bartlett said he believes the committee should have talked to both groups about the feasibility of a merger before making the recommendation.

ALTHOUGH HE opposes the proposal, Bartlett said "if it had to, I guess it could work" because K-State needs a drug service.

Bartlett and Drug Ed Director Dave Neuhaus said FONE and Drug Ed serve different functions, with Drug Ed focusing on education and FONE on crisis intervention.

"Finance Committee has decided it doesn't want to take responsibility for dealing with Kansas State University's drug problems," Neuhaus said.

With $740,165 requested and only $717,996 to allocate, every budget request was cut except those of the Off-Campus Student Association (OCSA), Associated Students of Kansas (ASK) and FONE.

ASK would get almost $1,400 more next year if senate follows Finance Committee's recommendation to allocate 25 cents per full-time equivalency (FTE) instead of per full-time student.

Full-time equivalency is the total number of credit hours enrolled in, divided by 15 hours for full-time students, 12 for veterinary medicine students and nine hours for graduate students. The sum of these is the FTE.

OCSA, a newly-formed group, will receive $200 for advertisinng and printing, if senate follows the committee's recommendation.

The committee is recommending Black Student Union's (BSU) present budget be cut in half next year. The cuts would be made in career planning and state car expense.

BSU President Isaac Turner said he doesn't think the committee's recommendation is justified. BSU was allocated $1,500 in March to sponsor the 1980 Big 8 Black Student government conference, and some of the money requested for a state car would be used to attend a vital meeting prior to the conference where K-State representatives would report about plans for the conference, Turner said.

Students for Handicapped Concerns' budget was recommended to be cut by more than $8,000. The committee decided to support funding a state car to shuttle handicapped students to and from campus during the winter. Committee members, however, said they believe the driver's salary and state car usage during the rest of the year are University responsibilities.

time student per semester. Rec Services presently receives $2.50 per full-time student each semester, but no money for part-time students. Finance Committee is recommending a 75-cent part-time student allocation along with the $2.50 full-time student allocation.

Budgets for MEChA and the International Coordinating Council (ICC) would be cut considerably with the committee's recommendations. ICC's $780 request for food was wiped out by the committee and requests for office supplies, printing, advertising and subscriptions were cut by more than half.

MEChA's request for $2,945 was reduced to an $890 recommendation. Major cuts are for honorarium (sponsoring speakers) and career planning.

Committee members voted to recommend $275, consistently, for the career planning item in each group's budget request.

Rather than allocating honorarium money directly to each group, Finance Committee is recommending the establishment of a separate honorarium account by senate.

Directors of social services requested their salaries be increased from $250 per month to $300 per month. They are paid for 11 months each year.

FINANCE COMMITTEE is recommending monthly salaries of $275, but for 10 months instead of 11 leaving yearly salaries unchanged. FONE and Pregnancy Counseling director's would remain on an 11-month basis, according to the recommendations.

The committee is recommending that the salary of their graduate assistant in the Infant & Child Care Center be funded at the same level as social service directors—$275 per month—but on a nine-month basis.

Senate will begin deciding tentative allocations for the 24 groups at 6 p.m. Thursday in the K-State Union Big 8 Room.

and plans to campaign for the Republican party in the same way she did in 1968.

"I plan to work for the Republican party prior to the selection of the nominees and then work for the nominees whoever they may be," she said.

Black suggested that future administrations consult members of both political parties when making foreign policy decisions.

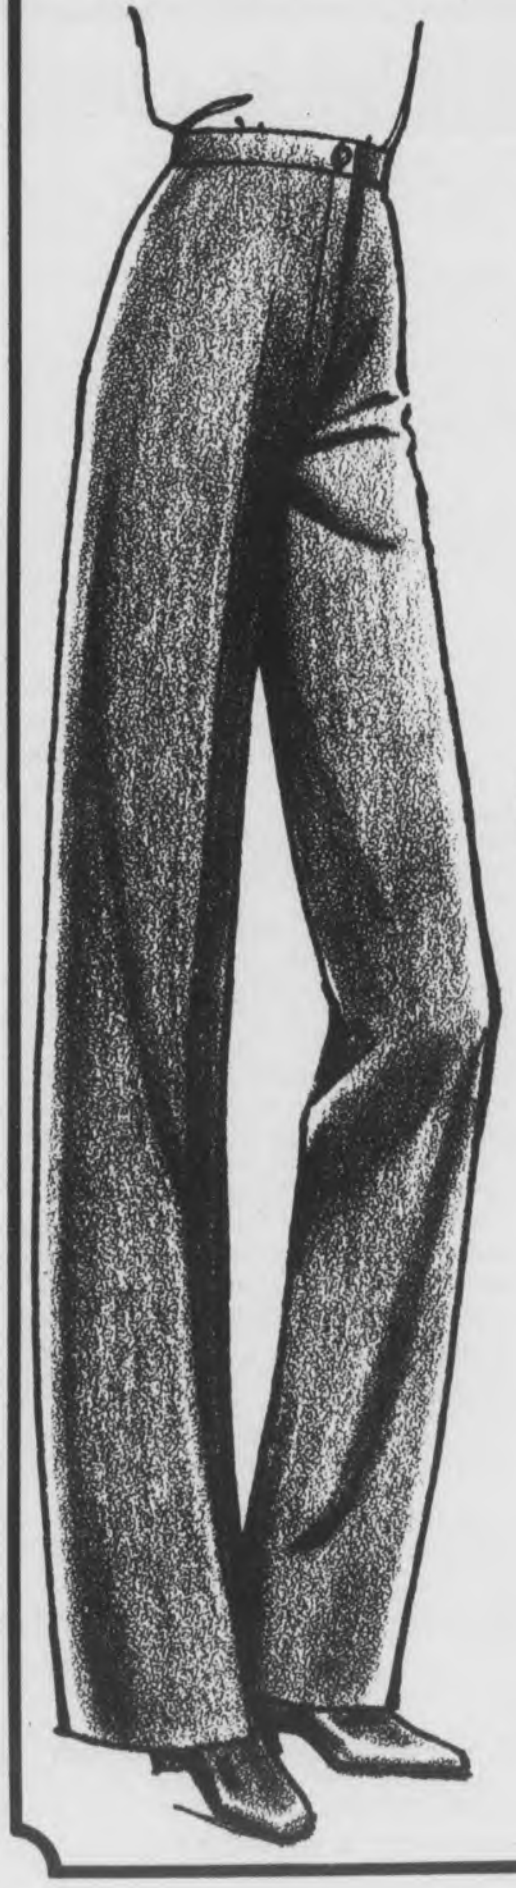
BLACK SAID a bi-partisanship would encourage greater cooperation between the executive and legislative branches by taking away the monopoly the executive branch has on foreign affairs.

Such an arrangement, she said, could have avoided the Carter decision to "normalize" relations with China.

"I'm pleased that we have recognized China...you can't just ignore 900 million people."

But, she said, the way Carter did it was "too sudden."

In a question and answer period following the lecture, Black was asked if she believed international relations between the U.S. and Africa were strengthened by the recent African visit of California Gov. Jerry Brown and singer Linda Ronstadt.



"Africa needs all the tourism it can get," she replied.

Tornadoes kill 35 in Texas...

At least 35 people were killed and more than 850 injured Tuesday when tornadoes rampaged across an area of Texas and Oklahoma known as "Tornado Alley."

Witnesses counted at least 20 dead and about 700 injured in Wichita Falls, Texas, where two busy shopping centers were leveled.

An undetermined number of people were trapped in the rubble of the shopping centers, and others were trapped in demolished buildings elsewhere in the city, authorities said.

Twenty cars were smashed under a bridge and into an abutment. Witnesses said the roofs of some vehicles were sheared off and the wreckage was bloodied.

A safe in a National Guard armory exploded, exposing shattered M-16 rifles and other weapons. Mobile homes were blown across a highway.

Tornadoes also struck Vernon and Lockett, Texas, and Lawton, Okla. as they swept northwest over rolling, barren country of sage brush and mesquite trees.

Officials in Lawton reported at least four confirmed deaths, including a man electrocuted when a 220-volt power line came down in a pool of water. Seven were confirmed dead in Vernon.

...Kansas twister injures 2

HAYS—A tornado skirted the southeast edge of Hays last night, injuring two persons and damaging several mobile homes and buildings, authorities reported.

A man and a woman were slightly injured when their mobile home in the Countryside Estates Trailer Court was overturned, said Ellis County Undersheriff Bruce Hertel.

Both persons told sheriff's deputies they heard a noise that sounded like hail, then a loud roar before the trailer was knocked over about 7:45 p.m.

Two other mobile homes were damaged when one flipped on its side and struck the other, and about 20 others were moved off their foundations or lost part of their roofs, Hertel said.

Authorities said they would not be able to determine the extent of damage until this morning, but at least one warehouse roof was also lifted off and power to southeast Hays was temporarily knocked out.

Agreement to start truckers rolling

WASHINGTON—Bargainers for the striking Teamsters union and idle trucking companies reached tentative agreement last night on a new contract to immediately end a 10-day nationwide work stoppage, a federal mediator said.

Chief federal mediator Wayne Horvitz announced the settlement after more than 12 hours of intense negotiations Tuesday, saying: "The strike and defensive shutdown (by the industry) are being terminated."

Horvitz said procedures for returning about 235,000 Teamsters to work would be implemented within 24 hours, ending the longest trucking shutdown in the nation's history.

Cosmonaut goes up for third time

MOSCOW—The Soviet Union launched a Bulgarian into space Tuesday as half of a two-man cosmonaut team, the fourth such mission in its "Intercosmos" program of international space exploration, Moscow Radio reported.

The Soyuz 33 mission appeared to represent another "first" as well. Its commander, Nikolai Rukavishnikov, 46, is believed to be the first three-time Soviet space traveler, having flown into orbit previously aboard Soyuz 10 in 1971 and Soyuz 16 in 1974.

Three U.S. astronauts have made three trips into space—John Young, Jim Lovell and Tom Stafford.

The 38-year-old Bulgarian, Georgi Ivanov, and Rukavishnikov will link up with two Soviet cosmonauts already in space—flight commander Vladimir Lyakhov and flight engineer Valery Ryumin aboard the orbiting Salyut 6 space station.

U.G.B.
Union Governing Board

UGB, is a group of ten students, three faculty members, and one alum, who participates directly in the management and operation of the K-State Union. The board works with the staff to see that the Union is the kind of operation K-State should have.

If you are the kind of person who would enjoy the chance to make the Union a better place and have a few hours to devote to a worthwhile interest, come in and fill out an application. We can use your help.

Applications for the five positions may be picked up in the Union Directors Office and are due by noon, April 13.

Stew pot simmering

America, the great melting pot, doesn't melt anymore.

The term described the U.S.A. when arriving immigrants adopted the language and customs and became more "American" than the early Americans (usually immigrants themselves).

That isn't true anymore.

In the '60s, blacks fighting for equality, feminists demanding recognition as people, nuclear proponents and opponents voicing their views, and protesting students slowed the assimilation process.

The '70s added Watergate—leading to a distrust of government, big business scandals, protesting farmers and a backlash to the women's and civil rights movements.

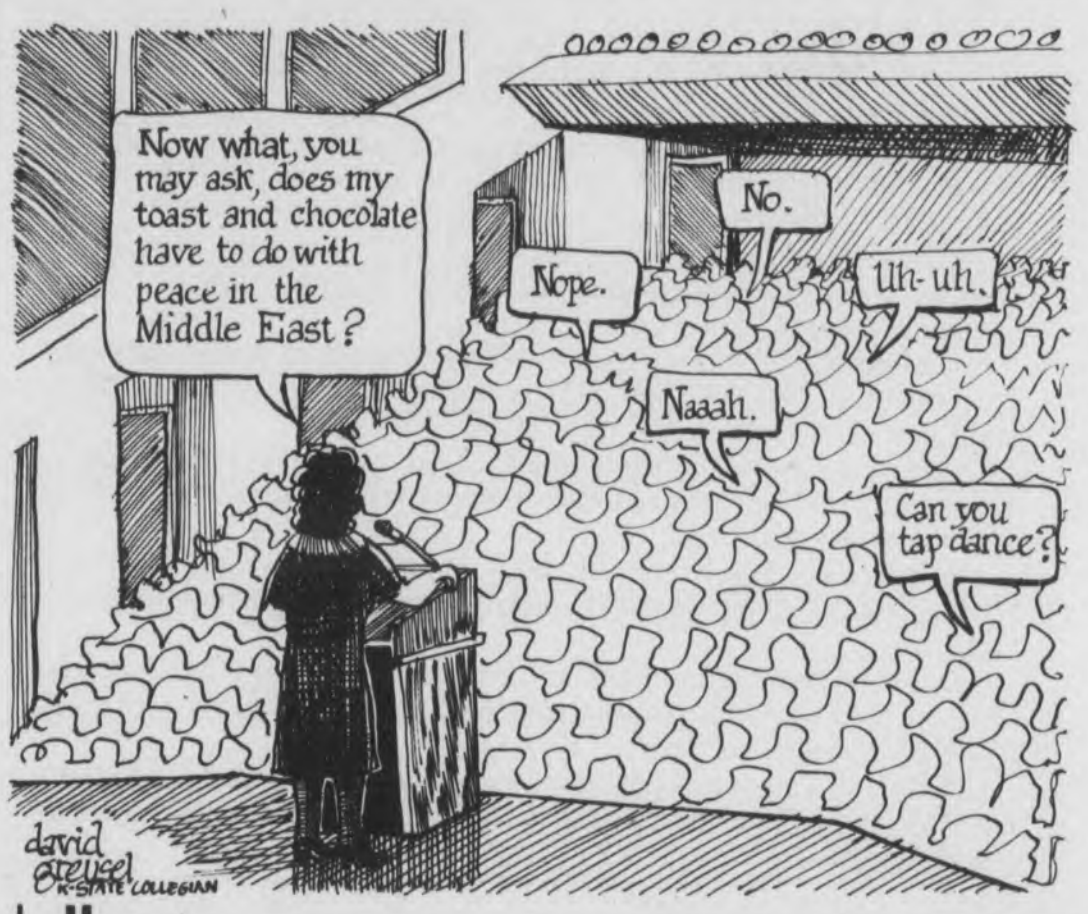
Although television and increased travel have superficially united the country, they have also pointed out how large and powerful special interest groups can be when people unite across the nation.

Today almost every American belongs in a special interest group, from a powerful religious organization to proponents for gun control. Many of these groups are proud of their differences and emphasize them.

U.S.A. resembles beef stew more than a melting pot today, where all the ingredients keep their own forms and flavors.

It's great in a way. It means the concept of minority rights has finally become more than rhetoric. It provides for more variation and interest.

But the problems start when all the groups strive for dominance.



Inflation fighters want to keep prices down, but businessmen and farmers have to make a living. Women and minorities deserve equality, but is it fair to get them at the expense of others?

Crime is a problem, but tighter government measures enroach on personal privacy. And on, and on.

We forget we are still one nation, and if we wish to remain one nation, compromises are neccessary.

Just as too many strong flavors spoil a stew, too many strong interest groups can tear the country apart.

Carlin follows conscience

Editor,

On behalf of members of the Manhattan Mennonite Fellowship and myself, I would like to congratulate Governor Carlin on his decision to veto the death penalty bill. I believe many of us in the state respect his decision to disclose the fact that he was motivated by conscience. Can the government which responds to a killing lay claim to any greater morality than the killer?

Misconceptions cloud reality

I heard my mother tell my father one time the Dramamine I was taking to keep me from being car-sick actually was made up of aspirin and sugar and that my only "affliction" was in my head.

I was extremely upset with my parents, not only for not believing that I knew when I was sick, but also for deluding me—in fact, lying to me—about the medicine they were giving me.

According to Shirley Temple Black, many Americans are suffering from a similar delusion. The only problem is they're not mad about it because they haven't overheard the conversation in which their "parents" discuss the "reality."

The government, Black said, is capitalizing on our naivete by feeding us greased public relation information leading us to believe the total opposite of the "reality."

Of course, this is nothing new. Isn't it the purpose of a public relations staff to give the people the information in a way literally forcing them to perceive it a certain way?

FOR INSTANCE, polls indicate about half of Americans think the energy crisis is a put-on, and that with proper incentives we can get everything we need from our own soil.

That is the perception.

The reality, according to Black, is we now import 50 percent of our petroleum.

The same "perceptions" exist for a variety of topics deemed important by government officials. The normalization of relations with China and subsequent abandonment of Taiwan stand as one of the Carter administration's biggest whitewashes.

The signing of the Middle East triple-treaty totally abandons Carter's repeated policy of forming a comprehensive arrangement involving ALL Arab sates—another prime example of "perceptions" we were given. As Jessica Savitch pointed out in her Convocation speech March 28, we all woke up the morning after the Begin-Sadat Show to find OPEC had raised oil prices and could do so again at will. All this is in obvious retaliation to the treaty.

The misconceived perceptions, while perpetrated by the government at all levels, are not necessarily inherent in the communication process.

It can be, and should be, the duty of all people who give a damn about the medicine they're taking, to read the label and find out what it's really going to do to them.

Movie ban courageous move

Editor,

I want to congratulate and thank the Union Governing Board for their courageous decision to stop showing X-rated movies in the Union. Such movies as have recently been shown are not good for a university atmosphere.

I realize students who desire pornography will go elsewhere to get it but it should not be encouraged by the University. I feel the UGB has acted in the best interest of the majority of the students who pay for and support the Union.

I hope the American Civil Liberties Union and other concerned parties will see the wisdom in letting the decision of the UGB alone.

Bible should be moral guide

Editor,

As I review the editorial pages over the last two weeks, I see there is a basic problem in the discussion of morality. The problem lies in the fact that to most people morality is relative. For instance, a married couple cheating on their income tax may be offended by a couple living together out of matrimony. That couple may be offended by homosexuality. Homosexuals may be offended by child molesters. And so on.

It seems while each of these examples obviously thinks their lifestyle is acceptable, other people don't. This is where the problem comes in.

Who is to say what is right and wrong? It obviously can't be the individual because if it were murderers and child molesters could decide for themselves if their actions are right or wrong. That would result in anarchy.

So it must in part be the responsibility of the government. But government, when given too much power, can produce the likes of Adolph Hitler and Idi Amin.

So what we need is some sort of absolute by which we can judge our actions. That absolute has to be something men of all races and cultures can relate to. It has to have a powerful authority behind it so that its statutes can be enforced and judgments of wrong actions can take place.

I submit the only absolute authority that fits all these criteria is God. God is revealed to us through His word—which is contained in the Bible. Now I am not suggesting censorship, or the forcing of biblical morality on people through secular laws. Because God has given a free will to every human being, and though He will administer judgment in the afterlife, He never forces anyone to obey Him.

My point then is this—some people reject God's word as an absolute authority without ever seeing for themselves what it actually has to say. If they would they would see God has a proper place for sex and drugs, and that these, and many other "controversial areas," are morally proper in the correct circumstances.

God is a God of love and kindness as well as a God of justice and righteousness. All his commands are for our own good.

So if you wish to know what is right and wrong, I suggest you read the Bible for yourself and see what it really teaches. You may be pleasantly surprised at the love and forgiveness you find there.

Film review ignorant

Editor,

For the past two weeks, we have made it a practice to attend the Kaleidoscope films in the Union. Neither "Welcome to L.A." nor "That Obscure Object of Desire" are typical of Manhattan's commercial theater fare. Films like these are a most needed alternative to the typical and they deserve more than typical treatment.

Readers rarely comment on the quality of film reviews appearing in the Collegian. Granted, reviewing is no easy assignment; opinion can always be disputed. But exactly for this reason, a reviewer must provide certain essential facts for his audience.

As a case in point, Kelly Wilkerson's review of "That Obscure Object of Desire" neglects to mention names of the director or of cast members. In exhaustive detail Wilkerson describes his failure to follow the movie's plot. Wilkerson was also unmoved by the plentiful and subtle humor. The film is dismissed with the comment that it is "...just too complicated for the viewer to understand."

We do not wish to speculate on the length of Wilkerson's attention span, nor on his state of health, but we certainly had no "...desire to get sick,...walk out, (or) read a Flash Gordon comic book" in order to understand the movie. The review not only smacks of ignorance but assumes the viewer to be equally dense.

We would like to see some honest, knowledgeable assessments of the films coming our way. We find it hard to understand how quality films are too often panned by Collegian reviewers.

Tanzania intensifies pressure

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP)—Tanzanian troops marched into the Ugandan capital of Kampala Tuesday, following a jet fighter attack and fierce rocket and artillery barrages that appeared to signal imminent victory in the war against President Idi Amin, residents of the city reported.

There was no word on the whereabouts of the Ugandan dictator, who started the war six months ago by occupying a 710-square-mile area of Tanzania. Uganda radio broadcast opera from its transmitters in the center of the city. Telephone calls to the station went unanswered.

Residents reached by telephone said the Tanzanian troops entered the city from several directions. They said the Tanzanians were greeted by dancing in the streets at the outskirts of Kampala. There were reports of looting after the soldiers passed.

Earlier, residents in the capital said troops loyal to Amin were still firing artillery at the invaders from the town's highest hill.

The Tanzanian attack, including strikes by MiG-21 jets, came after a night of shelling by forces located south and southwest of the city. The Tanzanians have been advancing since defeating some of Amin's troops in a weekend battle near Entebbe, 21 miles south of Kampala.

Information was sketchy because the few residents who remained in Kampala stayed indoors as shells and rockets whistled overhead. One said "not even a dog" was moving in the center of the city.

The attack came after a night of shelling by Tanzanian forces located south and southwest of the city. The Tanzanians have been advancing since defeating some of Amin's last remaining troops in a weekend battle in the area of Entebbe, 21 miles south of the capital.

One column of invaders was greeted happily by Ugandans as it moved in from the north. There was another column advancing from the southwest, exiles said.

Residents of Nakasero Hill, the most central and strategic of the seven hills on which Kampala sits, said the Tanzanian shelling ended at 2 p.m. But 2½ hours later, informants said, a Ugandan battery opened up at the invaders from a fort near the headquarters of the Uganda state broadcasting station.

HOUSE-BOUND residents were unable to give details of casualties and damage.

An artillery shell reportedly smashed into a Roman Catholic convent and mission at Rugaba in the southern part of the city. It shattered all the windows, but nuns and pupils were unhurt.

Another shell aimed at a Ugandan ammunition depot fell in the area of Makerere University. Rockets fired by Tanzanian MiG-21 jets also struck a housing complex near Mulago hospital, killing three doctors.

Amin's whereabouts were unknown, but he was presumed to be still at his new command post, east of Kampala on the road to Jinja, 50 miles to the south.

UGANDA RADIO'S internal broadcasts were weak and contained only music. The foreign services, monitored in Nairobi, were at full strength. Included in a selection of gospel songs during the transmission was the selection, "We're all going to go to heaven."

PLO market bombing sparks Israeli attack

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP)—Israeli jets flying their first mission of war since peace was made with Egypt blasted Palestinian positions in Lebanon Tuesday in retaliation for a bloody terrorist bombing in a Tel Aviv market.

The explosion in the open-air Carmel market, crowded with pre-Passover shoppers, killed one Israeli man and wounded 33 other persons, eight of them seriously, authorities reported.

A Palestine Liberation Organization spokesman in Beirut reported "dozens" of casualties in the air raids. A radical Palestinian group said at least three persons were killed.

THE ISRAELIS said the planes hit Damour, a guerrilla-held town just six miles south of Beirut, and Ras el-Ain, a guerrilla base near the southern port of Tyre. The PLO said the targets were Damour, and the Rashadiyeh refugee camp and hamlet of Maalieh, both outside Tyre.

The raids were "an obvious reprisal for our heroic operation in the Carmel market," a PLO spokesman said in Beirut.

The Israeli military announcement of the air operation noted that so far this year 11 bombs planted by terrorists have killed seven Israelis and injured 169 other persons.

New problems arose, meanwhile, in the still-unfolding peace between Egypt and Israel. The Egyptians ruled out a speedy opening of borders, and two Israeli Cabinet ministers postponed trips to Cairo in apparent anger over what Israel considered to be a provocative Egyptian statement.

THE ONE-POUND terrorist bomb exploded at about noon at a fishmonger's stall in the fiveblock square Tel Aviv market, an area just off Allenby Street with many small stalls.

'Nickels for Nichols' drive sets sights on $2,500 goal

If you skip your candy bar today, you can help save Nichols Gymnasium.

The cost of a candy bar could help save Nichols Gymnasium if each student could donate that amount.

The "Nickels for Nichols" campaign is being started in an effort to match the state's allocation of $2,500 to pay for the feasibility study of Nichols Gymnasium, according to Greg Musil, student body president.

"The alumni already have a restoration fund of $733.16 started for Nichols, but it will be up to the Executive Committee of Foundation to decide whether or not we will be able to use this money for the feasibility study or not," Musil said.

While Musil is asking the alumni for help, the students also will be able to donate.

Boxes have been set up in the dean's lobby of the Vet Med Complex and in the Student Governing Services office, Musil said. The money then will be turned in to the foundation every evening for daily counts.

Musil said he hopes the students will donate to the fund since the state has made the first move of allocating the $2,500 for the study.

"I think the students here are K-State will help out now. We have the attention of the people and I am going to talk to the young alumni for their support of our program," he said.

Currently $6.85 has been donated for the feasibility study, but Musil said he expects the donations to increase now that the boxes have been set out.

Although the money could be taken from the Student Governing Association (SGA) funds, he added, "we would rather raise the money ourselves from the students and others who are concerned."

"We have $10,000 in our funds at SGA, but we would like to use that later for further study of Nichols Gymnasium after we get the initial $2,500."

Gallery show inspired by wife's pregnancy

His wife's second pregnancy inspired Yoshi Ikeda to use human form as a basis of his showing in the Ambry Art Gallery.

Ikeda, assistant professor of art, will display his pieces concerning birth n West Stadium until April 13 and then in Wichita at "The Sign of the Acorn."

"Clay Fantasy Form"' is the title of his program.

"It is a different way to approach clay—you cannot use it, but just look at it," Ikeda said.

Fantasy, he explains, is something youu dream on, and his form is "birth."

"From the inside to coming out—the breaking point," Ikeda said.

"By stretching with inside ribbing, I am able to create off center pots with textures and character of a full organic pregnant form with curves, bulges and vallies, representing in form my inner thoughts on pregnancy and birth," he said.

Half of Ikeda's pieces are wheel thrown, and half are hand built.

Ikeda creates balanced forms within qualities of shape, size, color, texture and movement.

"My forms are visual expressions and appeal predominantly to the eye," he said.

"I have trained and acquired my original or basic skill in Japanese techiques," he said.

Rising costs for offshore drilling may offset fuel production gains

Although America is facing an energy shortage and petroleum prices are soaring, offshore drilling for oil and gas isn't always economical so Amoco Production Company of Denver isn't looking for more offshore leases.

"Our company has the policy of looking for oil and gas onshore in the lower 4 states," said Richard Steinmetz, geological associate with Amoco.

Steinmetz spoke Monday night at a meeting sponsored by the department of geology and the American Association of Petroleum Geologists.

Steinmetz said the cost of drilling offshore is so great that, even if there is oil, it may not produce enough to be economically feasible.

For example, it takes an investment of $10,000 per barrel of daily oil production to drill a well on the North Sea for onshore production in Pennsylvania, only a $300 to 400 investment is needed. An offshore well must have a high daily production to pay the difference, he said.

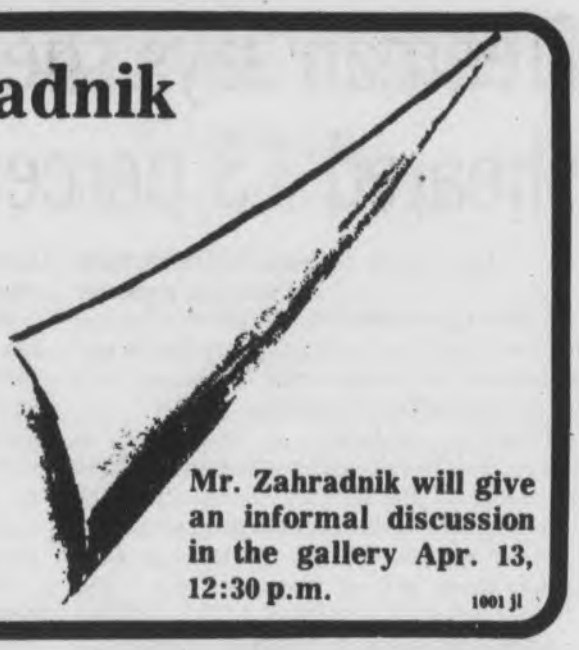
Amoco has wells off the Gulf Coast, which Steinmetz said will remain an active oil field. His company never bid on drilling rights off the East Coast because they thought the risk of dry wells was to great, he said.

"We're very doubtful about the feasibility of offshore drilling off the East Coast of the United States," he said.

The West Coast might have oil, but the political climate, including court injunctions against drilling off the Santa Barbara coast, has hampered the oil companies, Steinmetz said.

The Bering Sea, off the coast of Alaska, is an intriging area, he said. It is a large area of relatively shallow water, but there are technological problems to overcome before drilling can take place.

"I think that's one of the strengths we (the petroleum industry) have several large companies with large finances but competing ideas," he said.



The federal government has provided for the smaller oil companies by reserving certain blocks of offshore waters for bidding by smaller companies, Steinmetz said.

Freeman says sheepskin value sheared 13 percent in 10 years

By CHRIS MCKEE
Collegian Reporter

A shift in the needs of the job market has lead to a surplus of education graduates and a demand for engineering graduates, according to Richard Freeman.

Freeman, professor of economics at Harvard University, spoke Tuesday to about 45 people in the K-State Union about the changing job market for college graduates.

Freeman said the job market has gone from "boom to bust" from the '60s to the '70s.

"The '60s were a booming period for college graduates. People who were lucky enough to graduate at that time did very well in the job market. Today that does not exist," Freeman said.

"If the economic system changes you see significant changes in the salaries of college people," he said.

FREEMAN SAID in the '60s college graduates had more rapid salary increases than high school graduates and other workers.

"Between 1968 and 1973, the earnings of college graduates, relative to high school graduates, declined significantly," he said.

Freeman cited a 13 percent decrease in earnings for college graduates between the ages of 25 and 29 from 1968 to 1973.

"The college graduate no longer has the advantage that he had over the high school graduate," he said.

"An increasing number of college graduates are windng up in types of jobs that they don't traditionally play for—blue collar jobs and lower-level white collar jobs," Freeman said.

"Where this is extemely striking is in the education area," he said.

"In 1969 about three-fourths of the people who graduated in education got jobs as teachers. In 1975 it was less than 50 percent, which is a tremendous decline."

Freeman said a decline in birth rates has decreased the need for teachers.

FREEMAN SAID a University of Michigan survey concerning job satisfaction said "the biggest decline in reported job satisfaction has been with college graduates."

"It used to be a college graduate was much more satisfed with his job than the high school graduate. You just can't say that any more," he said.

He said a change in supply and demand has made a shift in the job market and the fields people choose to pursue. People are shifting to business, "money fields," and away from liberal arts fields.

"Engineering enrollments are zooming up. The biggest increase in the history of the country in first-year enrollments is in engineering," he said.

Freeman said it is important for high school students and counselors to foresee a trend developing in certain fields and direct their energies to that goal in hopes there will be a need for their services when they graduate.

Pre-enrollment lags; deadline is Friday

Students who fail to pre-enroll by 4:15 Friday in the basement of Farrell Library will lose their seniority rights to classes for next fall.

Students with the greatest number of credit hours completed are given priority when classes are assigned, Jerry Dallam, assistant director of records, said.

Pre-enrollment figures are down 400 from the level they were at last year at this time.

"To make early enrollment worthwhile, we need a large number of students to pre-enroll so that the counts given to the deans and department heads are accurate," Dallam said. Deans and department heads will receive a listing of their courses with how many students requested each of their courses on Monday, he said.

Students who have pre-enrolled by Friday will be able to pick up a copy of their fall assignment starting April 30 and drop-add for these students will be May 7 to 11 in the basement of the library, he said.

Federal investigator joins railroad probe

COLUMBUS (AP)—A federal investigator has joined railroad officials in probing Tuesday's collision of two freight trains that killed a conductor and forced the evacuation of some 500 residents from this southeast Kansas town.

Residents fled their homes, 100 occupants of a nursing home were moved and 600 students from two schools were shuttled to a third one as a two-mile area was cleared when fire threatened to touch off a tank car filled with ammonium nitrate.

The residents began returning three hours later after the volatile tank car was towed away from the fire by a bulldozer and tractors.

An investigator for the National Transportation Safety Board, Clarence Wilson, went to the scene shortly after the crash.

AN OFFICIAL of the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway said his crew was apparently at fault when a Missouri-Kansas-Texas freight crashed into the rear of a Frisco freight just after dawn at the northwest edge of Columbus.

Frisco spokesman J.C. Cowles said some crewman should have been at least 1½ miles back of the Frisco train, which was stopped to switch cars, to warn oncoming trains with flares or flags.

The MKT train rounded a gradual curve and slammed into the rear of the Frisco freight, killing conductor H.L. Hines, 61, of Monett, Mo., who was alone in the Frisco caboose.

The MKT engine caught fire, as did two tanker cars loaded with diesel fuel. Two men on the MKT train, brakeman Charles Smith, 32, of Mound Valley, Kan., and engineer Ronald LeJeune, 36, Parsons, Kan., were not seriously injured.

AUTHORITIES ordered the evacuation of all persons within a two-mile radius when the fire threatened a car of powdered ammonium nitrate. There was concern the fertilizer would catch fire and explode or produce toxic fumes.

Grade and high school students were on buses on their way to two schools in the danger area, and were diverted to a third school building until mid-morning.

Some 100 residents of the Medical Lodge Nursing Home were evacuated, with 25 bedridden patients transferred by ambulance to the Columbus Community Building and Presbyterian church, and 75 bused to a grade school gymnasium in nearby Weir.

Mrs. Wilma Vanhouten, the home's administrator who lives a short distance from the wreck scene, said flames were shooting 60 feet into the air following the crash. She waited several hours after the all-clear was given to return patients to the home, fearful that those with respiratory problems would be affected by the black smoke that continued to drift from the wreckage.

Fire Chief Haskell Carter described the wreckage of the engine as "scrambled up...you wouldn't recognize it."

'Cats rally to capture softball doubleheader

Squeaking out a pair of come-from-behind wins, the K-State women's softball team defeated Bethany Tuesday and equaled last year's total win record.

The 'Cats now stand 9-10 in season play.

Hitting into a stiff wind, Bethany opened the game with three runs. By the end of the second inning, however, K-State had battled back to a 4-3 advantage.

The bats then fell almost dead silent until K-State's Leslie McGinnis hit a single after her short right field grounder took a bad hop.

Not ready to let the game go, Bethany rallied with two hits and the tying run in the top of the seventh.

McGinnis opened the K-State half of the last inning with another base hit before being replaced by designated runner Julie Laughery.

Bethany's pitcher then loaded the bases with two walks. On a hit by the next batter Eva Schmidt, Laughery beat the throw to home plate for a 5-4 win.

K-STATE looked as if it lost all its punch as it trailed 6-0 through out the first four innings of the nightcap, until Lisa Packard defied the wind and smashed a home run in the bottom of the fifth.

The 'Cats then decided it was time to rally and pitcher Margo Jones opened the sixth with a base hit. Again Bethany allowed K-State to load the bases, walking Schmidt and Nancy Nibarger. Jones crossed home plate on the third walk, narrowing the score to 6-4.

Peggy Deseure then swept the bases with a standup triple to pull the 'Cats to within one run. Terry Mah followed with a double, allowing Deseure to tie the game. Freshman Kathy Leonard finally finished off Bethany by knocking in the winning run for a 7-6 victory.

Doubles lead to 6-3 K-State victory

The K-State men's tennis squad had to team up to beat Baker University Tuesday.

The match was tied 3-3 after the singles competition, but the 'Cats won all three doubles matches at Cottonwood Racquet Club to score a 6-3 victory.

The singles were played at the L.P. Washburn courts, but "we've played in bad weather all season so today we decided to bring the doubles inside," Coach Steve Snodgrass said.

In singles, K-State's Gary Titus lost to Ralph Herst, 7-5, 6-2; Jeff Henderson of K-State defeated Chuck Haas 6-3, 6-4 and K-State's Dave Krizman lost to Gary Irick in a close match, 7-6, 4-6, 7-6.

Baker's An Nguyen defeated Steve Webb 6-4, 1-6- 6-1 and K-State's Jim Lawrence beat Doug Allee, 6-3, 6-1. Also winning for K-State in singles was Greg Last, who defeated Jeff Masey 6-3, 6-0.

The Wildcats' doubles matches were all won by narrow margins.

The No. 1 pair of Lawrence and Last beat Herst and Allee 7-6, 6-3.

In No. 2 doubles, K-State's Titus and Henderson defeated Haas and Irick 7-6, 7-5.

And, the No. 3 team of Krizman and Webb won a close match against brothers An and Ross Nguyen 6-7, 6-4, 6-4.

K-State has a tournament scheduled for this weekend in Emporia. Eight teams are invited.

"They are mainly smaller schools from a three-state area (Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas), but they are the best of the small schools," Snodgrass said.

Men's rugby club takes third in Big 8

The K-State Men's Rugby Club took third in the Big 8 tournament Saturday and Sunday in Norman, Okla.

On Saturday, K-State beat Arkansas, which was a substitute team for Iowa State, 40-0. In the second game, K-State lost to eventual champion Oklahoma 22-0.

K-State earned third place Sunday with a 7-3 victory over the second-string team from Oklahoma which substituted for Colorado.

Five conference teams competed—K-State, Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska and Oklahoma State.

Sales go 'very, very well' for football season tickets

Last year's football ticket sales slogan is coming true this spring—they're "filling 'er up with Wildcats."

Football season ticket sales began Monday and students are responding in an almost basketball-like manner.

The Athletic Ticket Office sold more than 2,000 tickets Monday—more than were sold in a four-month period last year from the first day of sales in April to the beginning of the semester in August, according to Carol Adolph, ticket manager.

"We almost doubled last year's first-day sales," Adolph said.

The new all-reserved policy is causing no problems, she said, and it may work better than the old K-Block policy. She also said the students were very cooperative and the sales went smoothly Monday.

"The sales are going very, very well," Craig Helwig, assistant athletic director, said.

"Winning some games last year helped, and I'd like to think it has a lot to do with Jim Dickey," Helwig said.

He also predicted that K-State's 1979 football team will be exciting and entertaining.

The football program needs the students' basketball enthusiasm to carry over into the football season, Helwig said.

"That's what we need," he said. "We need to have the students in the stands."

Stanton Janssen

I am strong; I am invincible; I am prairie dog

The battle goes on.

Sunday afternoon, I got out my .22 rifle and snuck up on the enemy, hoping to diminish its population. But it seems that his numbers just keep growing.

Prairie dogs. They're in our pasture back home, digging holes for cattle to step in and go lame, and eating the roots and stems of our pasture grass. Last year they outgrew the pasture and annexed part of grandpa's wheat field to their "town" as well.

Past efforts to control this borrowing animal have been futile. Poisoning and fumigating their burrows have temporary success at best.

My brother and I often use the prairie dogs for target practice, but that's a drop in the bucket. There must be a thousand of them out there.

BESIDES THAT, they have an excellent defense against flying pieces of lead—they run down into their burrows after the first shot. The hunter is then obliged to wait five minutes or more for another chance.

There are five species of prairie dogs in the United States, but only the black-tailed prairie dog is found in Kansas. It is 10 inches long, weighs about two pounds, and has reddish-brown fur and a black-tipped tail.

The Kansas species is only active during the day, feeding, cleaning its burrow, and keeping vegetation around the burrow cut low so it can see predators approaching. The dirt dug out of the burrow forms a mound at the entrance to keep out rain water and provide a lookout post to spot danger.

When one prairie dog sees potential danger, it barks and the others head for their burrows. One dog continues barking until the danger has passed.

PRAIRIE DOGS don't have many natural enemies. The blackfooted ferret preys on them, but it's on the endangered species list so there must not be too many of them around.

Biologists say the prairie dogs are highly susceptible to plague, which kills many of them every year. I think ours are immune.

But I'll keep fighting. I've already got one down, with only 999 to go.

PERSONAL

SALLY, NANCY, Deana: Remember He-aw, it's OK, we love it, sing some more! Botechelli, Bessie, Vendo's, Vogue at Crown Center, diets, tubes, trivia, backgammon, and disco. Love, Buns and Me-chel. (133)

CHAINSAW—IT'S been a wonderful three years. I'm looking forward to our "special day" in August. Love, Wienie. (133)

JANON CUPIT and Debbie Hamilton. Three cheers for our lovely sisters for making the 1979-80 cheerleading squad. We sure are proud of you both. Love, your Pike brothers. (133)

JILL—HAPPY 20th birthday. I'd plan a birthday "picnic" but I'm afraid of what might happen. You too? Love, Kathy. (133)

TO OUR Abilene alcoholics: Thanks for the great time Saturday night! Evo, white socks just don't cut it for a formal. Ernie, which way to Hollywood? You'll never get there with wet pants! Joel, you lost your rose, 7-up, and your memory, but don't forget, "You did Joel!" Matt, your ass is still the best and Jim you were "hell," and drunk! Fred, with the leftover liquor and your glass you could open Freds Tavern, with live entertainment; Bish singing "I love a Parade!" Love, your Best Western 44, 42 and 22 party pals. (or was that 444 Holiday Inn, Bish?) (133)

STOS—YOU got that wrong—Grandsons are the greatest! How 'bout an explanation of 'Paradise' while my MasterCharge is still good? Thanks bunches, Love Gramma. (133)

WITT, YOU'RE the craziest guy I know with the most beautiful blue eyes. Happy belated birthday. (133)

MAMA HOG—An oinker you have always been, and always you will stay. But happy birthday, Amykins, we love you anyway! Porkers P and C. (133)

FRED, ALTHOUGH no special day is here, I thought I'd say hi. Hope you're not mad anymore. I'm sorry and will make it up to you. Please forgive. I like you and glad you like me too. Love, Mogli. (133)

RICK, HAPPY 21st birthday! What are you gonna do now that you are a big boy? One thing is for sure, you better beware of an attack, agh! Love ya, Sharon. (133)

Twister death toll rises to 56

Tornadoes ravage 5-state area

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP)—Emergency crews strung lifelines Wednesday to splintered neighborhoods in this north Texas city and three other "Tornado Alley" towns hit by tornadoes that killed at least 56 persons and injured more than 800 others.

Texas Gov. Bill Clements took to the air to survey the damage left by Tuesday's killer twisters and said the cost to rebuild would run between $200 million and $300 million.

The Department of Public Safety reported 41 bodies had been found in Wichita Falls by noon, plus 11 in Vernon and one in Harrold, a few miles to the west. Across the Red River in Lawton, Okla., three more were counted dead. Larger figures had been reported earlier in Wichita Falls and Vernon due to counting errors, officials said.

As the cleanup was under way along the Texas-Oklahoma border, several other tornadoes struck in Arkansas, injuring at least 26 persons in the Polk County communities of Grannis and Wickes.

THE RED CROSS said 21 mobile homes were destroyed and 15 others were damaged when a twister hit Grannis in the western part of the state.

Other tornadoes touched down in rural areas of Washington County, Conway County, Stone County and Van Buren County.

The south Arkansas town of Hamburg was hit by its second tornado in four days. Buildings were damaged, but there were no reports of injuries. A tornado Sunday caused more than $1 million damage and injured 17 persons.

A small tornado swept across an area north of Topeka Wednesday, overturning two mobile homes. No injuries were reported.

And at least two persons were injured at Cabool in southwestern Missouri as a tornado damaged an airport and blew a tractor-trailer rig off a road.

"They're just piled up out there," said Kenneth Hill, mayor of Wichita Falls, a city of 96,000. "We know there's got to be more bodies out there. I wouldn't be surprised if we had 100 dead in the final count."

WITH REPORTS of scattered looting despite patrols by National Guardsmen, the mayor imposed a 9 p.m. curfew Wednesday.

"I was shocked," Clements said following his helicopter flight. "Those homes are not damaged. They are gone.

"It is a devastated area. We have a very serious fire hazard here in the sense there is no water."

Other major problems facing the crippled city were lack of electricity, disabled sewer plants and a shortage of drinking water.

The governor said he will ask for federal disaster aid and "expect to get it."

Law enforcement and military authorities threw a tight net of security around the wrecked neighborhoods, requiring positive identification from those trying to salvage their property.

Senate hears appeals on budget cuts tonight

By BILL LIPPOLD
Collegian Reporter

Four groups, whose requests for funding were slashed by Finance Committee, will appeal their cases directly to Student Senate tonight.

Budget requests for Consumer Relations Board (CRB) and Black Student Union (BSU) were partially cut, and requests from debate squad and Touchstone magazine were completely cut in the committee's recommendation.

Isaac Turner, BSU president, said the committee's recommendations are unjustified.

"We cut our budget as much as possible keeping in mind we will be hosting the black conference (Big 8 Black Student Government Conference)," Turner said.

He said senate established a task force to study recruiting procedures and to come up with a student recruitment program for K-State.

The task force did not consult BSU or the Minority Affairs Center about their views on

Amin driven from capital; residents greet 'liberators'

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP)—Tanzanian troops and Ugandan rebels, showered with flowers by civilians, entered Idi Amin's capital in triumph Wednesday after a five-month war to drive the dictator from power.

Residents of Kampala flooded the streets to greet their "liberators," swarming over the Tanzanian tanks, looting shops and beating to death stragglers from Amin's army.

Amin and remnants of his forces were last seen Tuesday fleeing eastward toward Jinja, 50 miles away, in a convoy of limousines. Some reports said he had gone to Tororo, near the Kenyan border.

Townspeople in Jinja reported a flood of wounded and ragged soldiers from Amin's loyal units. Tanzanian and rebel commanders ordered no immediate full-scale push to the east, however.

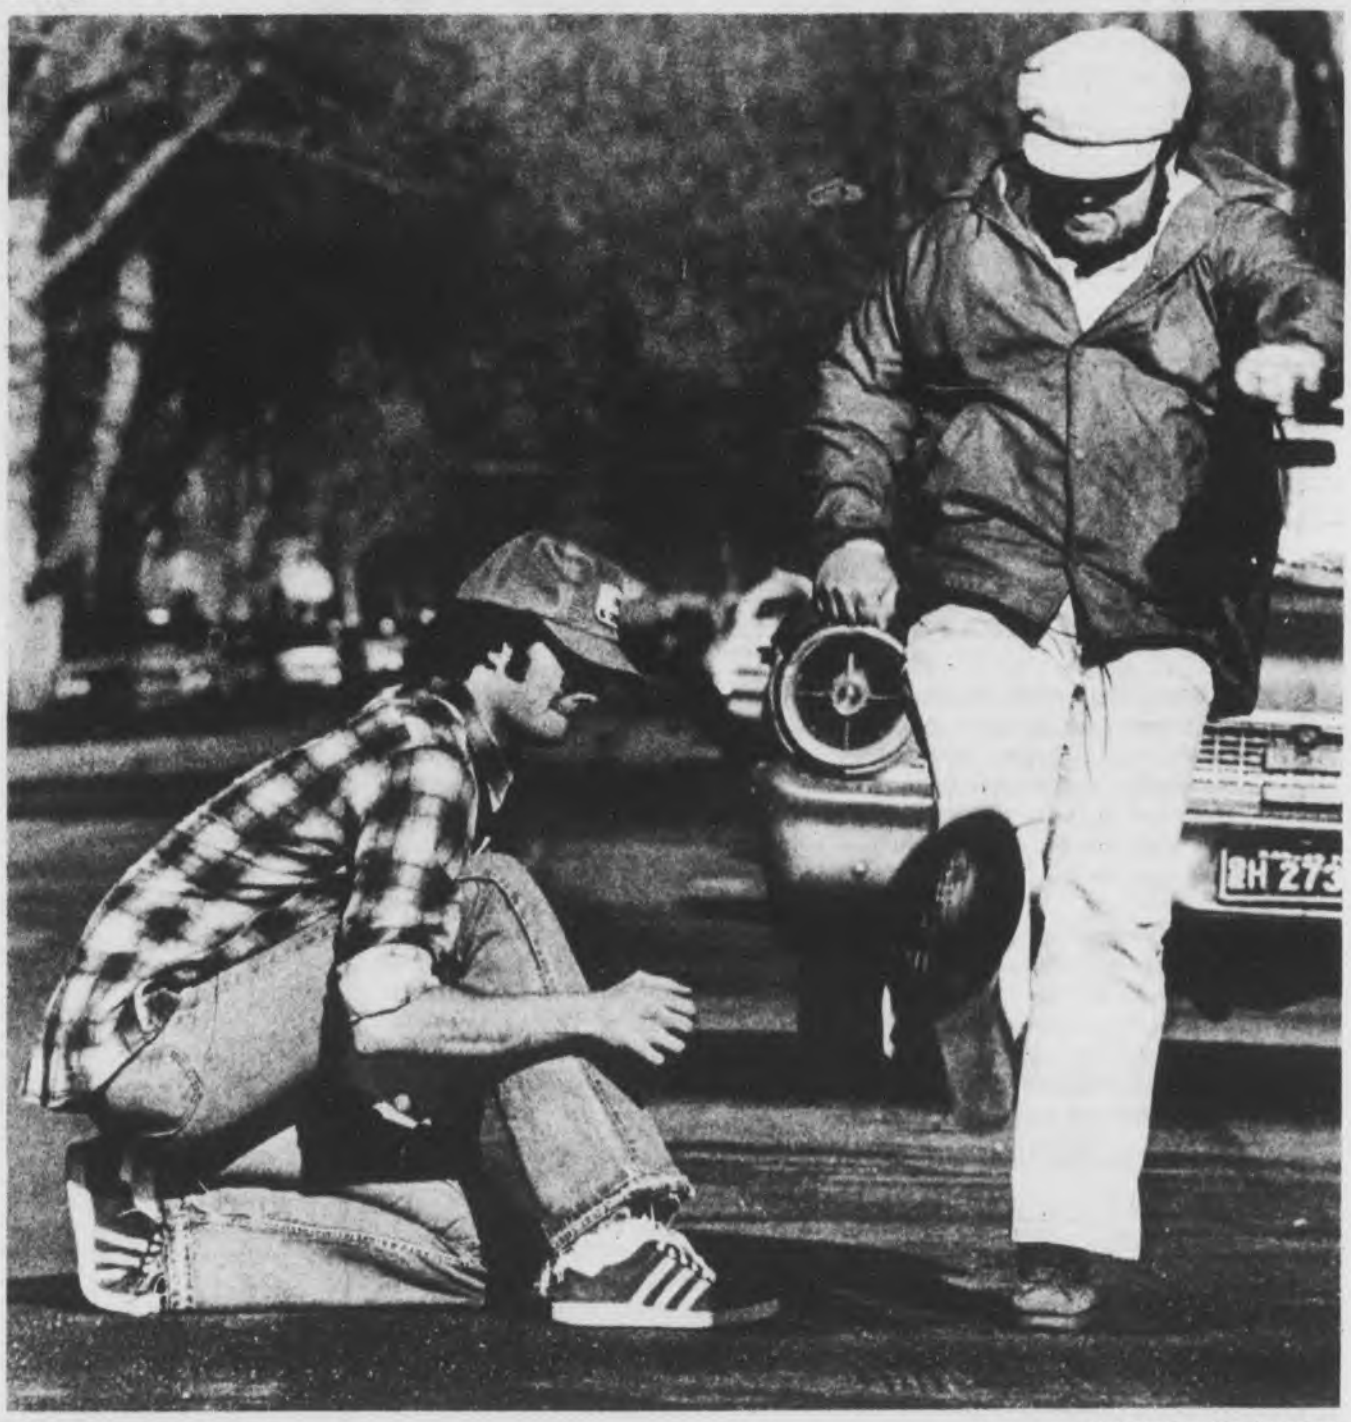
"The racist fascist is no longer in power!" the rebels declared over Uganda Radio and through loudspeakers in Kampala streets.

TANZANIAN-SPONSORED Ugandan National Liberation Front quickly announced establishment of a provisional government with former Ugandan university official Yussufu Lule as president, defense minister and armed forces chief.

In a broadcast statement from Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, Lule promised a "rule of law" and said Uganda's first elections since 1962 would be held "as soon as conditions permit."

He said he wants to "bring back to the people of Uganda the good life they once knew. There must be no revenge."

For the Tanzanian and exile invaders, the almost bloodless capture of Kampala capped an offensive that began 1½ months and 120 miles ago. The final assault began Tuesday after hours of air, artillery and rocket bombardment.



AN AMERICAN reporter who marched into Kampala with the invaders said many of the Ugandans apparently were caught and beaten to death by civilians.

Among the dead were a U.N. official from West Germany and his wife. Their automobile apparently was struck by a rocket.

Residents who hunkered down in the capital through two weeks of shelling and uncertainty poured out into the open after daybreak Wednesday. But the celebration quickly turned into uncontrolled looting and ransacking of stores and government houses. Tanzanians were unable to quell it.

Amin seized power in 1971 in a military coup that ousted then-President Milton Obote. In the next eight years he methodically crushed his opposition in bloodbaths that drew denunciations from around the world.

The human rights organization Amnesty Interntional last year estimated at least 100,000 people had been murdered under his regime. Others put the figure as high as 300,000 in a land of 13 million.

recruiting procedures, Turner said.

Last year, BSU was allocated $800 to recruit high school seniors. This year, BSU requested $500 but the committee is recommending a $275 allocation for recruitment.

FINANCE COMMITTEE is recommending CRB receive $76 less than this year's allocation.

"It's not fair to cut a service that's growing," Melanie Stockdell, CRB director, said. Usage of CRB services has increased, she said.

Instead of lobbying for her budget requests now, Stockdell said, she will wait until final allocations this fall.

"I don't think their (senators) attitudes will be as negative as they are now," she said. "The summer will have lapsed and they won't be as tight."

"I didn't even know we were cut," Ed Schiappa, a representative of debate squad, said. "They just asked me to show up for the meeting."

KEN SHEDD, Touchstone's spring editor also said he knew nothing about the committee's recommendation but was told to meet with senate tonight.

Finance Committee members will explain their recommendations during this first tentative allocations meeting.

Only senators, Finance Committee membere, cabinet members, and Student Senate advisers will have speaking privileges. Speakers will be limited to four minutes for each group and amendment being considered.

"There'll be a lot of discussion with many questions raised," Mark Skinner, committee member, said.

IN OTHER business, a bill to allocate $10,000 to help preserve Nichols Gym will be discussed.

A bill to revise spending regulations for the Student Governing Association (SGA) also will be discussed.

"The bill allows SGA to spend money at legislative nights for the student body president and a member of his cabinet," Greg Musil, student body president, said.

Future tentative allocation meetings are scheduled for April 17, 19, 24 and 26.

Guard counters escape attempt; fleeing prisoner apprehended

LANSING (AP)—A Kansas Penitentiary corrections officer kept his cool when taken hostage at knifepoint by a convicted murderer Wednesday, then radioed directions to aid in the inmate's capture after he was released unharmed.

James Cashero, a 37-year-old father of five, said his captor was "almost apologetic" after he put a knife to the guard's throat and ordered him to drive a prison van toward Kansas City.

Larry Hume, 29, a native of Ponca City, Okla. serving a life sentence from Wichita for first-degree murder, was apprehended 25 minutes later following a chase involving prison, county and state authorities.

Cashero said he was transporting Hume from a prison dormitory near the Missouri River to one near the main facility at Lansing at the time of the incident. Hume, who was in minimum custody, was seated behind Cashero in a prison van. The two were alone in the vehicle.

"I noticed him slip behind me, then he grabbed my coat collar and put a knife to the side of my neck," Cashero recalled. "He told me just to keep driving" toward Kansas City. "I just did everything he told me too, I didn't lose my cool."

CASHERO SAID fears for his safety "ran through my mind, but I was really too busy thinking of my next move to think about it."

Finally Cashero was ordered to the side of the road and told to get out of the van.

"You can bet it didn't take too long for me to get out of that truck, either," he recalled. "He told me to leave my walkie-talkie, but I refused, and told him if he was gonna go, go."

When Hume drove off, Cashero radioed the prison with his location and the prisoner's route of escape.

Another guard, Raymond Hand, spotted the van a short time later and gave chase. The van ran off a curve on Highway 8, southwest of Lansing, and Hume fled on foot after the vehicle became mired in mud. He was apprehended by Hand.

Hume was sentenced in Wichita in April of 1972 for the December 1971 robbery and shooting death of Edward Maisch, 19, a clerk at a Wichita pawn shop.

Prison officials said Hume had served about half of his 15 year mandatory sentence and was a cook in a minimum security area of the prison.

Execution: Iran death toll to 101

TEHRAN, Iran—Firing squads shot 11 generals, diplomats and politicians on Wednesday—the highest execution toll in the capital in one night.

The latest executions in Tehran pushed to at least 101 the number of men put to death since the revolutionary forces of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini took over two months ago.

More trials were reported in progress Wednesday, including those of three police officers suspected of torture.

Charges against the 11 executed men ranged from treason and corruption to "acts against the people." Nearly half of them were shot for white-collar crimes or sanctioning murder, rather than the direct murder and torture charges that have dominated past court hearings.

Tornadoes strike KC area

A flurry of tornadoes raked southern and northwest Missouri Wednesday, injuring at least 16 persons and causing scattered damage while heavy rains lashed the eastern part of the state.

Nine persons were hurt when a band of twisters skipped across the eastern edge of the Kansas City area Wednesday night, destroying a church and damaging several other buildings.

Earlier in the day, a tornado destroyed the airport in the south-central Missouri village of Cabool, blew a tractor-trailer rig off the road and injured at least three persons.

Four others were hurt when a tornado touched down near Neelyville in southeast Missouri. One person suffered undetermined injuries when a house was destroyed by high winds at Bakersfield in Ozark County near the Arkansas state line.

Meanwhile, rain drenched eastern Missouri. About 4.8 inches of rain fell in St. Louis during a 24-hour period forcing the temporary closing of Lambert International Airport and halting traffic on at least one flooded interstate highway.

In the Kansas City area, most of the damage was confined to Liberty, where the roof was torn off a church and a mobile home was overturned. At least eight persons were treated for injuries, including two hurt when the windows were blown out of their car.

A tornado also touched down in Independence, destroying a shed, but no injuries were reported.

Uncertainties cloud liquor bills

TOPEKA—State officials still aren't sure yet how they will go about insuring that private clubs return the money entrusted to them by members if a bill permitting abolition of liquor pools becomes law, but they say it is at least certain the clubs won't have a windfall profit.

Gov. John Carlin has not signed the liquor pool bill, passed last week by the Legislature, but is expected to do so, leaving unanswered the question of what will happen to the money left in the liquor pools.

About $20 million flowed through the liquor pool system last year, according to the state Alcoholic Beverage Control Division (ABC), but it is not known how much is in them at any given time.

ABC personnel presently are researching how best to go about returning any unused liquor pool funds to the rightful owners.

"We're discussing what direction to take," said Robert Duncan, attorney for the ABC. "We'll have an answer for the clubs and put it out in an industry memo."

University strike spreads tension

BOSTON—A week-old strike by faculty and staff at Boston University is spreading tension between the faculty and administration, and anxiety among students as the time for final exams draws near at the nation's fourth largest private school.

On Wednesday, as bargainers awaited help from a federal mediator, some students were on the picket line alongside professors.

"I'm a student here and I'd like an education. I'm tired of this," on student told BU Trustee Robert Bergenheim.

Bergenheim said he, too, hoped for a speedy end to the strike. He the continued walking past the strike line, occasionally stopping to talk with a student or a professor.

He has done that almost daily since the strike began, April 5.

Man assaulted; 2 suspects caught

A vistor to Manhattan had a bad experience last night at the Holiday Inn on Tuttle Creek Blvd.

Edward Krysl, of Borger, Texas, was assaulted while at the hotel at about 9:15 p.m. by two men who fractured his arm and separated his shoulder. After assaulting Krysl and taking nothing from him, the two left in a late-model yellow-cream Oldsmobile with Kansas license plates and headed east.

Krysl was taken to the emergency room at St. Mary Hospital by an ambulance to be treated for his injuries.

Riley County Police, having a good description of the car and its occupants, began watching all the exits out of town and notified police departments in the surrounding area.

The St. Marys Police Department spotted the suspects' car on U.S. Highway 24 and apprehended the two men.

The two men were returned to the Riley County Jail, where they are awaiting positive identification by the victim.

Chemical cleanup crisis

Niagara Falls is getting some bad publicity these days. There is a blight surrounding the tourist attraction originating with the 80 companies dumping industrial wastes around the Falls.

Last year the homes of Love Canal, a town outside Niagara Falls, were ordered boarded up after toxic wastes began bubbling up into basements. The wastes were from a sealed chemical dump on which the town was built. Also leading to the abandonment of the town was a high number of miscarriages and serious diseases a local doctor links to the leak.

Now the same thing is happening in Hyde Park—a town near Love Canal with a nearby dump containing four times the wastes of the Love Canal dump. Hyde Park, so far, has not had any problem with wastes seeping into homes. Their problem is with chronically ill children and an abnormal number of miscarriages and birth defects.

A congressional subcommittee is looking into questions about the millions of tons of chemical wastes buried across the country. There could be as many as 2000 dumps leaking chemical wastes such as the one at Love Canal.

The dumps at Love Canal and Hyde Park were operated and sealed by the Hooker Chemical and Plastics Co. Bruce Davis, executive vice president of the company, protests the canal dump site was only sold under pressure and with a warning in the deed as to the contents of the dump.

Too bad the company didn't include a warning to home owners that sealing methods "prevalent at the time or superior" (words used by Davis to describe sealing practices) unfortunately weren't sufficient to contain the wastes.

It is estimated it will cost $50 million to clean up the Love Canal dump. The estimated figure for cleaning up dumps across the country is closer to $50 billion.

The government must try to decide who will pay for this cleanup. The chemical companies are trying to shirk responsiblity by claiming they were following existing laws for sealing. If the companies won't pay then local, state or federal government will have to pay for cleanup.

But more important, the government must decide how future wastes can be safely stored or disposed of so history will not repeat itself with chemical leaks in the future.

The problem is not confined to the Niagara Falls area. For example, in Kentucky 600 steel barrels containing hazardous chemical wastes, from the Valley of the Drums dump, were found floating in flood waters 20 miles from Louisville.

It is findings such as these which have prompted the publicity necessary to get the government concerned enough to start inquiries. The publicity and the inquiries must continue until chemical dumps and their wastes are no longer a hazard to communities nationwide.

One life to handle more than enough

No one I know buys Playboy magazine. No one you know does either, right? Yet somehow, hundreds of copies of this magazine disappear from Manhattan newsstands every month faster than Miss April's clothes.

Somebody out there is reading Playboy.

Somebody out there is also attending porno movies (witness the record crowds for the "The Opening of Misty Beethoven" recently) drinking packaged liquor, smoking cigarettes, and driving with their seat belts unfastened.

So what? As long as no one drags me into a movie theater to see Constance Money, pours liquor down my throat, crams cigarettes in my mouth or forcibly unfastens my seat belt, what difference does it make? These are not the most desirable habits, but don't we, in this land of human rights and electric can openers, get to choose for ourselves?

Apparently not.

FOR FEAR we may not be able to direct the course of our lives down the path of decency and good health, our right to run our life as we see fit is being eroded by crusading do-gooders, self-righteous snobs and unrequested literary SWAT teams.

Whether or not to buy a Playboy may not be the most important choice you ever have to make in your life, but more and more often the choice is being made for you—by someone who claims to know better than yourself what is good for you.

The absurd liquor laws in Kansas are nothing more than a feeble effort to keep a quick drink out of the mouths of all us pitiful souls who are not of as strong moral fiber as the Rev. Richard Taylor. The Union Governing Board feels obligated to play mommy and daddy for us while we are away at school and won't let us see any of those nasty, nasty movies.

Larry Flynt is forced to give $27,000 to the state of Georgia for the "crime" of catering to the kinky whims of the state's residents. California narrowly beated a proposal to ban smoking in restaurants, which would have left West Coast nicotine freaks with nowhere but the smoggy outdoors to ply their habit.

YEARS AGO, a nation overcome with puritanical passion amended the U.S. Constitution to make the sale of liquor illegal. This was designed to rid us of the "demon rum" forever.

It didn't work.

I do not advocate pornography, booze, cigarettes or driving without a seat belt. But obviously, someone wants to partake of these vices. Even more obviously, others do not.

The solution is breathtakingly simple. Ann Landers says it almost every day. Mind your own business. Smoke, don't smoke, drink, don't drink, bring your children up any way you want, but don't try to run any other lives than the one you have.

Most of us have enough trouble trying to get just one life to go right.

'Pardon us' for library use

Editor,

RE: "Cooperation helps check-out" (April 10).

Well, Steve Arnoldy, pardon us for using the library and making you work 10 minutes overtime on Saturday. When else are books supposed to be checked out?

Many people must first find the book and then read parts of it to see if they want to check it out. After all, they have until closing time to check the books out. What's wrong with studying and working until closing time and then checking out their materials—other than making you work a little longer, which is such an inconvenience to you I'm sure.

Remember, you're getting paid for sitting there checking out books. Do you propose no books be checked out fifteen minutes before the library closes? If so, you are defeating the purpose of a library.

The library is providing a service for students and faculty which is paid for by students and taxpayers, as is your wage. I suggest you quit your bitching about being overworked the last 25 minutes of your shift and go a about your job in a courteous and helpful manner or find a new job with shorter hours and less work.

Issues—'60s concern

Editor,

I very much resent student body president Greg Musil's comments on the students of the 1960s (Collegian, April 6). They (the students of the '60s) did not decide to burn down Nichols, anymore than the students decided to burn down the old auditorium. It was a very small minority who did the burning and they in no way represented my views as a student of the '60s.

As students of the '60s we seemed to do a lot more demonstrating about issues and problems than the students of the '70s. We certainly did not wait until the last minute to get emotional about a situation that has been going on now for 10 years.

Where were you Mr. Student Body President last year and the year before that? I went to school in Nichols, your concern did not start until this week.

Plants need safety corrections

Design flaws found in 71 reactors

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Three Mile Island accident has revealed the need for new safety measures that could affect nearly half of the atomic power plants in the country, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) staff said Wednesday.

The commission staff declared that the accident requires consideration of additional safety measures "on a priority basis," and the agency expects to issue a new directive Thursday.

In a preliminary notification to the commission, the NRC staff said further "actions" should be considered "for all light water power reactor facilities." All but one of the nation's 72 licensed nuclear plants—Fort Saint Vrain at Plattville, Colo.—are light water facilities.

But Frank Ingram, an NRC spokesman, said later that the staff meant to refer only to the 43 "pressurized water reactors," of which Three Mile Island Unit 2 is one example.

HOWEVER, the NRC had issued earlier safety bulletins concerning the nine plants built by Babcock & Wilcox, the engineering firm that built the Three Mile Island plant in Pennsylvania. The new order could affect the other 34 pressurized water reactors designed by Westinghouse Corp. and Combustion Engineering Corp.

Ingram said the NRC is not considering shutting down any nuclear plants.

Ingram said the NRC staff "is expected to advise utility operators of pressurized water nuclear power plants of these new actions sometime tomorrow." The nature of the new actions was not disclosed.

In its notification to the commission, the staff said it discovered that certain instruments in some power plants designed by Westinghouse can give conflicting and misleading readings about coolant water levels in the reactor. NRC officials have said a similar situation existed at Three Mile Island and may have contributed to the accident.

Darrell Eisenhut, deputy director of the NRC's Division of Operating Reactors, said that though the main problem involves pressurized water reactors, boiling water reactors will also be reviewed.

The NRC staff noted that Westinghouse warned the owners of some plants that instruments intended to trigger the emergency cooling system might fail to function under certain circumstances, and might thus mislead plant operators into taking incorrect action.

Westinghouse issued a statement late Wednesday saying that after the Three Mile Island accident, "Westinghouse felt it advisable to re-emphasize to utilities and to the NRC a procedure to initiate manually the core cooling system following coolant releases from the pressurizer."

Free community universities gain support from Resource Act

Free university-style education may be on the increase in Kansas because of the Community Resource Act signed into law Monday by Gov. John Carlin, according to Bill Draves, the Out Reach Program's staff member for the University For Man (UFM).

"The bill is a giant step forward for local and rural areas to start programs," said Draves.

He said the bill gives the legislature authorization to support communities starting new programs.

"A maximum of $6,000 will be given the first year of the program, up to $4,000 the second year and up to $2,000 the third year," he said.

Draves said UFM was pleased with the enacted bill, and added that members of UFM testified for its passage in both houses of the Legislature.

The bill received heavy support in the legislature and state communities, he said.

"So many people in different areas of the state supporting the passage of the bill made it fly," Draves said.

He said the best feature of the bill was the low budget, which will allow small towns to start free university programs.

Currently 25 communities in Kansas have developed programs similar to UFM. He said the smallest program is in Olsburg and the largest is in Wichita.

About 31,000 people were involved in the programs statewide last year, he said.

UFM and similar programs conduct non-credit classes for people "who just want to learn," he said.

Draves said the classes cover a variety of topics including solar energy, philosophy, arts and crafts.

UFM began in 1968 and is currently the sixth largest free university of its type in the United States, he said.

Teamsters union accepts contract settlement

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Carter administration proclaimed victory Wednesday for its stretched anti-inflation guidelines after the Teamsters union accepted a contract settlement to end a 10-day nationwide trucking shutdown.

Union and trucking industry bargainers announced tentative agreement late Tuesday on a contract industry officials said would boost labor costs by about 30 percent over three years—or just more than 9 percent a year compounded.

But administration officials disputed that cost estimate, saying the contract boosts wages and fringe benefits by 26.5 percent over three years, according to their calculations. After subtracting several increases exempt from the guidelines, the administration said the Teamsters were in compliance with the program.

"The settlement is within the administration's voluntary pay standards," President Carter's chief inflation fighter, Alfred Kahn, said Wednesday.

Industry officials concurred with the administration that the package falls within the guidelines.

UNION PRESIDENT Frank Fitzsimmons refused to say whether he thought the package fell within the guidelines, leaving that to the government. "I can't figure their arithmetic," Fitzsimmons told reporters after the two sides settled Tuesday.

Chief industry bargainer J. Curtis Counts added, "Amen."

The agreement must be ratified by union members, a process that takes four to six weeks. "I'm sure they'll be satisfied with this agreement. At least I hope so," Fitzsimmons said.

Union officials say the possibility that members will reject the pact is a remote one.

Carter's voluntary anti-inflation program calls for a 7 percent annual ceiling on wage and fringe benefit increases. That works out to 22.5 percent over three years with compounding.

However, the administration has relaxed the standard twice to accommodate the Teamsters.

The contract is considered a crucial test of Carter's voluntary guidelines because the Teamsters traditionally set wage patterns for other major unions that bargain later in the year.

MEANWHILE, union and industry officials met at Teamsters headquarters here Wednesday to complete final terms for ending the longest trucking shutdown in the nation's history.

There were scattered reports that striking Teamsters were removing pickets and trucking firms that had locked out workers were reopening Wednesday. However, an industry official, who asked not to be named, said normal operations were not expected to resume until today.

The union called a selective strike against 73 major freight carriers at midnight March 31 after bargainers failed to settle on a new contract. Trucking Management Inc., the bargaining arm for some 500 major trucking companies, responded within hours with a lockout—barring some 235,000 teamsters from working.

Consumer Sleuth

By MELANIE STOCKDELL
CRB Director
and Contributing Writer

I, as director of the K-State Consumer Relations Board (CRB), would like to make a written apology to the Varsity Publishing Company.

This company was indirectly affected by my comments in the April 6 issue of the Collegian concerning Southwestern Publishing Company recruitment tactics.

Varsity is an exemplary company whose recruitment practices are totally above board and whose business ethics are above reproach.

In no way, did comments concerning Southwestern apply to Varsity, and it is hoped that students will not be misled into believing otherwise.

HEALTH COSTS are rising higher with expected spending by Americans during 1979 to be more than $206 billion.

Much of this money will go to hospital costs for the more than 20 million Americans who undergo surgery each year.

The majority of these 20 million surgical procedures performed yearly are of the non-emergency type. Patients may decide if and when they wish to have an operation.

If aches and pains force you to seek medical attention and the doctor recommends non-emergency surgery, here are things you should do before letting the surgeon slice:

—look for a specialist

—ask for a second opinion from this specialist and note all alternatives to surgery.

—carefully weigh the risks involved both with having and with not having the surgery performed.

To locate a specialist near you, call: 1-800-325-6400 toll free.

Fluorides; 'protoplasmic poison' linked to disorders, say authors

By MARY BICHELMEYER
Collegian Reporter

Excessive amounts of fluoride in drinking water have been linked to disorders varying from mottled teeth to cancer, according to Lewis McKinney and Albert Burgstahler, co-authors of the book, "Fluoridation, The Great Dilemma."

McKinney and Burgstahler, science professors at the University of Kansas, spoke on the effect of fluoridation to members of the Sigma Xi, the Research Society, Tuesday evening in the K-State Union.

"Scientific authorities do not always tell us the truth," McKinney said. "If we expect scientists to be honest we will be disappointed."

"The history of science is full of tragedies because people fail to ask questions," McKinney said.

"Fluoridation of water is a tragedy that is costing the consumer," McKinney said. "The voices of opposition coming from doctors and dentists are not heard."

FLUORIDATION is supported by the government, the press and by the low cost and belief of excellent results, McKinney said.

"Fluorides are actually a protoplasmic poison," he said.

The first recognition of the problem of excessive fluoride was the discovery of fluorosis, the brown staining of teeth, Burgstahler said.

Mottled teeth also were linked to fluoride excess, he said.

Research has connected excessive fluoride to numerous biological and psychological problems, Burgstahler said. Problems have included such symptoms as gastrointestinal effects, skin conditions, aches in joints, chronic fatigue, headaches, nausea, mouth sores and an increase in diabetes.

PSYCHOLOGICAL problems have included depression, nervousness and loss of the ability to concentrate.

Kansas plains promise isolation for backpackers of local trails

By KLEILA CARLSON
Collegian Reporter

Even on the rolling plains of Kansas, Manhattan included, there are places to "go take a hike."

"Backpacking and hiking are two means of appreciating what surrounds you, because you become a part of it slowly," said Jim Nighswonger, member of the Kansas Trails Council and K-State associate professor of forestry. He spoke Tuesday on "Hiking Trails in Kansas" as part of a University for Man (UFM) class.

One prospective trail for hikers, the Edward Hines Memorial Nature Trail, is located on the outskirts of Manhattan at the mouth of Tuttle Cove.

"The trail is an interpretative trail, (helping the observer determine what he is to observe) designed for visually handicapped people to use," Nighswonger said.

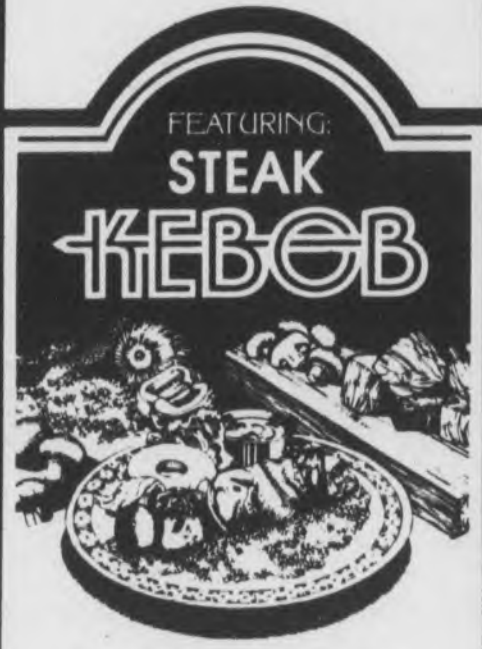
BESIDES VARIOUS historical trails, Kansas has four national recreation trails, he said. They include the Lake Perry Trails in Jefferson County, Dornwood Park Trail outside of Topeka, Elk City Lake Trails near Independence, and the International Forest of Friendship on Lake Warrok.

"These trails are not a total division from civilization, but they provide the isolation people want," he said.

Kansans are not the only ones taking advantage of trails in the state, Nighswonger said.

"I get letters from people back East who want to find out how they can get where they want to go by taking the Chisholm or Sante Fe Trails," he said.

Growing use of trails has caused the Trails Council to work on present trails and to create new ones, Nighswonger said.



A new trail area is now being planned for the Council Grove Reservoir.

"The interest in hiking is so great, that trails may soon be on every lake in the state," he said.

Premium nears $1-a-gallon; weekend closings predicted

NEW YORK (AP)—Americans making traditional trips to visit relatives at Easter will pay more than ever for the gasoline they need to get there, and in some parts of the nation, they may have trouble buying it for any price.

An Associated Press spot check around the nation showed on Wednesday that gasoline prices continue to rise rapidly, the result of higher costs for imported oil, tight supplies and new government regulations.

And while the $1-a-gallon level has not yet been reached, one New York City gas station nudged its price right up to it.

A Texaco station five blocks south of the United Nations is selling premium gasoline for 99.9 cents a gallon. Sales were described as normal after the price was posted Wednesday. The price of unleaded was posted at 96.8 cents a gallon and regular was 91.9 cents.

Elsewhere, prices are not quite that high, but they are inching up steadily enough that predictions of $1-a-gallon gasoline by the end of this year may not be unfounded.

In Michigan, unleaded gasoline is selling for as much as 91.9 cents a gallon, up an average of 2 cents a gallon from a week ago, according to the American Automobile Association.

And a Standard Oil of Indiana (Amoco) station in Miami is getting 90.9 cents a gallon for super unleaded gas.

HOWEVER, prices above 90 cents a gallon are unusual; the average price per gallon in the United States is about 73 cents.

The average price per gallon is increased by the cost of premium-grade gasoline, which sells for well above 80 cents in many areas. According to the Lundberg Letter, an oil industry newsletter, metropolitan areas where the average price of premium is above 80 cents a gallon include Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Salt Lake City and San Diego.

At the other end of the scale, regular gasoline, the cheapest grade, costs as little as 66 cents in many areas. Self-service stations in Houston are charging 61.9 cents a gallon, according to the Lundberg survey.

All gasoline prices have risen, however, by an average of more than 2 cents a gallon in the past month. Contributing to the increase was the boost in crude oil prices after the oil squeeze caused by the Iranian crisis. And the government's decision to allow refiners to pass along more production costs also affected prices.

INTERSESSION

May 21-June 1, 1979

REGISTRATION
Intersession is open to KSU students and to the public. Prior enrollment at KSU is not necessary.
Registration will be held April 30, May 1 and May 2 from 8:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. in the K-State Union's Main Concourse. Additional registrations will be accepted at 317 Umberger Hall from May 3 through May 21. Course fees are due at the time of enrollment. On Thursday, May 10, at 8:00 a.m., a decision will be posted as to which courses have enough enrollments to "go"; this decision will be based on the number of paid registrations recorded during the first week of registration. The go/drop information will be posted near the Information Desk at the K-State Union and will be available from the Continuing Education Registrar's office (317 Umberger, 532-5566). NO individual notification about cancelled classes will be made. Students enrolled in cancelled classes may re-enroll in others at 317 Umberger.
Students are asked to check with their advisors to ensure that the Intersession class will meet degree requirements.
Memorial Day schedules are at the discretion of the instructors.

COSTS
Costs are $18 per undergraduate ("UG") credit hour and $27 per graduate ("G") credit hour, payable by cash, check, or Visa/Master Charge. Some classes will require lab fees, materials fees, or other costs, and these are indicated in the course listing. These fees will be collected at registration or separately, at the first class meeting, and are not refundable after the first class meeting. Travel arrangements, for courses requiring them, must be made with the instructors as early as possible.

CREDIT
Classes are offered for one or two resident credit hours, with a few exceptions. This reflects a deans' ruling of one credit maximum per 15-hour week of Intersession instruction. The maximum credit enrollment is three (3) hours per student. Anyone wishing to enroll in more than three credit hours must have written approval from his or her academic dean at the time of registration. STUDENTS SHOULD SIGN UP FOR COURSES ON A "CREDIT/NO CREDIT" BASIS AT THE TIME OF REGISTRATION. SIGN-UP FOR "CREDIT/NO CREDIT" MUST BE DONE BEFORE ONE-THIRD OF THE CLASS MEETINGS HAVE ELAPSED.

REFUNDS
A full refund is made if the withdrawal request is received before the second class meeting, or if the class is cancelled. One-half of the fee is refunded if the withdrawal request is received after the second class meeting, but before one-third of the class meetings have elapsed. No refund is permitted if the withdrawal request is received after one-third of the class meetings. All refund requests must be made in person or in writing. No refunds will be given after the class begins, for those taking the course for non-credit.

Row, row, row your boat

On the dark, misty morning they stand waiting for the command. Hearing the signal they grasp the massive weight and, lifting it above their heads, they begin the downhill trek.

Their playing field is at the hill's base. Carrying the weight into the water, they once again stand and wait for the command. Again the signal, and they step into the boat one by one.

This is the K-State crew. These unknown athletes practice twice-a-day, but only for their benefit. They receive no scholarships and few funds for their travel expenses.

The crew is coached by Walter Hoover, 83, a former Olympic coach. Hoover, who has been involved in rowing all his life, is hoping to return to the Olympics as a coach in 1980.

"My age is a disadvantage because I stumble around a lot, but my knowledge of rowing is better than most," he said.

Hoover, who spends most of his time coaching the men's team, is assisted by Cliff Elliot, women's coach.

Elliot said the K-State teams have had longer water time than most other schools, which will help in competition.

Hoover has started to campaign for crew funds by talking to various administrators and an alumni.

"We need to get newer and lighter boats, but without the funds we'll have to make do with what we've got," he said.

Hoover said he was still trying to recruit more people for the crew team in order to build the squad.

Explosion shreds grain elevator wall

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—A spinning blade in an air pollution control device sparked an explosion that ripped away much of an outer wall of an eight-story grain elevator and critically injured four workers, city fire officials said Wednesday.

North Kansas City Fire Marshal Donald Burgoon said a second-floor device used to grind byproducts of the plant "picked up a foreign object of some type, probably a nut or bolt, and created a spark."

The spark triggered an explosion which "literally blew the bag filter wide open and shook dust loose from the whole structure which just compounded the problem," Burgoon said.

Byproducts of plant operations are ground to dust before being funneled to third floor storage bags that keep them from being released into the atmosphere.

The blast occurred late Tuesday night two miles north of downtown Kansas City in the center of the sprawling Archer-Daniels Midland Co. (ADM) elevators. It was the third grain dust explosion in 15 months in the Kansas City area.

AUTHORITIES originally said lightning might have struck the building, but Burgoon said he didn't "find anything to verify that."

Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) officials obtained a court order Wednesday to enter the facility to investigate.

OSHA issued a 20-page citation against the plant last year, listing a series of alleged violations as a result of an inspection, according to Bob Borchardt, area OSHA director.

Borchardt said the citation includes alleged "explosion hazards, electrical hazards and physical hazards."

ADM has contested the citation and it awaits a hearing.

Storybook kings and queens not so picturesque

'Lion in Winter' royalty trades love for power

By CAROL WRIGHT
Collegian Reviewer

Colorful storybook pictures of kings and queens who adorned themselves with dazzling trinkets and flaunting waves of lace and silk spoiled me as a child.

For a long time, I fancied that these glorious possessions were the best treasures I could find to lock me safely outside the world's door. I made a secret pact with myself that I would spend the rest of my days sipping warm wine from silver goblets and striding through castle gardens in the cool, rainbow-fragrant air.

In many respects "The Lion in Winter" shows how crippling and easy it is for royalty to fall back on secure childhood games and plots to achieve the political and economic powers they dream about wanting so desperately only for themselves.

Joseph E. Levine presents a blood-thirsty and emotion-packed film, embracing the bitter conflicts between King Henry II (played by Peter O'Toole) and Eleanor of Aquitaine (portrayed by Katherine Hepburn) over which of their sons will be successor to the throne.

BASED ON James Goldman's play, "The Lion in Winter" showing today at 3:30 in the Little Theatre and again at 7:30 at Forum Hall is superbly directed by Anthony Harvey.

Its cast leads the way in executing one of the finest films I've seen in the Kaleidoscope series. Its plot is embellished with plentiful scenes of suspense, apathy, sedition and remorse. Some scenes are so poignant with John Barry's musical genius that I felt like bursting from the movie's impact.

In the opening, O'Toole is teaching his son, John (Nigel Terry), sword fighting. O'Toole favors John over his other sons, although O'Toole lacks the ability to express love to all of them. Yet, O'Toole anticipates John will become a clever and successful king.

Terry handles the role of John in a moving manner, blundering around, being excessively ridiculed by his brothers and inheriting a paranoia for knives, war, daggers and swords.

Hepburn, however, is on a different track. She has high hopes for Richard (Anthony Hopkins), since he is the queen's most cherished 'prize.' Hepburn is exquisite as always in her acting. She particularly uses Richard to cover for and conjure her cunning plots against King Henry.

IN ONE scene between Hepburn and Hopkins, she strolls about the castle, tilting her head in a mocking fashion, and explains to Richard in a cutting voice how she's so brlliant at conceiving plots: "I scheme a lot. I plot and plan. That's how a queen spends all of her time," to which Richard replies: "We could tangle spiders in the webs you weave."

There are a couple of exceptionally good monologues of O'Toole and Hepburn. O'Toole is saddened by his sons' rebellion. He, in turn, denounces them, and wanders off in the blue and white shadows outside the castle repetitively saying, "My boys are gone. I've lost my boys."

Hepburn has been held captive for ten years under King Henry's authority. In one beautiful and depressing solo dialogue, she tells about her imprisonment. She seems to be strong as ebony, but soon cracks like a dry, brittle leaf.

Timothy Daltonn, who portrays King Philip of France, and Jane Merrow, who plays his sister, Alais (pronounced Alice), deserve special attention.

DALTON CARRIES to this film some of his "Heathcliff" character in "Wuthering Heights," despite those lucious green eyes, King Philip is a 17-year-old snob, evil—conniving little traitor at heart.

Merrow does a fairly convincing job at having love affairs with King Henry, trying to take him away from the queen, but becoming increasingly perturbed at the King's indecisive, fickle nature.

Made on location in France and Ireland, this movie is well-worth its two hours and fifteen minutes. While there are some humorous lines, "The Lion in Winter" is a serious statement on sacrificing love for the pure fact of political power.

PTK alumni to teach transfers

They say experience is the best teacher, so experienced students will be playing teacher to help orientate transfer students coming to K-State.

Alumni of Phi Theta Kappa, a National Junior College Honorary Fraternity, have organized a new campus chapter to help transfer students through their own experiences, said Bruce Bales, chairman of the executive committee and senior in math and computer science.

Phi Theta Kappa is an organization for junior college students in the top 10 percent of their classes, Bales said.

The alumni organization will officially be chartered at 6:30 p.m. today in Union 207.

Members will provide orientation to junior college transfer students on housing and scholarships, he said. The chapter also will be setting goals to better acquaint incoming transfer students with the University.

"K-State is the first university in Kansas to charter an alumni organization for Phi Theta Kappa," Bales said. "Our chapter will be the Alpha chapter of Kansas."

ON YOUR MARK...6, 7 and 8-year-olds make a dash for the eggs during an early Easter egg hunt at Sunset Zoo last Sunday afternoon, sponsored by the Big Brother and Big Sister organization.

'Kids are the best friends you can have'

Wanted Big Brother: lonely child needs you

By SUE FREIDENBERGER
Staff Writer

The ad reads: "Big Brother for lonely first grader who is alone after school everyday. Please help him."

A Big Brother is a confidant, a guide and a friend—but Big Brothers are hard to find.

Virginia Burcher, executive director of the Manhattan Big Brothers and Big Sisters, said an increase of mothers bringing their children into the organization has caused a shortage of volunteer Big Brothers and Sisters.

"More mothers are finding out about us and we need to keep up with that increase," Burcher said.

When Burcher took over as head of Big Brothers in August 1978, nearly 100 boys needed Big Brothers. Although 180 total placements have been made since September, there are still 25 who haven't been matched.

IT SEEMS harder to get male volunteers than females, according to Tom Hoskins, one of the office managers and a K-State student in social work.

"Right now in the case files there are about six Big Sisters and 15 Little Sisters who haven't been matched. There are only one or two Big Brothers to the 25 Little Brothers who need to be placed," he said.

One of the reasons for this concerns the University, Burcher said. Almost 97 percent of Big Brothers are students at K-State, she said.

"Girls are easier to get because many of them are psychology, social work, education and family and child development majors and see the program as a way to check out their fields in a practical application," she said.

BIG BROTHERS and Big Sisters, a United Way agency, gives children a friend outside of the family.

"We have kids from every conceivable walk of life: middle class, lower-income class, kids from sound homes with lots of love that just have some problem relating to others in school," Burcher said.

Many cases deal with one-parent homes, divorce cases, slow-learning children and the mentally retarded.

"Some of these cases are labeled urgent because the situation is bad in the family," Hoskins said. "We try to place those kids with a volunteer first."

Rich Cooper, junior in business management, became a Big Brother about three weeks ago. He stressed the importance of the organization's concept.

"They tell you in the training session, don't try to change, teach or impose yourself on the child," Cooper said. "They tell you to just be yourself and be friends."

SINCE THE organization depends so much on volunteers who also are students, there sometimes are problems with keeping a volunteer after the initial interest has worn off. However, Burcher added, the majority of volunteers are reliable.

"Since I've started, I've only had to terminate three volunteers for unreliability," she said. "About 12 have terminated themsleves when they found out the responsibility involved."

The volunteer signs a contract after he is screened which, although not legally binding, is a "serious commitment," Burcher said.

"I'm hurting for time right now," Cooper said, "but when I look at my schedule and decide to cut something, it won't be from Big Brothers. It'll probably be partying."

TIM McHENRY, freshman in journalism and mass communications, has been a Big Brother since September. His little brother is Eddie Smoot. Eddie is an 8-year-old third grader at Bluemont School.

McHenry said he came to K-State and when he found out he had a lot of extra time, he joined Big Brothers.

"I was watching too much TV. I wanted to get out and make myself useful," he said. "I thought of hospital volunteer work, but that just didn't sound right. I had worked with kids before when I coached softball and I really liked them. I realized that I had the most fun when I was around kids."

Eddie and Tim are good friends. They get together twice a week and usually once on the weekends. When you ask Eddie what he thinks of Tim, he jokes, "He's OK."

But seriously, Eddie values the time he spends with his Big Brother.

"He's somebody that cares for me, plays with me and he's just my friend.

"We go to the football games," Eddie said. "Sometimes we go to Stonehouse or the City Park. This winter when we couldn't get out, we played cards."

McHENRY VOICED the same feeling for Eddie.

"It's a two-way street. I need him too. Kids are the best quality friends you can have. Really. They're the most loyal," he said.

"Tim has been a wonderful Big Brother. The change in Eddie is unbelievable. Eddie's younger brother James is also in the program now. He just got his Big Brother and he's only 3 years old," Burcher said.

Although sometimes there is a waiting period before volunteers are placed, Burcher said, all volunteers get matched with a child.

"I can't imagine the day when we would have too many volunteers," she said.

LOVE IS...Rich Cooper and his little "brother" Eddie share an ice cream cone.

THE ATHLETE'S WAY

'I know I'll grow a lot'

Wilcox plans to join European basketball tour

By KENT GASTON
Sports Editor

The leading scorer on the K-State women's basketball team wants to get to know herself.

This summer, LeAnn Wilcox will undergo an extensive training program for just that purpose, but it's not a UFM or K-State class.

Sports

It's a European basketball tour with Athletes in Action, a team sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ International.

Athletes in Action (AIA) is a "Christian ministry team," Wilcox said. "It's a way of demonstrating to other people how Christ can affect you.

"I'm sure when they look and see how we're happy, they'll know there must be something there."

Wilcox said the most important part will be talking to the other players.

"I know I'll learn a lot," she said. "I don't think I'll change that much, but I'm looking forward to finding out more about me. I already am what I am, it's a matter of finding out what that is.

I'VE GOT a lot of questions, and I know the team will help me find some answers," she said.

However, she said she's a little scared when she thinks of playing with AIA, because "I don't know if I want to find out some of the answers. They might not be what I really expected."

The brochure for the tour lists four qualifications for participation:

—a personal relationship with Christ.

—international-level basketball skill.

—a desire to grow in relationship with Christ.

—a desire to learn how to effectively communicate Christ with others.

Wilcox said the No. 4 requirement was another source of anxiety.

"I've never had to express how my faith affects me like that," Wilcox said. "You come in contact every day with people who have their faith in Jesus as a big part of their lives, but I've never had to express it like that. I'm looking forward to seeing how I'll react to it all."

THE TEAM will have a training camp July 14-21, and then will see its first action in the Muggia International Tournament in Italy. It will then travel through Poland, Czechoslovakia and Russia until Aug. 28, playing "good ball against good teams," according to Wilcox.

Many of the games will be played on outdoor, concrete courts, and Wilcox said a friend already told her to avoid "diving after balls like you usually do.

"I'm going to have to open up a lot," she said. "I'll probably skin my knees, but I might skin my heart a little, too. It'll be good for me."

Wilcox' chance to play with AIA began came she went to Knoxville, Tenn. last month to try out for the U.S. Pan American Games team. Although she didn't make the cut, "everything turned out perfect.

"I kind of wanted to make it, but I was really happy when I didn't. I was thinking if I made the Pan Am team I'd never have a chance to play with AIA."

THE AIA COACH, Greg Hayes, an assistant men's coach at UCLA, was in Knoxville and immediately asked Wilcox to join the tour after finding out she'd been cut from the Pan American tryouts.

"I'm really excited about it," Wilcox said, especially because she already knows several of the 12 players, including several from UCLA.

"I'll have a chance to play basketball—something I love—but still keep it where it belongs in my life. I'll still know what's No. 1," she said.

The language barrier will make it impossible to talk to some audiences, but if there is no way to talk to spectators "we don't go down and discuss strategy at halftime. We go out and sing songs at halfcourt." Wilcox said.

Cindy Haugejord of Iowa, who played last year on AIA, told Wilcox that she'd be playing poorly, and by the end of the halftime singing session she'd realize in what perspective basketball should be kept.

"The thing I'm looking forward to most is when I get back, I'll be able to see if I've changed in the way I look at things." Wilcox said.

I'm not gonna come back a holy roller," she said. "But, I know I'll grow a lot. It's gonna affect me."

Women's basketball reception April 20

A reception honoring the K-State women's basketball team will be held at 7 p.m. Friday, April 20 in the Flint Hills Room of the K-State Union. Senior rings and letter jackets will be awarded.

The team completed one of its most successful seasons in 1978-79 with a 20-11 record and in the final 16 teams in AIAW tournament competition.

Tickets for the cheese and dessert buffet are $3 and will be on sale until April 17 in Room 110 of Ahearn Field House. The K-State basketball office's telephone number is 532-6970.

Hartman signs Ohio blue-chipper

K-State reached in and plucked out a plum on the initial day of basketball letter-of-intent signings Wednesday.

Coach Jack Hartman signed blue-chipper Billy Lewis, a 6-2 guard from Mt. Healthy, Ohio.

"It's a great way for us to begin our signing by attracting the No. 1 guard on our recruiting list," Hartman said.

Lewis was an all-Ohio, all-Cincinnati and all-district performer at Mt. Healthy, a suburb of Cincinnati. He was one of the top five vote-getters in Ohio's Mr. Basketball balloting.

During his senior year, the 195-pound Lewis averaged 23 points, 10.5 rebounds, shot 62 percent from the field and led his ballclub in steals and statistics while helping the high-scoring Owls to a 21-1 record and the district finals.

Lewis participated in a series of post-season all-star games, including the Mid-western Classic in Dayton, where he scored 16 points, added seven rebounds and four assists.

"I'm extremely excited," Hartman said about his first signee of 1979. "Billy is a very complete ballplayer. He's an exceptional jumper, has great shot selection, is an excellent passer and a natural leader."

The 'Cats had a lot of tough competition for Lewis. Before deciding on K-State, Lewis was approached by more than 200 schools during his senior year, including Indiana, Michigan State, Texas and Minnesota.

Old face with new title coaches K-State secondary

The defensive backfield on the K-State football squad will receive orders from a new coach this fall, but the coach's face will be familiar to many of the players.

Chuck Driesbach, who served three years as graduate assistant coach on the Wildcat football staff, has been promoted to defensive secondary coach, replacing Bobby Thompson. Thompson left K-State earlier this spring to head the football program at Fort Hays State University.

In 1976 and 1977, the 26-year-old Driesbach helped with the 'Cats' receiving crew, then aided the offensive line in 1978.

"Chuck is energetic, has a bright football mind and gets along tremendously with the players and coaches in our program," Head Coach Jim Dickey said. "We're delighted to add him to coaching staff, fulltime."

Before coming to Kansas State, the Doylestown, Pa. native was a standout receiver with Villanova University and the Philadelphia Bell of the now-defunct World Football League.

Bitter religious fighting continues

French plan withdrawal from Chad

PARIS (AP)—The central African nation of Chad, where thousands of people have been reported massacred since late February, is torn by decades of strife that pits Moslems from the north against Christians and animists in the south.

Reports reaching here from Jesuit priests in Chad say 10,000 people, nearly all of them Moslems, have been killed by Christians outraged by rumors of anti-Christian policies of a new Moslem-led government.

The vast mountainous desert in the north of the landlocked, sub-Saharan nation never was fully under government control, even before France ended its colonial rule in 1960.

A guerrilla movement known as the Chad National Liberation Front, or FROLINAT, has been active in the largely Moslem north since independence. Despite the presence of more than 2,000 French troops, FROLINAT guerrillas occupy more than three-fourths of Chad's 488,000 square miles.

France's announcement last month that it planned a phased withdrawal of its troops from Chad brought pleas from both sides for the French to leave the troops there as the only force that could provide even a minimum of order.

THE NATION is bordered by Libya on the north, Sudan on the east, the Central African Empire on the south and Niger on the west.

Only the Christian-and animist-dominated southern region, where most of the population lives, and the area around N'Djamena, the capital, have been free from guerrilla activity.

Animists believe everything in nature has a soul.

The guerrilla movement is rooted in the fierce desert warriors of the Moslem Toubou tribe in the Tibesti Mountains. No government troops have had access to the Tibesti region for 10 years.

For years the main guerrilla faction was led by Hissene Habre. But last summer he broke with the guerrillas and accepted an offer from Christian President Felix Malloum to form a government of reconciliation. Leadership of the main guerrilla movement fell to Goukouni Oueddei, chief of the Toubous.

The Malloum-Habre alliance, however, never really worked and friction between the two leaders finally erupted into violence in the capital.

Libya claims a large strip of the Tibesti border country, which may hold uranium and other mineral deposits. The claim has been supported at times by some FROLINAT factions, including the main force behind Oueddei.

Other "revolutionary" forces also fought the central government, and the line between them and desert bandits was not always clear.

Duck farm fires kills thousands of birds

AQUEBOGUE, N.Y. (AP)—Between 10,000 and 12,000 ducks were killed when fire dstroyed a duck farm in this Long Island town Wednesday, Riverhead fire chief Russ Fleischman said.

He said about 400 ducks were saved at Corwin's Duck Farm, where the fire broke out at 1 a.m.

Tentative allocations begin

Senate's scissors start snipping

By THE SGA STAFF

Two groups' budget requests were rejected and two others were postponed last night as Student Senate launched its annual tentative allocations marathon.

Senate upheld Finance Committee's recommendations to not fund the debate squad and cut funding to Consumer Relations Board (CRB).

Decisions on recommendations to cut in half Black Student Union funding and not fund Touchstone were postponed until later meetings.

Senate has scheduled six tentative allocations meetings to consider groups' budget requests and accept, reject or amend Finance Committee's recommendations.

Finance Committee decided on $275 monthly salaries for all social service directors, who are paid $250 per month this year. However, the committee recommended the CRB director be paid 10 months of the year instead of the current 11, leaving the yearly salary of $2,750 unchanged.

The reason for the change, according to committee member Mark Skinner, was the reduction in usage of the social services during the summer and vacation breaks.

Melanie Stockdell, CRB director, said many of the board's cases come up after school is out, so it has to remain open during those months.

"Put yourself in their (social services directors') places. Would you like to work two extra months without pay?" Marc Blanchard, engineering senator, said.

"Our proposal is to give them more to meet the cost of living during the time they're being paid for," Patrick Miller, committee chairman, said.

DEBATE SQUAD representative Ed Schiappa's efforts were fruitless as senate stood by Finance Committee's recommendation to not fund the group.

Debate squad asked senate for $4,000 to help defray costs of attending tournaments, in addition to $2,000 requested from the Arts and Sciences Council and $4,000 from the Department of Speech and the arts and sciences dean's office.

Schiappa said being on debate squad costs each member $100 to $200 each year for meals and materials, and prevents members from holding part-time jobs.

"Part of the problem is we can't recruit with a lack of funds," he said.

Schiappa said the process of persuading good high school debaters to come to K-State is much harder when there are no funds to work with.

Senate voted 20-15, with two abstentions, to uphold the committee's recommendation for debate squad.

AFTER ALMOST two hours of discussion, voting on Black Student Union's (BSU) tentative allocation was postponed.

Budget items stirring the most debate were state car expense, professional services and career planning.

BSU requested $335 for state car expense to attend two Big 8 council meetings and provide courtesy cars for the Big 8 Black Student Government Conference being hosted by K-State next year. When BSU presents its case April 26, it will separate the conference budget from the rest of its request.

Finance Committee recommended $90 to pay for one state car traveling to one council meeting, and one courtesy car for the K-State conference.

Isaac Turner, BSU president, said the two council meetings are part of the conference.

"You've made the commitment to host the conference and now you're trying to back down and make it as cheap a conference as possible," Turner said.

"It would make people think K-State is what they already think it is—a farm college with a bunch of rednecks," he said.

But committee members said they set a standard recommendation of funding one state car and two persons per meeting for all groups.

"I'd like to see you support the conference because we've already made the commitment," Greg Musil, student body president, said.

Miller said the $200 request for professional services was cut completely because the explanation given "read the same as career planning," and the committee thought it would be used for the same purposes.

Turner said career planning money is used to recruit students but professional services include photographers' services for brochures and displays, and light and sound personnel for the conference gospel show.

BSU received $800 this year for career planning,

UGB, UPC at odds over X-rated policy

By JOLENE HOSS
News Editor

X-rated movies have put the Union Governing Board (UGB) and the Union Program Council (UPC) at odds with one another.

UGB banned the Union's showing of X-rated movies a week ago, but amended that decision last night. UPC, in turn, asked for an appeal of the policy.

At the heart of the issue is UGB's April 6 decision "X-rated movies will not be shown in the K-State Union," which was amended to read, "X-rated movies will not be shown in the K-State Union by Union Program Council."

Seven members voted in favor of the amendment with one member abstaining. Shortly after it was passed, UPC Kaleidoscope coordinater asked for an appeal.

THE REASON for the appeal, Colburn said, was because UPC wasn't ready for the "surprise move" made last week by UGB.

"The policy was based on the guidelines of the Motion Picture Association of America. These ratings are for parents and the parental guidance of children under 17. From the Motion Picture Association standpoint, the ratings have almost no meaning to the people over the age of 17," Colburn said.

"UPC as a whole, not just the film committee, should be allowed to program as they see fit. We're not saying UGB should step back, but we feel that X-rated movies are a part of a well-rounded program," Irene Parsons, executive coordinator of UPC, said.

"The reasons we don't want to show X-rated films have been because they don't reflect positively on K-State or the Union," said Gene Atkinson, student member of UGOB.

"The purpose of the ban was to determine that the Union iiitself would not be presenting X-rated material," Marc Elkins, chairman of UGB, said.

Although the amendment limits the ban to scheduled UPC programs, groups or speakers who bring in portions of X-rated films also may be banned if the film is found to be in competition with a UPC program, Elkins said. The board has a policy that films in direct competition with UPC programs "cannot be held in the Union."

WHETHER A film would constitute "competition" or not would be determined by UPC, he said.

'Nuclear energy isn't Tinker Toy'; Carlin, Stephan tour Wolf Creek

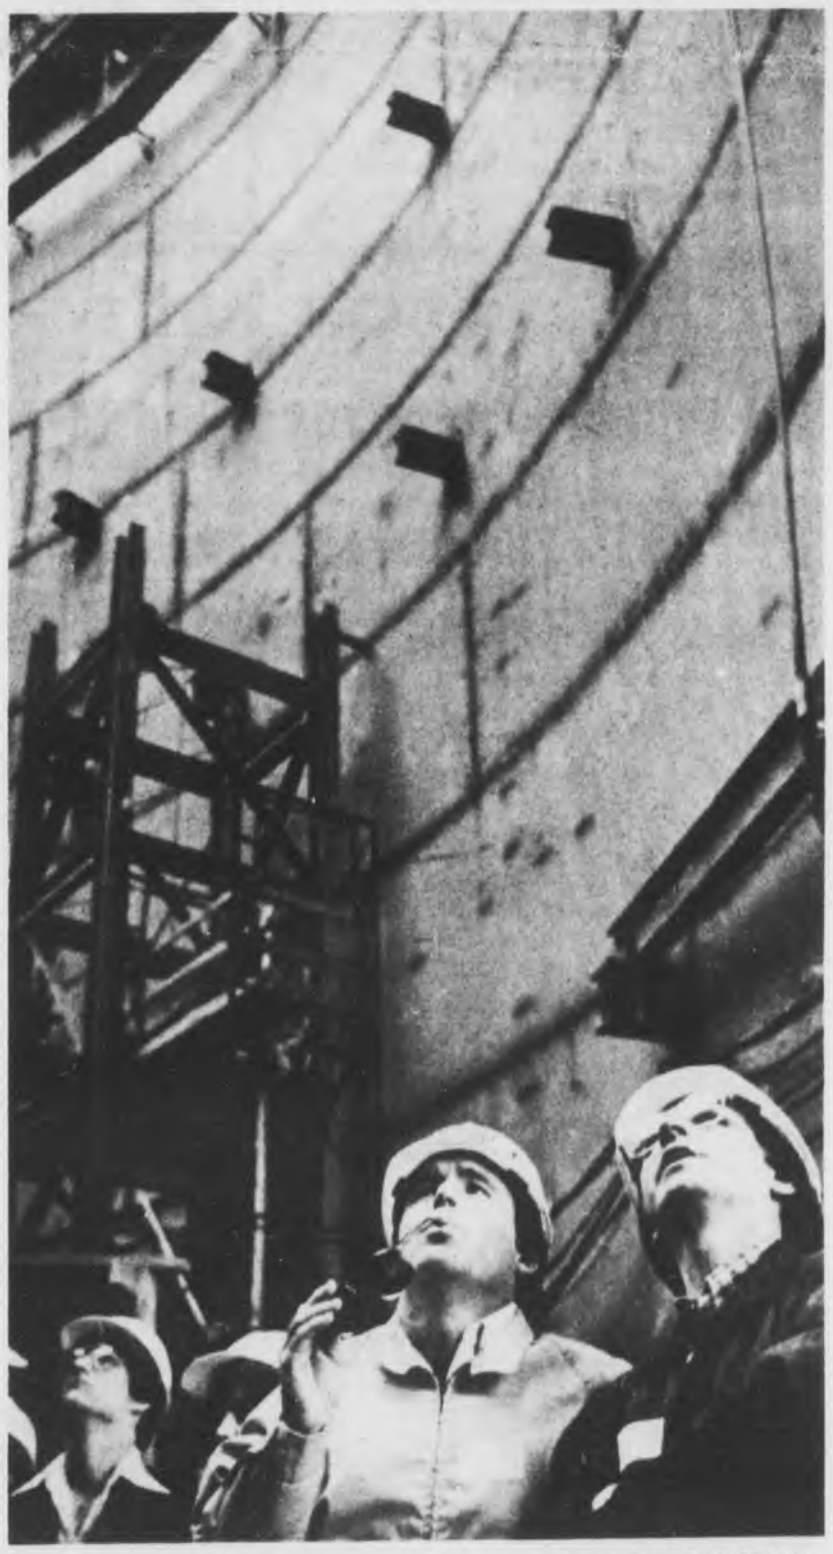
BURLINGTON (AP)—Gov. John Carlin and Attorney General Robert Stephan got their first on-site introduction to the atomic age Thursday by touring the $1.1 billion Wolf Creek nuclear power complex presently under construction in eastern Kansas.

The "field trip," as it was lightly termed by staff, was the first personal visit to the massive Wolf Creek project for either official. It was also the first trip by a governor to the construction site.

The Wolf Creek plant contains the first industrial nuclear reactor to be built in the state. The construction site is about 50 miles south of Topeka in Coffey County.

On everyone's mind—and freely discussed—was the recent accident at the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant in Pennsylvania. Company officials were quick to point out design differences they said would prevent a similar mishap in Kansas.

"Nuclear energy isn't a Tinker Toy and people have to be well-equipped in the field," Stephan said. "We also shouldn't react from hysteria, or from emotion, or some kind of mob reaction to nuclear energy."



CARLIN SAID he believed it was his "public duty" to get a first-hand look at the plant, the most controversial electrical generating facility ever built in the state.

"You know, you can talk and discuss (the plant), but it is difficult to have any feel for what is going on without coming down here," the governor said during a brief stop of his inspection of the complex which spans 10,500 acres, including a 5,000-acre lake that stores massive quantities of water used to cool the reactor.

"We just wanted to get acquainted with the facility and some of the efforts here," Carlin added.

Officials of Kansas Gas and Electric Company of Wichita and Kansas City Power and Light Company, principal owners of Wolf Creek, conducted the tour for Carlin and Stephan.

Accompanying the two state officials were members of their staffs, state Sen. Frank Gaines (D-Augusta), state Energy Director Joe King, and aides to legislative leaders, plus the wife of state Sen. Wint Winter (R-Ottawa).

Senate...

requested $500 for next year and received a recommendation of $275—a standard amount set by Finance Committee for all groups requesting money for recruitment.

"We came up with justification that each group should have an equal chance to expand. That's the only justification you can use," committee member John Martin said.

"We tried to make the justification that their groups (MEChA, a Chicano student group, and Native American Indian Student Body) are smaller so they need recruitment more," Miller said.

"Does that go to say we shouldn't recruit any more white students?" Turner said.

Turner said BSU brought about 150 prospective students to K-State this year with career planning money.

Veryl Switzer, associate dean for University Minority Affairs, said the minority student groups have played a vital role in recruiting minority students.

Asked about the possibility of BSU becoming self-sufficient, Turner responded that the group is a service organization and that time spent "begging funds" is time taken from performing services. He said they could raise some funds, but not become self-sufficient.

"Brochures are used for recruitment when the entire University should be doing the minority recruitment, but they don't," Blanchard said.

FINANCE COMMITTEE recommended senate not fund Touchstone, a literary arts magazine, partially because a new request for $800 would be given to senate. Touchstone's original request was for $200.

That the magazine is available to non-students and is not close to being self-sufficient are other reasons for the recommendation, committee members said.

"I think Touchstone has made an honest effort to become self-sufficient," Beverly Matherne, faculty adviser to Touchstone, said.

The Touchstone staff planned to partially pay for printing this spring's issue with money received from previous sales, but found out the money cannot be spent until the next fiscal year which begins July 1.

Students have shown an interest in X-rated films, said Kevin Kneisley, UPC Feature Films coordinator. He said 2,861 people attended "The Opening of Misty Beethoven," which he said proved that X-rated films were serving the students.

In surveys taken during the weekend showing of the Marx Brothers films, about 58 percent of the audiences favored the showing X-rated films in the Union, Kneisley said. About 20 percent of those surveyed were against the showing of X-rated films, with the remainder of no opinion, he said. About 750 people were involved in the survey.

"No formal survey (by UGB) has been done" concerning student interest in X-rated films, Elkins said in response from a question from the audience.

"We have a responsibility to serve the University as a whole," Elkins said. "We are here to serve the students. At the same time those interests must be balanced."

If the students show an "overwhelming" interest for X-rated films as they did for Nichols, the board would reconsider the decision, said David Foster, Student Senate represenative on UGB. Otherwise, the decision should stand, he said.

The meeting adjourned with no compromise between UPC and UGB. However, Elkins called for a joint committee composed of four UGB and four UPC members to decide a policy and its justification regarding X-rated movies in the Union.

Ugandans loot as Amin loyalists scoot

KAMPALA, Uganda—A frenzy of looting swept Kampala Thursday and thousands of joyous Ugandans rallied in a city square to cheer the fall of Idi Amin. But the defeated dictator, broadcasting from somewhere in eastern Uganda, insisted the country was still his.

"We have got our soldiers controlling the country," Amin declared. His troops were reported streaming toward the Kenyan border in a chaotic rout, however, fleeing the Tanzanian forces and Ugandan rebels who captured Kampala late Tuesday.

Residents of towns east of the capital said the ragged soldiers were looting, harassing local residents at gunpoint, stealing cars and retreating beyond Jinja, the city 50 miles east of here said to be Amin's new headquarters, to Mbale and Tororo near Kenya.

A gunfight at a Jinja bus station reportedly left 15 soldiers dead.

"All Ugandans who love their motherland must from now on help find Idi Amin wherever he is. He deserves the gallows," the victorious exiles in command of Kampala radio declared Thursday.

It accused Amin, whose eight-year rule was marked by braggadocio, of being "afraid to say where he is," and it gave his officers two hours to surrender "or they will be dealt with accordingly."

Does Spandau hold the wrong Hess?

BERLIN—A British surgeon's claim that the man thought to be Rudolph Hess is an imposter adds a bizarre chapter to the saga of a lonely old man who has spent nearly half his life in Spandau Prison here for service to Adolph Hitler.

His wife and son rejected the claim Thursday.

In a book to be published next month, Dr. Hugh Thomas, 43, formerly a member of the four-nation medical team at Spandau, says he has no idea who the prisoner is.

"What I do know is that he cannot be Hess. It is essential that a surgeon...with the requisite experience should examine the prisoner as soon as possible before it is too late," he said.

Hess will be 85 on April 26.

The man jailed as Hess, who as Nazi Germany's deputy Reichsfuehrer was Hitler's closet comrade, is serving a life term for "waging aggressive war."

Wichita Falls declared disaster area

WICHITA FALLS, Texas—President Carter declared this ravaged city a disaster area Thursday, and city officials instituted a dusk-to-dawn curfew and a price-freeze in the aftermath of one of the most devastating tornadoes in the nation's history.

Meanwhile, crews searching the 8-mile-long section damaged by Tuesday night's twister here recovered the body of a 43rd victim Thursday, identified as Arden Turner, 33, of Wichita Falls.

But they later boosted the count to 44, saying a woman's body identified as that of Catheryne McKee, had been overlooked in the counting.

And while the recovery work went on, new tornadoes Thursday damaged several homes at Steens, Miss., and the National Weather Service said tornadoes were spotted at Cave Spring and Rome, Ga., and Canton, Miss. No injuries were reported. Minor injuries were reported in an early morning tornado at Florence, Ala.

Pilot uses moon to avert crash

INGLEWOOD, Calif.—Airline pilot Harvey Gibson said Thursday he regained his bearings by focusing on the moon after his TWA Boeing 727 jet went into a double roll and a five-mile dive.

During the fall last week over Michigan, Gibson testified, he became disoriented and "the altimeter was unwinding so fast it wasn't possible to read." The jet broke the sound barrier during its dive.

After rolling twice, the 727 dropped at least 25,000 feet before the crew was able to get it under control. The plane landed safely at Detroit about an hour later.

Gibson, testifying at a National Transportation Safety Board hearing, said he heard a "slight buzz" just before the jet went into the roll. Three or four seconds after the buzz, the pilot said, the plane tilted to the right and he recalled telling his co-pilot: "The airplane is going to roll."

U.G.B.
Union Governing Board

UGB, is a group of ten students, three faculty members, and one alum, who participates directly in the management and operation of the K-State Union. The board works with the staff to see that the Union is the kind of operation K-State should have.

If you are the kind of person who would enjoy the chance to make the Union a better place and have a few hours to devote to a worthwhile interest, come in and fill out an application. We can use your help.

Applications for the five positions may be picked up in the Union Directors Office and are due by noon, April 13.

School sports 'amateur'?

Sports plays an important role in school—too important.

From college sports to Little League baseball games, winning a game often matters more than scholastic achievement.

The All-American attitude, "Thou shalt win," is emphasized before the kids get a chance to enjoy playing a game for the fun of it. Anyone who has attended a Little League baseball game knows parents are often responsible for this unhealthy attitude.

The kids could be out there having a good time as well as learning winning really isn't everything, if they weren't unnerved by parents yelling "Kill 'em Billy." Then later, dinnertime analyses of their every move don't contribute to a healthy attitude toward winning.

In one junior high school, eighth grade football players are often held back a year. Why? Because next year, they will have more experience and be larger and stronger, in other words, they will be more valuable to the team.

What is really upsetting is this isn't done under the table by school administrators, but at the request of parents.

One of these parents is even a superintendent of schools, Douglas Griffin.

"We believe sports are an important part of a boy's education here," he said. "A boy learns a lot out on the playing field. It's like life. You learn to kill or be killed out there."

According to the Wall Street Journal, this is a fairly common practice in small towns in Alabama, Georgia, Texas and Pennsylvania, even though educators deplore it.

One boy, who was held back at his father's request said:

"I think I've got a lot better chance of getting a college scholarship now."

Part of the problem could be alleviated if parents were denied the right to hold their children back. But that wouldn't attack the core problem, which is the emphasis placed on winning in "extra-curricular" activities.

If colleges and universities started treating sports as an extra-curricular activity, instead of letting athletes regard school as an extra-curricular activity, then youths wouldn't be as eager to sacrifice education for a career in college sports.

No one can honestly say college sports are amateur, despite their offical name.

Anyone who receives a full athletic "scholarship" is being paid for playing sports, and is actually a professional.

The Random House Dictionary defines "scholarship" as "1) the qualities or attainments of a scholar. 2) money awarded to a student to help pursue his or her studies."

Until K-State offers a major in football, basketball, etc., players who devote most of their time and energy to sports are professionals. If you believe players are being paid to pursue a degree, then ask yourself how many students would receive academic scholarships with the G.P.A. that some athletes possess.

It is time universities decide whether they exist to educate or serve as a stepping stone to professional sports.

Aggieville alternatives

It's another Saturday night. Bobby Bookworm, eighth-year student in pre-veterinary medicine, is catching up on some homework. Suzy Socialess, graduate in general, is washing her socks at the laundry.

And down in Aggieville, other K-Staters are throwing away their lives—drinking beer and dancing disco. It happens every weekend night.

Why would anyone wait in line for a half hour to get inside a smoke-filled, strobe-lighted stuffy cubicle? Why pay $1 ($10 if you're from Fort Riley) to listen to the same awful music week after week? Why are thousands of students wasting their nights on flinging their bodies back and forth? Is K-State really that uncultured?

It's not K-State. It's Kansas. There's just nothing to do.

"Must be a boring place with that flat land and dry weather," cries the New Englander.

But, Kansas is really not as boring as Dorothy and Toto. There are things to do on a weekend night other than dance disco. You gotta have some imagination.

FOR INSTANCE, Saturday night is the ideal time to go tornado watching. It's a little more difficult after the sun sets, but just listen for the freight train. Best spots in town are at Top of the World and on the roof of Kedzie Hall. Take a camera along with some fast film to stop the action. And be sure to bring a tripod.

Another alternative to disco disgust is to have a candlelit picnic inside of Nichols Gym. It's illegal and all that, but no one will ever know.

Better take that back. Last time I was there, some guy with a three-piece suit and glasses was playing with his Tonka Toy bulldozer. Said he was an administrator of some sort, but promised he wouldn't turn me in if I didn't turn him in. Whoops...I hear the guy's being shipped off to Iowa State.

If you're lucky enough to own a car, you can have a ball of fun some Saturday night. Drive back and forth along the busiest street in town all night with your headlights off. See how many people blink their high beams, toot their horns or yell profanities out the window. Kansas World Book of records is 3, 1 and 2, respectively, in a 5 hour period on a Saturday night in downtown Wamego.

ANOTHER ALTERNATIVE is to rent a bullhorn. Then truck on down to where the line is forming for "China Syndrome" and yell out, "Jack Lemon gets killed in the end."

Run quickly and you can still catch the first showing of "The Deer Hunter." Again, grab the bullhorn, only this time yell out, "Nick kills himself in the end." Whew, better run quicker for that one.

Perhaps the best time you can have on a weekend night will involve renting a tent and sleeping bag. Yes, it's time to camp out again. But no, it's not for tickets to Billy Joel or Jack's boys.

It's for a Monday morning parking place in the Union lot. Park your car in the middle of the lot around 10 p.m. Saturday. Set up the tent, light the lantern and it's time for a party.

The most fun will be when the campus police show up with their 357 Magnums, wondering what the hell you're doing.

The big problem may be that a fad could develop. All the Aggieville diehards may decide they want to join in on the fun at the Union parking lot. Ugh! More disco.

Well, never mind.

Solar power the answer

Editor,

Who's asking "coal or nuclear," a clarifying point:

Solar "power" can be broken into a number of different supply forms. One of these, low-grade heat, capable of filling one-third of our country's energy addiction, already can be collected at lower cost than either coal or nuclear-resistance heating. It is only solar electricity that needs an investment in mass production (by U.N., DOE and ERDA figures, only half the cost of one reactor), and a few years of research in storage systems to take away any promise left to coal or nuclear.

Sharon Buckner's editorial ("Are you ready for a revolution?"), should be read by the utility planners. They are faced with the silicon chip (solar cell) in the same way slide-rule companies faced the pocket calculator only a few years ago. Solar cells, by confident Department of Energy projections, will offer a kilowatt at half the cost of coal or nuclear by 1985. By the time Wolf Creek comes on line, it will be obsolete. The only people who are still asking "coal or nuclear?" are those with an investment in centralized systems. We might as well ask "gas lights or oil lamps?"

Arafat hurting peace game

Editor,

Perhaps it is not useful to recount the history of the Palestinians' problem in Israel. I am certain this generation of Arab and Israeli could not agree on who fired the first shots of the Arab-Jewish conflict in 1947 or at whose urging and with what promises the Palestinian Arabs fled Israel at the conclusion of that war.

But I think both Arab and Jew can agree on the facts of the situation now. The members of the Organization of Arab Students proclaim to the K-State community the only peaceful solution to the Mideast's problems will be when "Moslem, Christian and Jew alike can live and work in peace" in Israel, and Palestine (Mr. Mahadin's letter, March 30).

Prime Minister Begin and President Sadat repeatedly have expessed the same view for the ultimate solution to the Middle East animosities. Both have staked their political futures, their lives and their countries' futures on this view.

However, the official voices of Arab peoples to the press as well as the United Nations repeatedly have told the world the only legitimate voice of the Palestinian people is the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO). Unfortunately for the cause of peace in the Mideast, the voice of the PLO is not one for peaceful coexistence among Arab, Jew and Christian.

Yassar Arafat often has announced to the world he will not rest until the Israelis are driven into the sea. Unfortunately for the entire world these have not been idle threats. Unfortunately the Christians of Lebanon have learned what Arafat means by peaceful coexistence.

It is too bad the voices of peace so eloquently expressed in our university newspaper are not the official voices of the Palestinian people. I believe Begin and Sadat would have little difficulty in negotiating peaceful coexistence with the Organization of Arab Students.

If the views of Arab students expressed in the Collegian are sincere and truly reflect Arab feelings in the Mideast, why has official representatives of the Palestinian people as well as of the other Arab peoples refused to join the discussions for peace?

Why do the Arabs who want "peaceful coexistence with Jews and Christians alike" allow Arafat to destoy all possibilities for peace?

Chances for room search 'slim' at K-State; not so in KU dorms

By MIKE CORN
Collegian Reporter

Chances for a room-to-room search of residence halls at K-State, similar to one at the University of Kansas during spring break, are "pretty slim" according to Housing Department officials.

Housing maintenance workers and other staff members of residence halls enter rooms without permission normally for emergency purposes only, Thomas Frith, director of Housing, said.

"We definitely would not go in to search the rooms," he said.

Concern about searches came after an incident at KU, when a safety check of rooms in the Joseph R. Pearson Hall was made during spring break.

Initially KU dorm staff were checking for safety hazards. However, during the search marijuana plants, alcohol and road signs were found.

THE ITEMS were not confiscated but a list was compiled. Students objected to the search because they had not been notified prior to the search.

Frith said he did not visualize such an incident happening at K-State. He added that a check is made of the rooms during breaks to be sure heaters are set at the proper temperature.

The check is made as an energy and money saving measure, Frith said, and added that personnel do not enter rooms unannounced except in the cases of emergency.

Frith said if marijuana, alcohol or street signs were found in any of the rooms, he would suggest to the staff they talk with the resident about it.

Two directors of residence halls said they don't make routine checks of the rooms, but did say that they would take some type of action if housing policy infractions were seen.

"I don't make it a practice to go in rooms for a look-see," Deborah Collins, director of West Hall, said. "But if I am there and I find something, I will confront the student about it."

REBECCA JONES, director of Ford Hall, said staff members don't make routine checks either, but added that if something illegal were found, some type of action would be taken through legal channels.

"It would not result in the automatic search of the rest of the rooms," Jones said. "We're not policemen."

If a room is entered and the resident is not there, members of the maintenance staff are asked to leave a note informing the resident that they had been there, Frith said.

"Maintenance personnel are asked to leave a note. We have never asked staff members to do the same, but it may be a good idea," Frith said.

At Ford Hall, if a room must be entered without permission from the occupant, Jones said at least two staff members must go in the room and then inform the residents they had entered. Frith said the housing department insists that at least two staff members go in the room, when permission has not been given by the resident.

Rep. Mike Glover (D-Lawrence), in connection with the incident at KU, has asked the attorney general for an opinion on whether university officials can legally search dormitories when the students are absent and when a search warrant has not been issued. The opinion is expected later this month.

Artist to speak on watercolors

Gordon Zahradnik president of the Kansas Watercolor Society and professor of Art at Sterling College, will provide his insights on his watercolor and ceramic work at 12:30 p.m., today in the Union art Gallery.

Zahradnik, whose work has been on display in the Union since April 2, has exhibted his work at numorous state, local and regional art shows, exhibits and galleries.

He currently has pieces displayed at the Sandzen Memorial Art Gallery in Lindsborg, the Hays Public Library and at the Barton County Community College.

A graduate of Fort Hays State, Zahradnik has done graduate work at Fort Hays and Bernidge State in Minnesota.

He has also served as an art director for the Great Bend Public Schools, and taught at the Army Dependent School in Frankfurt, Germany, Zahradnik and his wife now make up the art faculty at Sterling College.

Foerster memorial planned for April 19

A memorial service for Mark Foerster will be held at 5 p.m. April 19 at All-Faiths Chapel.

Foerster was the son of Enell and Bernd Foerster and the brother of Kent Foerster, senior in pre-law, political science and geography. Bernd Foerster is professor and dean of the College of Architecture and Design.

Foerster, 19, died in his sleep April 7, reportedly of a seizure. He was attending St. Cloud State University in Minnesota and was working as an intern for U.S. Representative Richard Nolan.

A Mark Foerster Congressional Internship Fund has been established and contributions may be made in that name to the St. Cloud State University Foundation, Inc., St. Cloud, Minnesota, 56301.

The family has requested that no flowers be sent.

Passport to Adventure

Children learn self-trust

By SUE PFANNMULLER
Collegian Reporter

As the sun sinks below the horizon, 12 exhausted youngsters circle the blazing campfirè, mesmerized by the flames. It's been a long day, full of new people, new places and new experiences.

Pow-wow is the last thing before bed every night. A time for singing and sharing, and a time to unwind.

That morning, the school bus sat in the school parking lot empty and ready for the adventure to begin. Then, they began to arrive; parents and kids loaded down with duffel bags, musical instruments, books and binoculars.

The air was sparked with anticipation. The ground was quickly covered with the contents of each camper's duffel bag spilled for inspection by the chiefs—the adult leaders of the expedition. Campers carefully repacked their gear while parents, standing in the background, fought their impulses to interfere.

THE TRANSFER of responsibility from the parents to the kids had already begun. And by the end of two weeks, parents will be surprised how their children, who balked at taking out the garbage, have begun to change.

These 12 fourth, fifth and sixth graders and their parents have committed themselves to nine weeks of growth and change by involvement in Passport to Adventure—an intense program of group and individual counseling designed for kids who are not working up to their potential.

They may be excessively shy, or the neighborhood bully, have problems in school work or making friends. Whatever the specific problem, they're kids getting nowhere fast.

Passport is a program designed to break the cycle of failure. Twelve boys or girls and three chiefs, who are trained counselors, go out into the wilderness for three two-week sessions with a five-day period at home in between sessions. The location depends on the weather and what activities are planned.

"We try to vary the location and the activities of each two-week session," Dave Verscheldon, a former chief, said. Although the kids are all from Kansas, the trips are always outside of the state, he said. "When the kids get away from familiar surroundings, they're much more conducive to change."

It's also more exciting and makes it unlikely that their parents could come get them if they weren't liking it, he said. They know they have to stick it out.

DURING THE three sessions, the youngsters are given progressively larger amounts of responsibility, Trish Otto, a former chief, said.

The kids are divided into three committees the first day, Otto said.

The budget committee keeps track of all expenses, the food committee plans all the meals and does the major grocery shopping, which involves several hundred dollars and can take up to three or four hours to complete. The activities committee is in charge of planning the hikes, contacting rangers, discussing trails and different ways of handling trail hazards such as snakes.

On the first trip, they get a lot of help from the chiefs, Otto said, but on the second trip, they are more responsible. "The changes in these kids are sometimes very dramatic," she said.

By giving the child increased amounts of responsibility their self-image begins to improve as they realize how much they really can do, Otto said. By trusting them (the chiefs), they begin to trust themselves, she said.

"You have to have faith in the kids to let them make their own mistakes," she said. "Sometimes the problem would seem so simple in our eyes, but we let them figure it out. Often they would outdo us and come up with a better solution and sometimes they wouldn't find one for several days."

IT'S DEFINITELY not a one-way street—the chiefs grow, too.

"Being around kids makes you straighten out your act," Verscheldon said. "You have to question your own values when you're trying to change someone else's."

"It's draining and demanding in every way," Otto said, which is why not many chiefs last more than a year.

"I got in touch with the child in me and learned how to play. When your child comes alive, you can begin to relate to how it feels to be 12 years old. We cried together and bled together," she said.

There is a parent-education component which is an important part of the whole program, June Creswell, Passport's community service director, said. The parents involved meet weekly to discuss better ways of communicating with their children, new problem-solving methods, listening skills and to share their experiences with parents who are having similar problems, she said.

If the child comes back to the same environment, the changes in him might not last for long, Creswell said. The parents have to be willing to change, too.

THE PASSPORT program was started in the early 1970s at Saint Fancis Boy's Home in Salina, in an effort to prevent youths having to go to treatment centers. The first cases were court referred juveniles, Creswell said. It was soon discovered kids in their early teens were already set in their patterns of behavior. She said, it was very hard to see any changes.

"The age was lowered to nine-year-old fourth graders and we found them much easier to work with," Creswell said. With the younger age group, we can catch pproblems before they become permanent, she said.

The program is now operating in Salina, Wichita, Hutchinson, Topeka, Emporia, Liberal and northwestern Kansas. She said they approached the Manhattan school board, but have never been accepted.

Slumping 'Cats continue Big 8 play

Hit and miss—that's how the K-State baseball team's first month of play has been.

The baseball team opened the season with solid hitting, chalking up 12 straight wins. Recently, however, the hitting has subsided and the 'Cats have lost eight of their last 10 games.

While the K-State defense and pitchers continue to perform well, holding Nebraska to five runs in 14 innings Monday, the 'Cats refuse to capitalize on the few walks and hits they get.

Although Nebraska gave up nine hits during the doubleheader, K-State only scored once and left 16 men on base in the 2-0, 3-1 loss.

"To win in this game, you've got to have good defense, pitching and hitting. But they've got to be together," Coach Dave Baker said. "Whenever our pitchers hold the other team to two runs, we've got to score.

"Right now, our hitting is just a mental block," he said.

Freshman Don Waller, who last pitched April 3 against Emporia State, leads the K-State pitching squad with a 4-0 record. He is followed by sophomore Tom Harvey (3-2), Mike Wright (2-2) and Mark Harrison (2-0.)

K-STATE opened Big 8 play April 6 by splitting a doubleheader with the KU Jayhawks, followed by the losses to Nebraska. But, those games don't count in the Big 8 playoff contention.

The Big 8 this year is split into Eastern and Western Divisions, with two teams from each division earning playoff berths. Only league games count toward the playoffs.

In the Western Division, K-State and Colorado stand at 1-3, while Oklahoma and Oklahoma State are 2-2. Nebraska, the only undefeated Big 8 team, leads the Eastern Division with a 4-0 mark, followed by Missouri, Iowa State and Kansas all tied at 2-2.

Hello-o-o-o-o wrestling fans!

Tension, drama, excitement, head-to-head combat, victorious champions gloating over vanquished foes.

That's All Star Wrestling.

It's a sport which has been neglected in the press, and it's high time someone do something about it.

You can talk all you want about such boring games as Michigan State vs. Indiana State in NCAA basketball, but I'll take a Texas Death Match between Bruiser Bob Sweetan and Andre the Giant every time.

The Super Bowl, with Terry Bradshaw passing for two zillion yards, pales in comparison to the spinning toe hold of Dory Funk, Jr. on Handsome Harley Race.

Seriously, it's scary. Real people pay real money to watch these guys act like they're wrestling. It's an incredible comment on our good ol' American mentality.

GO DOWN to the magazine store and take a look at the wrestling magazines. There must be a dozen different kinds. In fact, the number of wrestling magazines is only surpassed by the flesh magazines, which may be another comment on our mentality.

These magazines have fascinating action photos and intriguing ads which promote such American ideals as .22 calibre submachine guns, your very own German Luger and posters of scantily-clad female wrestlers scratching and biting each other. Great.

The trouble is, the wrestlers are laughing at themselves—all the way to the bank.

A former Collegian staffer interviewed Bulldog Bob Brown recently at one of these sporting masterpieces. Bulldog makes something like $55,000 a year, armed only with an eighth-grade education and a vicious hammerlock.

ALL-STAR Wrestling also strays from the usual high school-college-professional progression. Believe me, no high school wrestler works out extra hours in hopes of someday becoming the next Colonel Buck Robley.

The Iowa State and Oklahoma State wrestling programs spend about .000000001 percent of their time thinking about pro wrestling.

One thing I'll commend, howeer, is the announcer Bill Kirshner. He's easily the most exciteable human being, or else he'd constantly sleep through the matches.

And, professional wrestling offers some aspects which should be adapted to other sports. It would be interesting to have wrestling-style pre-game predictions and confrontations in pro basketball.

For instance, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Artis Gilmore should talk with Brent Musberger at the same time and tell how they're going to rip each other's hair out and break each other's arms.

It would not only draw in All-Star Wrestling fans, but it would help save ailing pro basketball.

Eleventy krillion old ladies would come to every game and yell for blood.

Tracksters go south for Norman meet

While most track teams use weekdays to practice for weekend competition, the rash of bad weather since the start of the outdoor season has forced the K-State track teams, especially in the field events, to use the meets to get in shape.

Both the K-State men's and women's track teams travel to Norman, Okla., today for the John Jacobs Invitational. The meet will be the first chance the women have had to compete against other Big 8 schools, while the men contend with a 15-team field including Oklahoma, Oklahoma State and a number of Texas schools.

"If we both have good days, the title should be between Oklahoma and ourselves," Assistant Coach Jerome Howe said of the men's team. K-State defeated Oklahoma at the Sooner Indoor Relays and an indoor dual this year.

Both Mike Ross, the men's coach, and Barry Anderson, the women's coach, agree that the bad weather has hurt their teams.

Akers signs 2 area recruits

K-State women's basketball coach Judy Akers Thursday announced the signing of two area standouts and the addition of junior Michelle Campbell to the scholarship ranks.

Shannon Huffman, a 5-10 forward from Kapaun-Mt. Carmel in Wichita and Angie Taylor, a 5-9 guard from Central High School in Kansas City, Mo. have signed letters-of-intent.

"I feel fortunate to have signed one of the top guards and one of the top forwards in this area," Akers said.

Huffman, a member of the all-state 5A second team, averaged 14 points a game last year while Taylor scored 17 points a game for Central.

Crosswalk study has positive effect

The pedestrian crosswalk at Mid-Campus Drive and Anderson Avenue has been the scene of a number of automobile-pedestrian collisions in the past few months.

As a result, the Riley County Police Department ran a selective enforcement program on the crosswalk to increase awareness of the situation, Larry Woodyard, operations commander for RCPD, said. The selective enforcement began the last week of February and ran through March.

"Initially, the first-week violations were quite high, but by the end of the fifth week there weren't any violations," Woodyard said.

There was a total of 38 violations issued during the five-week enforcement period, Woodyard said. Of those 38 violations, 33 were vehicle violations and the remainder pedestrian violations, he said. Five verbal warnings were given when there wasn't sufficient cause to fine the person, he said.

"Since that time, this has been incorporated into a routine selective-reinforcement program that would be similar to that in a school zone, or a high accident area," Woodyard said.

"I think, probably, our immediate effectiveness was positive. How long it will last, I don't know," he said.

As a result of the study, City Engineer Jerry Petty has recommended that flasing yellow lights with warning signs be installed at the intersectuon on either side of Anderson Avenue.

Gerritz's retirement to bring regrouping, new administrator

By CAROLE WRIGHT
Contributing Writer

K-State is losing a dean, but gaining an assistant vice president.

With Ellsworth Gerritz, dean of Admissions and Records, retiring July 1, K-State administrators decided to eliminate the position. Instead, the office of Admissions and Records, Student Financial Assistance and New Student Programs will be grouped under the same administrative branch, said John Chalmers, vice president for academic affairs.

The branch will be headed by a new assistant vice president for academic affairs. The grouping of the three departments has been discussed for the past six months, Chalmers said.

A regrouping of the departments will prompt better student retention and academic advising, he said.

Presently the departments are separated, as well as responsibilities within admissions and records, Gerritz said. By combining the three offices, the adminsitration hopes to "better coordinate" the duties.

Upon Gerritz's suggestion, his position will, upon his retirement, not be filled with another dean, but will be converted into an assistant vice presidency to help coordinate new student orientations, financial aids, newly admitted students and a new student information system.

IN ADDITION to these duties, the new assistant vice president will be in charge of working with academic deans to improve academic advising and student retention, according to Chalmers.

He said he hopes to alleviate past administrative problems with separate branches by grouping the departments for a better coordinated effect.

"Basically, there isn't going to be any change in the number of administrative positions. We're dealing with admission of students under one branch," he said.

The added responsbility of a student information system, which won't be ready for another year, will involve containing data on students, including all test scores from high school through college and also records of all the alumni, he said.

Because there is an increase of students seeking financial aid, Chalmers said this program would go promptly to Admissions and Records so the administration can deal with the excessive financial load.

"Financial aid has expanded so enormously that this has to be coordinated directly to admissions. Basically, government grants have expanded to students of middle-income families," he said.

"Once they raised the maximum level, it made more students eligible. We're going to be processing more applications for students coming to K-State."

CHALMERS SAID said he believes the grouping of the three divisons will create impact for the entire admission of students and the transtion of students from high school to K-State.

"It will prepare students better for what the University is, what the University expects from them and what they can expect from the University," he said.

"It will lead to improved advising of students, and with improved advising, a larger number of students achieve their educational goals—that is a higher retention rate. None of these things happen over night. So we'll have to find the right person for leadership."

The process of setting up a search committee to hire the new assistant vice president is underway, Chalmers said. The search committee, headed by Chalmers, will involve faculty, some administrators from these subgroups and one student selected by Greg Musil, student body president.

Fund debate

Drug Ed, FONE fight continues tonight; among six groups to face budget threats

By MARY JO PROCHAZKA
SGA Editor

Inflation and declining enrollment go back into the ring tonight for round two of Student Senate's tentative allocations.

Finance Committee Chairman Patrick Miller has scheduled five sessions for senate to decide on a budget distributing 1979-80 student activity fees. All but two of 24 groups requesting funding want more money than allotted them this year, but an enrollment decline means fewer dollars to allocate. Six groups will be considdered tonight.

Two groups, Drug Education Center and Touchstone, could be fighting for their existence while FONE's budget wuld be increased by Finance Committee recommendations.

Additional student dollars for FONE, however, hinges on Drug Ed's demise.

Finance Committee recommended senate not fund Drug Ed and increase FONE's requested budget to include a drug crisis coordinator's position. The committee also recommended that FONE receive more money for advertising, equipment and subscriptions than requested if Drug Ed is dropped and the new FONE position begun.

FONE Director Jim Bartlett also requested funding for the 10-month salary of a community fund-raising coordinator.The committee is recommending senate fund the salary for five months and have FONE justify the need for the rest of the salary next spring.

Touchstone magazine, which received a $0 recommendation from Finance Committee, will be up for debate again after a decision about funding was postponed last Thursday.

Staff members of the literary arts magazine increased their budget request from $200 to $800, largely for printing expenses.

Committee members said their recommendation was made because the magazine is available to non-students, it's not becoming self-sufficient and because a new request would be presented.

The University Learning Network (ULN) would receive everything requested except the assistant coordinator's salary if the committee recommendations are followed.

Brad Brunson, ULN coordnator, requested a $250 monthly assistant coordinator's salary to be paid 11 months each year. Brunson's salary is paid through the Center for Student Development (CSD).

"The assistant coordinator's salary has been $2,200 (yearly) since 1973, yet his duties have more than tripled," Brunson said.

FINANCE Committee recommended the salary be kept at $200 per month to be paid for 10 months. This reduces the yearly amount to $2,000.

A $40 increase for a work-study salary was requested by Maxine Lentz, director of Women's Resource Center (WRC).

The committee rejected the request leaving the yearly budget of $750 unchanged. Lentz's salary is also paid through CSD.

Not only was a salary request denied for the Infant and Child Care Center, but Finance Committee is recommending senate decrease the amount it pays.

Murray Krantz, associate professor of family and child development, requested senate pay the entire $400 monthly salary of a graduate assstant, instead of $300 a month senate currently funds.

Finance Committee recommended senate fund the position at $275 per month—the uniform amount set for all director's salaries.

Senate will meet at 6 p.m. in the K-State Union Big 8 Room.

Concert turns into riot; Wichita police jail 88

WICHITA (AP)—Police Chief Richard LaMunyon said Monday that there are "some allegations that concern" him but he believes his men acted properly during the early stages of a riot Sunday that resulted in 64 injuries and 88 arrests.

"The situation was very chaotic," he told a news conference. "No one in the park saw everything that happened. But let me make it clear, the police department is not going to be a scapegoat here."

THE CHIEF said it was too early to determine the validity complaints about misconduct that allegedly occurred as police spread out from the park to move the rock concert audience and others out of the neighborhood.

People have complained that they were ordered out of restaurants, and arrested on their front lawns and in their cars.

LaMunyon said the riot began when police asked people—including some members of a motorcycle gang—to move their cars which were parked illegally.

The chief contended that the park was was inadequate to handle the 3,500 persons who attended the concert, that too much alcohol, drugs and beer was being consumed and that law enforcement agenices lacked the manpower to handle such a disturbance.

AT LEAST 60 complaints were filed by early Monday afternoon with the police department, LaMunyon said. Most were general allegations concerning officers from law enforcement agencies other than his own, he added.

About 500 police officers, 300 of them from the city, were called in to handle the threehour disturbance that a veteran officer termed the worst rioting in the city's history. Sedgwick County deputies and Highway Patrolmen were also called to the scene.

Figures released by LaMunyon showed that 39 officers and 25 concert goers were injured at Herman Hill Park. Four persons were hospitalized, but none was in serious condition.

Spokesmen for several Wichita hospitals said 29 persons, including nine law enforcement officers, were treated and released.

Police arrested a total of 88 persons, including 54 adults who were cited for such offenses as disorderly conduct and failure to disperse. Twenty-three juveniles also were arrested.

THIRTY OTHER persons were taken into custody at the scene but released later Sunday evening.

LaMunyon said complaints regarding officers with other departments would be forwarded on to those agencies.

Sedgwick County Undersheriff Sam Davison said Monday he fired two shots from his revolver into the ground to stop an advancing crowd he estimated at between 100 and 150 persons.

Indians to host awareness week

A powow and a pottery-making demonstration will highlight Native Indian Awareness Week, which begins today.

The activities, planned by the K-State Native American Indian Student Body, begin at 8 p.m. in the K-State Union Forum Hall with a puppet show by Terry Asla, an instructor from Lawrence.

An instructor of anthropology from Ottawa University, Barbara Richards, is scheduled to speak on "What it is to be Indian from One Indian Woman's Point of View" at 7 p.m. Wednesday in room 213 of the Union.

Pottery demonstrations by Nathan Begay, a Hopi traditional potter from Arizona, will be conducted from noon until 3 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday in the Union Courtyard.

On Thursday, Frank Love, director of the Indian Center at Topeka, will lecture on his poetry book, "Up River," at 7 p.m. in room 106 of the Union.

Vic Bland , a counselor from Butler County Junior College, will lecture on "Native Americans and Higher Education" at 3 p.m. Friday in room 207 of the Union.

Also on Friday, a group of approximately 20 students from the Horton Kickapoo Indian Reservation will visit K-State as part of a high school career day to finish off the week's events. A powow with members of the Kickapoo tribe from Horton will be held from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. April 21 in Ahearn Field House.

"We want to bring an awareness of native Americans to K-State and community," Jeannie Sandoval, organizer of the event, said.

Flood waters surge into Jackson

JACKSON, Miss.—The worst Pearl River flood in history surged deeper into the heart of Jackson on Monday, sending water to the eaves of some homes in the suburbs and forcing officials to seal off the downtown area.

With an estimated 17,000 persons already driven from their homes, the river poured over sandbag levees and inundated more houses, businesses and public facilties, including the city's new $48 million sewage treatment plant.

Mayor Dale Danks ordered police to seal off downtown as workers battled to keep floodwater from knocking out a key electric substation supplying power to the area.

Businesses closed, and police turned away all but non-essential workers to prevent sightseers from interfering with emergency operations and dump trucks bringing in dirt for sandbags.

The levees were holding, but the water surged over the top in spots as the Pearl reached almost 43 feet at Jackson on Monday, nearly 25 feet above flood stage and well above the previous record of 37.5 feet set in 1902. Officials said the river could crest at 43 feet sometime Monday night.

"We think the peak will come pretty soon," said Dave Waite, a city spokesman. "We're praying that's the case."

Flooding followed the winding course of the river on Jackson's east side. It has sent floodwaters up to the ceilings of expensive homes in northeast residential areas, overflowing into shopping centers and shops, pushing into downtown streets and spreading over lowlying areas in the southern part of the city.

Aftershocks hamper rescue efforts

DUBROVNIK, Yugoslavia—Aftershocks hampered rescue work Monday, and residents along the shattered Adriatic coast slept outside for a second night following an earthquake that killed 235 persons in Yugoslavia and Albania.

Tourists scurried for airplane tickets out of the devastated area.

Seven special charter flights jammed mostly with German and Yugoslav vacationers left Dubrovnik in the last two days from the area's only major airport, an official of the Yugotours agency at Dubrovnik Airport said.

"The tourist season in Montenegro is almost ruined," said the official, who declined to give his name. "The earthquake caused great damage to most of our hotels."

Officials said they recorded 150 aftershocks after the earthquake, which destroyed buildings along a 60-mile strip of coastline in southern Yugoslavia's Montenegro tourist region and in Albania. They reported one major aftershock at midday Monday, forcing a halt to rescue efforts as a few already-weakened structures collapsed.

Rescue workers, hampered by shortages of relief supplies, labored to provide aid for tens of thousands who were sleeping in the open air for a second night, fearing additional earth tremors.

Drinking water was in short supply, with pipe systems destroyed and springs polluted. Cistern trucks made water deliveries into the stricken area.

President Tito, who had been staying in his south Adriatic residence at Igalo in the Montenegro region when the quake hit, returned to Belgrade Monday after touring the devastated area.

Congressmen take $240,000 recess

WASHINGTON—Overseas trips by members of Congress this Easter recess will cost American taxpayers more than $240,000, an Associated Press survey shows.

At least 115 members of Congress—nine senators and 106 members of the House—currently are on the road in their quest for knowledge of world affairs.

There is no way of determining exactly how much the trips will cost but air fares alone, assuming all are traveling tourist class on commercial airliners, would top $180,000 just for some of the most popular one-destination trips.

Living expenses are expected to add anywhere from $60,000 to $86,000 to the tab. Congressmen get up to $75 a day while overseas and most trips during this recess period range from 7 days to 10 days.

The calculations do not include air fares and living expenses for staff aides, Defense Department guides and others considered essential on such missions. There was no estimate as to how many aides were on the trips.

Weather

You know you've been in the sun too long when a Maine fisherman picks you up by your tail, puts wooden pegs between your thumb and forefinger, packs you in ice and flies you to the Savoy Grill in Kansas City. Just a warning since the forecast calls for clear to partly cloudy skies with highs in the mid 80s. Lows tonight will near 60 with a slight chance of rain. The temperatures Wednesday will rise into the 80s again.

Recession could jeopardize Social Security benefits by 1983

WASHINGTON (AP)—Trustees of the Social Security system said Monday that a recession could jeopardize the system's ability to pay retirement benefits on time beginning in 1983.

And, the trustees cautioned that the system's financing is still precarious enough though newly increased Social Security payroll taxes cannot be reduced unless Congress also is willing to either reduce benefits or tap other sources of revenue.

The trustees, in their annual report on the health of the retirement, survivors and disability insurance system, said Social Security could face problems in paying retirement benefits starting in 1983 if the nation falls into a recession this year.

THE PROBLEM would clear up by 1992 because of the higher payroll taxes taking effect automatically through the 1980s, they said. But the system cannot afford a cut in those tax increases, enacted by Congress in 1977 to keep the system solvent.

Social Security will pay more than $101 billion to 35 million Americans this year. The trustees' report assumes that beneficiaries will get a 9.8 percent cost-of-living increase this July that will cost the government $10 billion.

The exact amount of the automatic increase won't be known until April 26, when the Labor Department releases the Consumer Price Index for March.

Social Security Commissioner Stanford Ross told a news conference that the basic conclusion of the report is that the system is sound and "in good financial shape for the next 50 years."

ROSS PRAISED Congress for boosting payroll taxes, but acknowledged feeling uneasy about them.

The Social Security trustees—Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal, Labor Secretary Ray Marshall and HEW Secretary Joseph Califano Jr.—said the cash flow problem beginning in 1983 could be avoided if legislation were passed to allow shifting some Disability Insurance trust funds to the Old Age Survivors Insurance trust fund.

Opinions

Let your voice be heard

Let's take a moment to thank the Union Governing Board (UGB) for deciding which films are in our best moral interest.

This continual and seemingly paranoid fixation with violence and sexual explicitness is a base and disgustng display of moralistic thumbsucking.

The refreshingly old tactics of the UGB in their determination of which films should and should not be shown in the Union are reminiscent of the Star Chamber of England. Just as the members of the Star Chamber kept viewpoints other than their own from being printed, declaring their authors to be seditious and immoral, the UGB has declared what K-State students "should" want to see to protect their moral fiber.

"It is up to us (UGB) to dictate policies to students,... as they would have it," said David Foster, UGB member, while discussing student interest in X-rated movies at the Union.

This statement of intent illustrates the pious "we know what the peasants want and even if we don't, that's what they'll get anyway" state of mind that cost past emperors their heads at the hands of "low-born ingrates."

The reason for the discussion was an attempt by UPC representatives to appeal the policy railroaded through on April 5 when K-Staters were fighting to save Nichols from succumbing to the wrecking ball. This policy bans UPC from showing any X-rated films in the Union.

Foster's statement, "dictating policy to students," indirectly bares the heart of the controversy—not simply what the Union's policy should be concerning this type of movie, but more importantly, who should decide.

The Union is supported partially by student funds paid each semester in the form of a line item totaling more than $300,000.

UGB meetings are open to students and the time to voice your opinion on topics concerning how completely the Union can serve your interests is at these meetings and to the appointed members of the UGB.

If you don't want to have X-rated movies shown in your Union, let UGB know. Or if you do want this type of movie shown—or if you simply want the freedom to choose all by yourself whether to see an X-rated film—be at the next UGB meeting at 5:30 Thursday evening in the second floor conference room of the Union and let your voice be heard.

If you cannot attend this meeting call Walter Smith, Union director, 532-6591 and write to the UPC offices to give them strength in their battle to defend student interests.

"If the students would show an overwhelming need for them (X-rated films), as they did for Nichols we would reconsider our decision. If UPC cannot show that to the UGB the decision should stand," said Foster to UPC representatives Thursday night when they told the UGB of student interest in the screening of X-rated films in the Union.

The decision is yours. Each of you has an opinion. Let your opinion be heard by those "who would be king."

Don't judge people by clothes

Clothes are a personal thing to me in terms of both their selection and utilization.

I don't like to be told what I can wear or how and where I can wear it. I also don't appreciate having my clothes analyzed like some "wow--man-hey-that's-cool" zodiac sign and then having the analyst turn to me and say, "Okay, judging by what you have on, this is your state of mind, this is the kind of person you are, and this is your present objective."

The female support of the constantly changing garment scene is exaggerated monstrously at times.

The exaggeration usually comes from: (1) a man who is too laid back to care about a woman's wardrobe, (2) a man who considers clothes to be trivial, (3) women who don't look rght in the new fashions, (4) feminists who think fashions and featherheads go together, (5) people who think fashions are bought simply because they are trends, and (6) people who can't afford new fashions, or don't want to afford them.

LET'S LOOK at the great generalization: Fashions ridiculously dictate what women will buy to wear. All women, right? I have heard that statement from many sources and even read it in fashion magazines.

First of all, anyone who goes out and buys anything is doing so because of some form of external influence.

The person who goes out and buys a new car, fishing pole, attache case, book, or tennis racket has seen, heard or read about the specific item he desires. New homes, furniture, cosmetics, shampoos, or haircuts all are objects of desires spurred on by advertisements, something you read or something a friend has that you adore.

We are all influenced to be consumers of one product or another. And as objects and items become more advanced, so do our lives, thus creating more needs and desires which we alleviate by purchasing new things.

The truth is, we usually buy what we buy because we either like it immensely or feel it suits us well. Ease, comfort, adaptability—all these factors come into play when we think about buying something new whether we're adding it to our garage or to our wardrobe.

SURE THE fashions change. I hate stagnant conditions so I'm elated they do. But just because the fashions change drastically doesn't mean that women's individual tastes must change in the same manner. For instance, a woman who enjoys a tailored look is going to continue to pursue that look among the clothes which appear each season.

From my own experience, I know, too, the main factors of clothes buying are comfort and adaptability. I buy what I feel good in and items suitable for the various aspects of my life. If something doesn't compliment my appearance, then it can stay in the store.

Many women, then, don't buy new fashions simply because they are new. They search for clothes they like that feel good and look good on them. Planning a wardrobe is like mixing a recipe—if the elements don't blend, the end product is less useful.

I wear what I like, and only what I like, wherever I go and in whatever situation. I hope other women approach their attire similarly and don't define their looks by the whims of designers. Let them give you influence and direction, not mental strait jackets.

More and more, men and women alike are caring about what they wear and when they wear it. It's no longer safe to attempt to define a person by the clothes he wears; it never was.

No benefit without risk

Editor,

I wonder if it will ever be possible for some groups to apply some common sense and perspective to nuclear power. The recent nuclear incident, which was probably the worst we have had in 35 years of nuclear technology, did not cause a single death or even an injury. Yet during the critical period there were on a statistical average 1,085 deaths due to automobile accidents, 145 persons were killed by fire, 44 were shot by firearms, 156 drowned, 35 were poisoned and 526 died in household accidents.

Nowhere did I read or hear about a protest group or a picket line to halt automobile production, ban the sale of matches or firearms, stop people from drinking water or closing those dangerous houses. However, with this nuclear incident there were protests by the dozens by the anti-nuclear purveyors of doom.

It is a shame this country will probably have to suffer a slowdown and maybe even a loss of a future energy source because of the misguided but extremely well-publicized efforts of a few who are so naive as to believe there can be 100 percent benefit with 0 percent risk.

One thing we can learn from history is that these purveyors of doom are always wrong but in the process they delay the progess necessary to benefit the vast majority of the people.

Planners lack insight

Editor,

The planners of K-State campus are lackadaisical and have very little insight. They are unwilling to preserve our historic past. Wherever there is an open space, a new structure or sidewalk is implemented. The sidewalks form a crossword-puzzle pattern across our green lawns and buildings are appearing in odd places.

The International Center was stationed in the middle of our green belt. The new education building is being placed on top of our rose gardens and conservatory, and will obstruct the views of our older and more aesthetically pleasing structures.

We have a fine recreation center which is centrally located. The new one will be located so far from mid-campus most students will have to drive to use it.

Our administrators wish to raze the remains of our historic castle and put in an access drive to McCain. The only benefit will be to a few fat cats who will only have to walk 50 feet instead of 50 yards. With this kind of planning I'm sure new structures will soon be built on Anderson lawn.

Generalizations unfair

Editor,

It is unfair to generalize the qualities and attitudes of a group of people based on the statements and actions of a portion of that group. An educated opinion is usually formed by acquiring as much information as possible from resouces available and continuing to keep an open mind in the event the new material or experiences should warrant a change in that opinion.

The resources in the books, magazines and overseas broadcasts are abundant and there is little excuse for forming a hasty opinion on the basis of bias and prejudice just because it is less work.

The Palestinians are justifiably unhappy, to say the least, about being forced by British assistance and Zionist coercion to give up their homes and land they had inhabited for many years before 1947. Before the Zionist movements, Moslems, Christians and Jews lived peacefully side by side, but Theodore Herze, father of modern political Zionism, dug out an outdated, extinct and biased religious view and tried to enforce it into modern day political reality. Namely to make Israel's boundaries extending "in the north the mountain facing Cappadocia, in the south the Suez Canal, and in the east the Euphrates."

It is understandable that Palestinians who have lost their homes would want to force out a government that initiated such an action. It is less easy to understand than the Zionist movement.

The Palestinians, because of their emotional and physical environment after 1948, are in situations, make certain statements and actions that should not be viewed as the general feeling and attitudes of the total population of the Arab world.

The main reason the other Arab countries are taking the attitudes they are on the current Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty is because the issue of the Palestinian people is not mentioned which is the real heart of the problem in the first place. Who is going to place a gag and hand cuff on one who feels a grave injustice was done by having his home and country taken away from hhim, especially when curent peaceful negotiations ignore his situation?

In ending, I would like to ask—Are the Israelis really content with the land they have now and ready to live in peace or are they using the phrase the Palestinians are supposed to have stated as an excuse to encourage the unrest and fighting, so they can still vie for a chance at "Biblical Israel?"

Nukes—no easy answer

Editor,

The word noise shrouding the Three Mile High incident is intense indeed. A few general conclusions can be drawn from the happenings and the important ones as I see it are listed below.

1. The worst possible accident did not occur and thus the integrity of the radioactive accident waste containment system under conditions more adverse than the conditions during the Three Mile High incident is not guaranteed.

2. Severe nuclear reactor accidents will happen.

3. The human elements are very important and complex factors to consider in the practice of preventive maintenance of the systems of nuclear power plants.

4. The mechanical design was faulty and thus there shall be changes that will better the standards.

Caution should be exercised in any decision about nuclear power, as our position is somewhat like being between a rock and a hard spot. This is exemplified by manifestations like that at Three Mile High and with Karen Silkwood, and conversely, by our nations thirst for energy.

'I'm not glowing'

Hershey assures product safety

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

As you would expect, there's a lot of milk in milk chocolate.

So when the nation's most serious nuclear accident released radiation into the air 11 miles from Hershey Foods Corp. on East Chocolate Avenue late last month, there was an obvious question.

"Is the milk all right?" asked Hershey Chief Executive William Dearden, who satisfies his sweet tooth by eating chocolate every day.

The company also wondered whether Americans scared by the accident at the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant might stop buying Hershey bars. Both Hershey and stores that sell lots of candy say that has not happened.

But the milk, 116,000 gallons of it a day, was a ticklish problem.

The company says 11 percent of that milk comes from farms within 20 miles of the power plant. The remainder comes from up to 70 miles from the nuclear station. Hershey traditionally has kept secret how much milk goes into its chocolate. Some of the 116,000 gallons a day is turned into powdered milk and sold.

STATE OFFICIALS say radiation levels in samples of milk taken in the area of the nuclear plant area have ranged from nil to far below danger levels. Hershey says its milk is "absolutely safe" but it nonetheless is taking "ultra-conservative" precautions.

Dearden said in an interview the firm does not plan an advertising campaign assuring the public its products are wholesome. But the company sent a letter to employees and shareholders saying its faciltiies and products are "safe and free of radioactive contamination."

"We are carefully monitoring all products leaving our plant," said the letter. "You can have complete confidence that all products we manufacture are absolutely safe and that we will take every precaution to insure the continuing safety of all products."

The White House, while not naming Hershey, also issued a statement saying "the food from the Three Mile Island area is safe to produce, buy, transport, prepare and eat as the food available at any other place in the U.S."

HERSHEY'S 4,500 employees were calm during the incident. "Over 90 percent of our workforce" was on duty by the Monday after the accident, said Dearden. "There was no more absenteeism than there would be on a snow day."

Dearden said "at the beginning there were people who were concerned" that Hershey's sales might slide because of customer worries over the safety of the company's candies and other products. But there have been no sales cancellations since the accident, he said.

A spot check by the Associated Press found no instance where customers had steered clear of Hershey chocolate out of fear of radiation.

"I just finished eating a chocolate bar and I'm not glowing," quipped a Wall Street analyst who follows Hershey's fortunes.

The costs to Hershey of milk tests and changes in production schedules are "not significant," said Dearden, who declined to say exactly how much the testing and other items have cost.

HEALTH OFFICIALS' main fear has been that milk from the Harrisburtg area might contain radioactive iodine-131, a compound that can travel through the air to pastures where cows graze. The compound then can travel through cows' milk into the human thyroid gland. An overdose of the radioactive material could cause cancer.

Fortunately, said Dearden, "the cows here weren't on pasture because there's no grass around here yet. They were eating feed grown last year and put in silos."

Hershey's first move came right after the accident. It stopped taking in milk for immediate use in the candy factories. Instead, it kept production lines moving by using inventories of partially processed chocolate, containing milk received before the accident.

K-Staters to tour European farms

An Italian meat packing plant, a Swiss cheese factory and a German Gelbvieh cattle farm are a few of the classrooms a group of K-Staters will have this summer.

Ten K-State students will travel to eight countries as part of the European Agriculture Study Tour May 23 through June 14. They will be joined by 10 students from the University of Missouri and seven adult sponsors including George Ward, professor of animal sciences and industry, and his wife.

"The students will write a paper analyzing what they saw and learned," Ward said. They will receive three hours of credit.

While in England the students will visit Westminister Abbey, the House of Parliament, a spice plant and small village farms. The students will also see farmland that has been reclaimed from the sea, dairy cattle and windmills in the Netherlands.

In Germany they will study artificial insemination, rural banking systems, and visit hops farms and experiment stations. Tours of Soviet farms in Yugoslavia, Italian fruit and vegetable farms, the Swiss village where Simmental cattle were developed and a French wholesale and export distribution market will conclude the trip.

The world is full of turkeys today— but this time it could be good news

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Department of Agriculture reports that the supply of chickens and turkeys is continuing to increase. Large supplies may help hold down prices, making poultry an attractive substitute for increasingly expensive beef.

Department experts urge shoppers to look for the USDA grade shield when buying poultry. Grading is voluntary and the shield tells you the processor has paid to have a government inspector check the wholesomeness and quality of their product. The top rating is U.S. Grade A, which is given to birds that are fully fleshed and meaty and attractive in appearance.

To find the most tender birds, however, look for younger ones, according to the department. These may be labeled as Rock Cornish hen, broiler, fryer, roaster or capon depending on the age of the chicken.

WHATINTHEHECKISTHAT?

Have I got your attention now? Good!
Firstly, a little history-----

Twenty years ago "The Hibachi Hut" started in business with 15 different quarter pound burgers, all cooked by real charcoal. In the past years, we have seen the competition come out with "The Big Bertha, The Triple-Triple Stack, Gross Gerta and Grandfathers Down on the Farm Special"-----

We proudly announce our new dinner for two, aptly named "THAT'S A BURGER!"

How about a charcoal broiled 16 oz. (1 pound) hamburger on a 12 inch sub bun (topped with your choice of American, Swiss or Mozeralla cheese), 2 salads, Tater Tots, or Steak Fries, 2 after dinner mints; all served to a table-clothed, candle-lit table!

We'll even cut it in half or you can leave it whole and take turns feeding each other itty-bitty bites. Now if you're not speaking to each other and (she-he) has informed you "Not to-nite dear, I have a headache", we'll throw in a special order of fried onions for .25 cents-----

Doggy bags available for leftovers.

We'll introduce this happening on Tuesday evening, commencing at 5 P.M., 17th of April. All for the low price of $5.98-----

'There are three things that make anything valuable — a good design, good materials and the best workmanship.'

Guitarman

By DEBBIE RHEIN
Staff Writer

WINFIELD—"In case of emergency (you are dying to see a guitar) call 221-3968, 221-2625" reads the sign on the door of the Mossman guitar shop, where Stuart Mossman and his partner Chris Fisher hand fashion their guitars.

A friendly atmosphere flows through the shop, where people come from all over the country to buy their instruments.

"Not too long ago, we had a couple drive out from California to buy guitars," Mossman said.

From the shop, which has produced instruments for guitarists Dan Crary, David Carradine, and John Denver, Mossman handles all advertising and sales.

"We try to maintain a pretty low-key approach, we let our guitars sell themselves," Mossman said. "It's not like a music shop where a guy goes in and talks to a salesman. Here, if he doesn't like the guitars he's saying, 'Hey, I don't like what you do for a living'—and that could be pretty uncomfortable. So, we just let people come in and look around, and buy something if they're interested."

MOSSMAN USED to let a distributing company handle sales and advertising, but broke with the company when the Mossman guitar factory shut down in August of 1977.

After closing the factory, Mossman paired up with Fisher to build guitars on a small scale. The pair build about 100 guitars a year or two a week, he said.

The guitars built in the new shop by Fisher and Mossman will range in price from $400 to $1600, Fisher said.

The price for the handmade guitars is lower than the price for the factory-made ones because there is no middleman, Mossman said.

Mossman got into the guitar-building business in a roundabout way.

A refugee from big cities, New York City and Detroit, Mossman moved to Winnfield in 1965 with his wife Kendra, intending to graduate from college and someday act for a living.

While trying to finish up his degree, Mossman and a friend decided to build a dulcimer for the fun of it. (Mossman learned the basics of guitar building while working for the Gibson guitar factory at Kalamazoo Mich. before coming to Kansas.)

"WE WENT out and bought some equipment, and decided to build a guitar after the dulcimer," Mossman said. "My parents and my wife thought I was crazy, but I wanted to do t."

After buying about $3,000 worth of equipment for his hobby, Mossman said he started getting requests to build more guitars.

Mossman built about 77 guitars in the old garage behind his house from '65 to '69.

"I started to take it seriously when some friends of mine, who I consider to be pretty good guitar players, wanted my guitars," he said.

When one of those friends offered to invest money in a Mossman guitar factory, Mossman said he decided to give it a try.

The factory grew until it employed 50

Board decides what's in a name

Who put 'h' back in Pittsburgh?

WASHINGTON (AP)—Lake Creek in South Dakota will continue to be called Lake Creek, not La Creek or Lacreek, thanks to a little-known government agency that, in its own way, has an effect on every American.

Polar Peak in Colorado won't become Mount Nedley, either, but one of the several Powell Lakes in Michigan may be rechristened for St. Patrick.

And two previously unnamed bodies of water in Reston, Va., now bear the appellations "Thoreau" and "Audubon."

Such decisions, seemingly so minor, add up to the mass of place names that allow Americans to find their way around, to commemorate people or events and to be able to tell others where they are.

THESE DECISIONS are made by the domestic names committee of the U.S. Board of Geographic Names. These people, representing a variety of government agencies, meet regularly in a small conference room deep in the massive Interior Department building, an event unnoted even by the government security guards who question visitors.

What happens in that little room, though, can stir passions and alter the maps of the nation.

The current hot topic is the effort to get Alaska's Mount McKinley rechristened Denali, an ancient Indian name. The domestic names committee would really like to see that decision made in Congress, but efforts there to get action have been unsuccessful.

PERHAPS A compromise could be reached, committee members suggest, using one name for the mountain and the other for the surrounding national park. But the name of the park is up to Congress, while the committee has jurisdiction over the mountain, so some sort of coordination will have to be achieved.

In 1973 the board restored the name Cape Canaveral to the area known as Cape Kennedy since the slaying of President Kennedy in 1963. The name Kennedy was kept for the space flight center there, but abandoning Canaveral for the geographic location had been criticized by Floridians, who traced the name to explorer Ponce De Leon.

The board also drew widespread public interest in 1911 when it restored the "h" to Pittsburgh, and in 1933 when it approved the apostrophe in "Martha's Vineyard," the only official place name in the country with a possessive apostrophe.

The Board of Geographic Names was established in 1890 and reorganized in 1947. All name controversies are referred to the board which determines the correct name, spelling and application for use on federal maps.

THE ACT of naming places has always interested people, and many place names are derived from foreign words thanks to the early explorers of North America. Those names can be changed through generations of use, or copied incorrectly, resulting in slightly different names on different maps. This brings the board most of its business.

Plenty of color remains in the names given places in America, however, ranging from Paul Bunyans Potty, Utah, to Shotgun Creek, Calif., to Corduroy Canyon, N.M.

people and needed a distributing company to handle the sales. Mossman said dealing with the distributing company was the biggest mistake he had made. He said problems with the company forced the factory to shut-down.

Mossman said he prefers doing the kind of work he and Fisher do now.

"In the factory, it was so specialized," he said. Now, Mossman builds the guitar boxes while Fisher works on the necks.

ALTHOUGH HE grew up in large cities, Mossman has solid roots in Winfield. Both of his grandfathers are native to Winfield, he said. During his years in Winfield, Mossman started a bluegrass tradition in 1971. Originally the Southwestern Folk Festival, the Winfield Bluegrass Festival has grown until many refer to it as THE bluegrass festival.

The idea for the festival, Mossman said, began when and friend decided Winfield needed a festival. Although he is no longer involved with the festival, Mossman follows its progress closely and supports the festival, he said.

Mossman devotes his time to the guitar business now, he said. He and Fisher are constantly designing improvements.

East Indian rosewood is imported for use on the backs and sides of the guitar box, Mossman said.

The guitar design is Mossman's own—the result of years of experimentation, he said. They are not finished experimenting as Mossman and Fisher are working on a lighter brace for the inside of the guitar box.

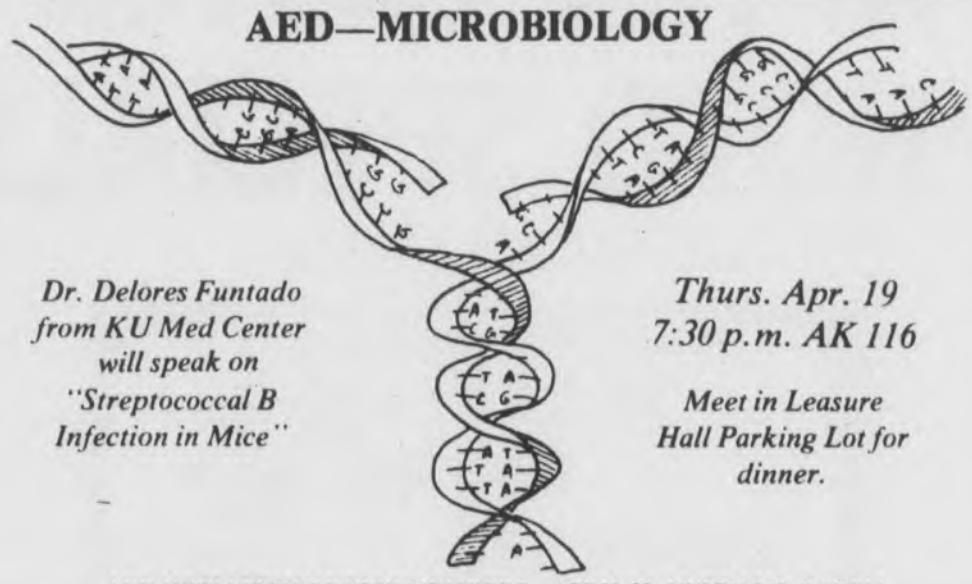
"BRACING IS only a happy combination—a compromise between strength and vibration," Mossman said. "The idea is that you get those braces as light as you can and still have enough strength to hold the tops."

The less mass, in the form of braces, inside the box, the better the sound, he said. The braces are necessary for support, so the trick is getting the right amount.

"It would be a long time before we got bored with building guitars," he said. "There is always something to learn and try."

Even though he is committed to his life in Winnfield, life has delivered one of its small ironies to Mossman.

Recently, through his friendship with David Carradine, Mossman acted in a film, "Cloud Dancer."



When he had a chance to fulfill his early dream—to be an actor—Mossman realized he was happier building guitars.

"They (actors) work hard, keep terrible hours—they are often up at 4 in the morning. It was fun, but I wouldn't want to live that way," he said.

"Winfield is a good place to live and raise kids," he said. And, he said it's a good place to find friends who enjoy sitting around an old stove playing guitar—one of his favorite pastimes.

Preservation alliance wants to save historic Kansas sites

As "progress" makes its way across the state, many items of historic significance—such as Nichol's Gymnasium—are lost to the ravages of time, or are torn down to make way for new construction.

Concern for the preservation of such items has prompted the formation of the Kansas Preservation Alliance.

Although the group is just getting started, it already has about 90 members across the state, according to Richard Wagner, professor of architecture and design. The group arose out of a conference on preservation of the plains last November.

"The idea for the group comes from an awareness of things in Kansas that need to be preserved," Wagner said. "There was a feeling that there is a lot of stuff to be preserved here, and that one person can't do it alone."

Wagner said the group hopes to help preserve various historic places, not just buildings. Such items as historic Indian artifacts could also be included.

"I think Nichol's Gymnasium is the kind of thing I would like to see the alliance get involved in," Wagner said.

"The idea is to get a group of all types of people from all over Kansas, all with different reasons to help preserve sites in Kansas," he said.

The next meeting for the alliance is scheduled for June 23, but a location has not been announced.

Wondering what to do after college?

Patty Pinaire has 300 ideas

By CHRIS MCKEE
Collegian Reporter

Each spring graduating seniors are faced with the question of what to do when they get out into the outside world. Besides searching the job market for likely prospects, some students seek the advice of their friends.

Patty Pinaire, senior in art, sought such help on a much larger scale recently in front of the K-State Union by asking several hundred passers-by for advice.

Pinaire handed out 500 questionnaires, asking for advice on what she should do after graduation. She said more than 300 of them were returned, and she plans to categorize the comments into a book.

"At first I was afraid to do it because it might be an affirmation of my insanity, but I found out that one can have these insecurities and not be ashamed of it," she said.

Pinaire said although she hasn't sorted the responses yet, she thinks the survey will be helpful.

Pinaire said one source of her frustration is that the job market for artists is small.

"People don't come to campus to interview artists for jobs," she said. "I need a job to support me and have enough free time to do art."

Pinaire describes her art work as "conceptual, idea art.

"The whole idea is that the idea is most important.

"It (art) may or may not have an object," she said. "It's a way to record part of a past event in the future, to make the transitory permanent."

Pinaire said she plans to use the student responses in a piece of art work.

"I think I'll build a wedge-shaped piece and put the actual responses in it and make a ring toss game out of it." She said the pegs would correspnd to numbered responses in the book.

Pinaire is currently working on a "conceptual" art project to bring the "outside to the inside."

Pinaire said she "appropriated" some dirt from a friend's yard, brought it to her studio, planted bluegrass seed in it, and is holding it for "ransom." She replaced the "borrowed" dirt with a large red "X."

Pinaire is demanding a lock of hair, a photograph and a piece of artwork sealed in a mayonnaise jar as "ransom."

Upon payment of the "ransom," Pinaire said she will replace the dirt, complete with grass, to the owner's property.

Nichols Idea/Design Contest

sponsored

Students and faculty of the College of Architecture and Design are sponoring a contest to reward the best plan or strategy for retaining Nichols Gym as a "usable landscaped ruin" or an enclosed structure for K-State use.

cash awards

The winning student or student team entries will be awarded cash prizes.. All other faculty, staff, alumni, and friends may receive commendations but are not eligible for cash prizes.

deadline

Entries must be submitted by 5 p.m. Friday, May 4, in the K-State Union. Prizes will be awarded by May 8.

got a great idea!!

If you have a plan but not much drawing skill, don't get frustrated. Graphic assistance will be available in the Union from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. April 18, 19 and 20.

A informational and interpretive meeting will begin at noon Wednesday in room 206 of the Union. Complete programs and map packets are available in the Union Copy Center.

entries

The contest entries may be typewritten, illustrated or developed plans and pictorial sketches.

description

The contest is open to all and will recognize the most creative schemes for uses, designs and implementing strategies for Nichols. Four categories of entries are encouraged:

A. Nichols shell substantially incorporated into a permanent structure to house a unit or department of K-State.

B. Proposals which treat Nichols as a "landscaped ruin."

C. Solutions for an auto driveway and drop off parking for the handicapped, the elderly McCain Auditorium patrons and ticket purchasers.

D. Improvements to the quadrangle area between Nichols, Calvin, Fairchild and McCain.

deadline: friday, may 4th 5 p.m.

Track team takes second despite injuries

The Arkansas men's track team, which won the John Jacobs Invitational in Norman, Okla. this weekend, is probably thankful that injuries continue to take their toll on the K-State quarter-milers.

Arkansas narrowly defeated K-State 131 1-3 to 122 1-3 after K-State Coach Mike Ross was unable to round up four healthy runners for the mile relay. K-State still managed to take second place in the meet, followed by Oklahoma with 101.

Sports

"I was very pleased. It was a great meet for us," Ross said. "We could have won if we had a mile relay team. But we were too beat up, and I want to keep our sprinters healthy for the Big 8 meet."

The men, who collected five first-place victories, were led by Kevin Sloan, who took top honors in both the long jump with a 24-7¾ leap and the triple jump, landing at 50-5½ from the line.

Sloan's effort in the long jump puts him at third in the Big 8 so far this season.

WITH A 1-2-3-5 sweep in the javelin, the Wildcats racked up 26 points. Frank Perbeck's 246-5 was good for a first, followed by Joe Bramlage's second place 246-5. Both tosses qualified for the NCAA Outdoor Championships. Perbeck's younger brother Mark was third at 212-4.

Doug Knauss, who managed a fifth place javelin toss, also won the pole vault with a 16-0 jump.

Ray Hanf broke the year-old meet record of 47.6 in the 400-meter run with a time of 47.3.

Women's coach Barry Anderson was also pleased with his team's performance, although none of the women captured any wins.

High jumper Diane Moeller took fourth with a 5-6 leap, while Beets Kolarik took second in the pentathalon with 3,211 points, followed by Linda Scott's third place 3,000 points.

Freshman Jeanne Daniels continues to do well in the shot put with a third place 46-0½ throw. Teammate Linda Long recorded a 42-7½ fourth.

"Our shot putters are headed in the right direction. This will be a very important event in the Big 8 meet," Anderson said. The Big 8 Championships, which is K-State's lone home meet this season, will be held at R.V. Christian Track May 4-5.

Tennis team keeps improving; grabs Emporia championship

The men's tennis program at K-State, reinstated just three years ago, continued to improve by taking its first tournament title at Emporia State Friday and Saturday and crushing Westminster College of Fulton, Mo., Monday.

The 'Cats edged second-place Bethany 22-19 at Emporia.

The tourney "proved the depth of the team," according to Coach Steve Snodgrass. The No. 5 and 6 singles players, Steve Webb and Dave Krizman, advanced to the finals play against each other. Webb took first when Krizman pulled a muscle and withdrew.

The Wildcats' depth was also proved in the second division (No. 3 and 4 players), as Jeff Henderson beat Bethany's Tim Wait 6-4, 6-2 in the finals.

In No. 3 doubles, Krizman and Dave Nelson defeated Wait and Dan Forrester of Bethany 6-2, 6-4.

The No. 2 doubles team of Henderson and Gary Titus advanced to the first division finals, but were beaten by Bethany.

SNODGRASS explained that the No. 1 and 2 players, Greg Last and Jim Lawrence, also played well, but the "competition was heavier there."

Monday's match pitted K-State against Westminster, which was "better than we expected," Snodgrass said.

The 'Cats, however, had little trouble in their 8-1 victory. All six K-State singles players—Henderson, Titus, Lawrence, Last, Webb and Krizman, won in straight sets.

The only Westminster winners were No. 1 doubles players Joel Starr and Harold Martin, who defeated Lawrence and Last 3-6, 6-4, 6-4.

The Wildcats, now 7-7, play Emporia State at the Washburn Courts at 2 p.m. today.

Snodgrass stressed that the 'Cats were not "picking on" smaller schools, but playing some of the top NAIA schools. He said Emporia State had the best No. 1 and 2 players at the weekend tournament.

"These schools give us a chance to build our confidence before we go into the really top-caliber competition in the Big 8," Snodgrass said.

'Cat softball team loses 2 in Big 8

Despite the efforts of Lisa Packard, the K-State softball team lost two games in the Big 8 tournament Friday and Saturday in Fort Dodge, Iowa.

The first game was an eight-inning battle, which the 'Cats lost 5-4 to the University of Kansas. KU outslugged K-State, getting 11 hits to the Wildcats' nine.

Packard went two for four against KU and hit a triple in the first inning.

In the second game, the 'Cats lost to Oklahoma 3-1. Packard scored K-State's only run on a Sooner error. Janelle Poppe went two for three.

The 'Cats were outhit in the second game, 8-4.

6-10 K-State signee follows family footsteps

Les Craft, a 6-10 prep All-American from Bozeman, Mont. will follow in both his father and grandfather's basketball footsteps next year. Craft signed a national letter of intent Sunday with the Wildcats.

K-State Coach Jack Hartman called Craft "big league material" and "one of the top big men to come out of the high school ranks this year."

Craft's father, Roger, was the leading scorer for the Wildcats in 1954-55, and his grandfather, DeWitt Craft, was a regular on K-State's freshman team in 1919 before entering the service.

Craft attracted nationwide attention while leading Bozeman to back-to-back state titles in 1978 and 1979. He chose to come to K-State after narrowing the field to Arkansas, Washington, Montana State, Duke and Nebraska.

"Les is an outstanding young player. He's sound in every phase off the game," Hartman said. "In addition to being an excellent outcourt shooter, he has fine hands, plus the moves, ballhandling capabilites and background to step into college basketball."

Though shooting barely more than a dozen times per tilt, Craft averaged 18.9 points per games his senior season to go along with his 18 rebounds per contest. He hit 58 percent of his field goal attempts and 75 percent from the freethrow line. In one outing he was credited with 15 blocked shots.

His string of honors include high school all-American recognition, unanimous Montana all-stater in 1979, most valuable player in the Montana State tournament in 1979 and state championship all-tourney selection in 1978.

Softball marathon to begin May 4

The Riley County Cancer Society will hold its Second Annual Slow Pitch Softball Marathon May 4-6 at CiCo Park.

Thirty-two men's and 16 women's teams will compete in double elimination play, beginning Friday, May 4 at 8 p.m. and ending with the championship game Sunday, May 6 at 1 p.m.

Money for the fight against cancer will be raised from team entry fees and a $1 admission price for spectators. The ticket entitles the holder to a chance at many door prizes which are being donated by Manhattan area merchants, according to Kirk Hoke, publicity chairman.

Any team wishing to enter should contact Hoke at 539-4687 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. weekdays or 776-4469 after 5 p.m.

Women's tennis team continues imperfect season

Surprise. The K-State women's tennis team lost.

This time it was the Big 8 tournament in Lawrence Friday, Saturday and Sunday, which was won by the University of Kansas with 63 points.

The Wildcats' best efforts were seventh-place finishes by Brenda Bennett at No. 2 singles, Laurie Friesenborg at No. 3 singles and Friesenborg and Emily Cohn at No. 2 doubles.

"To paraphrase an old saying," Coach David Hacker said, "we met the enemy and we were his, or in this case, hers."

Under the tournament format, each K-Stater played three matches. The first-round losses placed all of them in the loser's bracket, where each played twice. The seventh-place finishers won their final matches in the loser's bracket.

"I know the women are discouraged," Hacker said. "We've had to fight attitude all spring long. Laurie proved, though, that you can get mad enough to win. She just got tired of losing, and so she won. All along I've said that our players have the shots. The trouble is they execute the ball instead of the shot. Our needs, as they were at the start, are practice and experience.

OKLAHOMA, which was expected to battle Colorado for the title, finished second with 59 points while Colorado had 57. Missouri was fourth with 52, Oklahoma State and Nebraska tied with 35 points and Iowa State was seventh with 19 points.

"I wasn't one bit surprised at the outcome," Hacker said. "Superb tennis is played in the Big 8. You hear a lot about California girls, but (KU coach Tom) Kvisto points out that his team is all Kansas girls, who knocked off the Coast imports. We've got the potential is we work hard enough."

Although the K-State team has lost all of its matches this year, it hasn't lost its sense of humor.

Shelly Christensen, who was sentenced to No. 1 singles, said, "The net was a few feet higher on our side."

Her doubles partner Bennett consoled herself with "at least we won the Big 8 Sunburn Championship."

Intramural managers' meeting today at 4

A meeting for intramural managers of all sports will be at 4 p.m. today in the Union Forum Hall.

The managers will discuss issues coming up in the near future and rule changes for the 1979-80 school year, according to Bill Harms, intramural coordinator.

They will also discuss the April 26-28 intramural track meet. The sign-up deadline for the track meet is Thursday.

Rodgers captures Boston Marathon

BOSTON (AP)—Favorite son Bill Rodgers wore down Japan's Toshihiko Seko on "Heartbreak Hill," less than six miles from the finish, and went on to a record-shattering victory Monday in the 83rd Boston Marathon.

Bill Rodgers

"There's only one thing missing," Rodgers panted afterward, "that's a medal in the Olympics."

Rodgers, a 31-year-old former school teacher, now a sporting goods store operator, whipped through rain and 42-degree cold from suburban Hopkinton to Boston in 2 hours, 9 minutes, 27 seconds, the fastest marathon in American history.

While breaking the course record of 2 hours, 9 minutes, 55 seconds he set as a virtual unknown in 1975, Rodgers avenged a defeat by Seko in the Fukuoka International Marathon in Japan last December.

The 23-year-old Japanese college student stuck with Rodgers most of the way. The strategy worked, but only for a while. Virtually abreast after 20 miles, Rodgers opened the throttle on the first of three hills. He cleared the second hill about 5 yards in front and headed for Heartbreak, a famed burying ground for many runners in the 26-mile, 385-yard classic.

Although Seko appeared to be running easily, he was unable to keep up with Rodgers' blistering pace.

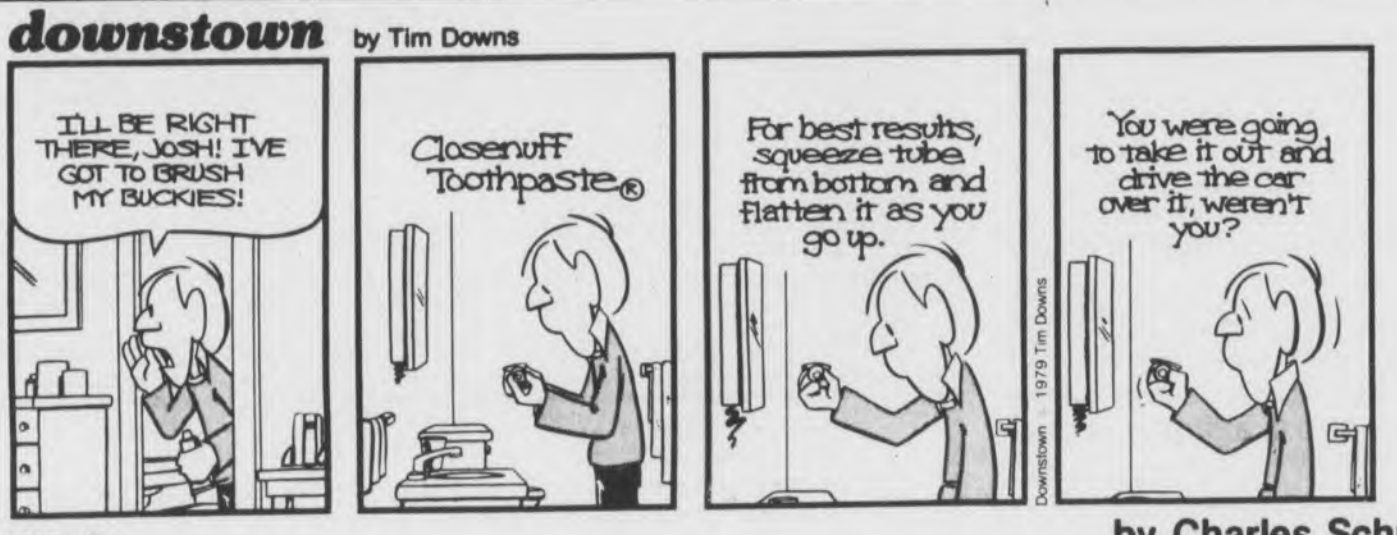
"I really poured it on," said Rodgers. "I only run best when I have someone to chase."

Rodgers charged 15 yards in front halfway up Heartbreak and continued to widen the margin. He cleared the hill without difficulty, then sidestepped a spilled police motorcycle and breezed the rest of the way, running at an almost unbelievable pace on the heels of a police escort, with sirens wailing.

"I could taste that third wind," Rodgers said after being crowned with the traditional laurel wreath and receiving first prize of a gold, sunburst medal.

"I didn't want someone to take it away," he said. "I'm good going down hill and I poured it on."

Late Missouri rally beats K-State



COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP)—Scott Collins hit a bases-loaded single with two outs in the bottom of the eighth inning Monday to give the Missouri Tigers a 6-5 win over K-State in a scheduled seven-inning Big 8 baseball game.

Missouri had trailed 5-1 entering the home half of the seventh before shortstop Lindy Duncan and catcher Tim Laudner tied the game with a pair of two-run homers. Until then, K-State never had trailed, building their advantage on the strength of two-run homers by shortstop Mike Baker and catcher Don Hess and a run-scoring double by third baseman Dan McAfee.

Right-hander Ron Mathis went the distance for Missouri to pick up his seventh win in nine decisions. Missouri improved its conference mark to 5-2 while K-State fell to 1-6 in conference play.

The second game of the scheduled doubleheader was postponed until Tuesday after the first games started late because of wet grounds.

NRC officials go home as nuclear reactor slowly cools

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)—With a damaged nuclear reactor inching toward cold shutdown and radioactive iodine leaks remedied, the top federal official watching the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant went home Tuesday.

"I consider my task here completed," said Harold Denton, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's (NRC) operations chief sent here by President Carter to tame the crisis that began three weeks ago.

Denton, who arrived 19 days ago when the reactor's fuel core seemed in danger of melting, held a final briefing on the task of cooling the reactor. He then returned to his home in Bethesda, Md.

He said radiation leaks apparently had been sealed and that the small amounts of radioactive material that might be released pose no threat to public health.

TECHNICIANS are working to lower the reactor's primary cooling system from its current 245 degrees to 230 degrees through quicker cooling of steam, Denton said.

When the reactor is cooled to below the boiling point of water, engineers can take the final step of turning off the primary coolant pump, itself a source of heat, and allowing the core to cool further through the natural convection currents of the water.

Denton gave no timetable but acknowledged the process "is taking longer than I had imagined." Another official said the delay comes from a backup system that is being installed as a precaution.

Victor Stello, the NRC's director of operating reactors, will take over for Denton.

THERE WERE these other developments:

—Metropolitan Edison, the plant's operator and co-owner, offered a $16 million reduction from a rate hike approved by the Public Utility Commission in March. Its original $49 million annual rate increase covered the costs of operating the reactor.

—In Washington, government consultant Walter Lipinski said in an interview that Babcock & Wilcox nuclear power plants, including Three Mile Island, have "a severe problem" with large, rapid heat surges that rob operators of precious time to react. He said the Babcock & Wilcox system "is controllable, but in comparison to other systems you have a whole new set of problems."

—State and federal officials have begun compiling the economic, environmental and health consequences stemming from the accident. State officials said it would take at least six months to assess the damage.

—Radioactive wastes will be trucked to a disposal site in the state of Washington. Two trucks carrying wastes, which contain low-level radiation, were turned back earlier by South Carolina authorities.

Touchstone loses funding

Senate approves budget cuts

By THE SGA STAFF

Finance Committee's budget cuts for three groups were approved and a fourth rejected by Student Senate last night.

Touchstone, Women's Resource Center (WRC) and University Learning Network (ULN) sustained cuts from their budget requests during the second of five meetings scheduled to tentatively allocate next year's student activity fees.

The Touchstone staff had originally requested $200 for advertising, but changed the request to $800 for advertising and printing last Thursday and back to $200 for advertising last night. Touchstone could become self-sufficient for printing but not advertising costs, staff members said.

Finance Committee recommended senate not fund the literary arts magazine.

TOUCHSTONE'S faculty adviser, Beverly Matherne, said 600 copies of a single issue would be published next year. A total of 1,600 copies of two issues were published this year. Matherne said Touchstone magazines would be sold at different prices for University members and other people next year.

"I question if 600 copies reach the whole University," Dee James, agriculture senator, said. "We've got a lot of services we've cut back that could use the $200 a lot more than Touchstone."

Touchstone is available to all students and one copy can reach more than one student, David Exline, arts and sciences senator, said.

"I think it's important we give them one more chance. They have almost become self-sufficient," Lori Bergen, arts and sciences senator, said.

"The money for advertising doesn't fall into line with money allocated to other groups including social services," John Martin, Finance Committee member, said.

"I think they could find other means to advertise. The $200 is unnecessary," Mark Skinner, another committee member, said.

FINANCE COMMITTEE'S recommendation of $750 for WRC, $40 less than requested, was upheld by senate after lengthy debate about the need for a paid work-study position.

Proposals for no funding, $400 funding and $100 funding were made before senate passed the committee's recommendation of $360 for the position. WRC had requested $400 for a work-study position.

"I don't think we could do what we've been doing without a work-study person," WRC Director Maxine Lentz said.

"We do have six or seven active volunteers, but we need someone to coordinate the volunteers," Lentz said. "Without a work-study person, what we offer now would definitely decrease."

K-State's Dean of Women Margaret Nordin said the WRC office would be staffed fewer hours and fewer services would be available if the position was cut.

The work-study person serves almost as an assistant WRC director, helping the office run smoothly and effectively, Earl Nolting, Center for Student Development director, said.

"I basically would like to see the budget reduced and think this is an area where it could be done," said James, who was in favor of funding the position only $100.

THE WORK-STUDY employee currently works 10 to 12 hours a week, Lentz said.

"Let's pay them for four hours a week and let them go ahead and work as long as it takes to do the coordination (of volunteers)," Curtis Krizek, arts and sciences senator, said.

ULN's $4,845 budget was passed after Finance Committee amended its salary recommendation from $200 to $250 monthly—a level set for all assistant directors.

Cuts for Infant and Child Care Center were partially restored, raising student funding for the graduate assistant's monthly salary from $275, recommended by Finance Committee, to $338. A request for $400 per month—the entire salary amount—had been submitted.

Martin said the committee recommended the $275 monthly salary to keep the funding consistent with other directors' salaries. Senate paid $300 per month this year.

"You're putting us in a great deal of difficulty," Murray Krantz, director of the center, said.

The center currently charges 50 cents hourly per child, but Krantz said decreased senate funding would increase the likelihood of hourly charges being increased.

"I'm only asking you now to pick up your fair share of our increasing costs," Krantz said.

"If you come up with the full $400 I think I can avert it (raising the center's charges)," he said.

"I think this is a much more important service than, say, increasing funding for ASK (Associated Students of Kansas) so we can all lobby to smoke dope," Mark Zimmerman, business senator, said.

After an hour and a half of questioning, senate adjourned, leaving Finance Committee's recommendation to not fund Drug Education Center to be decided Thursday night.

Finance Committee members fielded questions about their recommendation to completely cut Drug Ed and add a new drug crisis dimension to FONE.

"We felt Drug Ed did not justify their existence except perhaps for drug crisis and FONE was already doing that," Martin said.

"We wanted to cut down their program and develop a new program," Skinner said.

Lack of professionalism, possible legal problems and overstepping of original bounds were reasons cited for the recommendation by committee members.

Martin said drug-related information is available elsewhere and not in demand.

Leftist, Marxist demonstrators mount opposition to Khomeini

TEHRAN, Iran (AP)—Supporters of the capital's top Shiite Moslem leader—whose family was abducted last week by unknown militiamen—rallied throughout Iran Tuesday in a widening rift between groups that supported the rise of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Demonstrations in favor of Ayatollah Mahmoud Taleghani were held in the capital and in Tabriz, Zanjan, Gorgan, Rasht, Mashad and in various cities along the Persian Gulf. No serious incidents were reported.

The demonstrations threatened to escalate into street confrontations between Khomeini's Islamic revolutionary committees and Taleghani's two heavily armed groups—the leftist Fedayeen and the Marxist-oriented Mojahedeen.

Taleghani, who organized huge anti-shah demonstrations of the revolution, is the popular leader of Tehran's Shiite Moslems. He left the capital Friday for an undisclosed hiding place to protest the detention of his two sons and daughter-in-law last Thursday by unidentified Islamic militiamen, reportedly opposed to his liberalism.

Justice 'blind' to sightless man

BALDWIN—Harold Kennedy has been sightless for nearly 54 years, but he figures he's not nearly as blind as justice in Douglas County.

A quirk of fate caused Kennedy to lose his eyesight while working on a road gang for Douglas County in 1925.

A quirk in the law left him with virtually no compensation for the injury.

"If my accident happened today I'd sue them for $10 million," Kennedy, now 73, said. "They could have given something to me, but they were so damned little."

Kennedy, who had just turned 20, was helping build a new Lawrence-to-Baldwin road for 35 cents an hour when a box of dynamite blew up in front of him on Aug. 18, 1925, permanently blinding him in both eyes.

The Douglas County Commission agreed to cover about $2,000 worth of Kennedy's medical bills but balked when he and his parents asked for a monthly lifetime pension of $50.

A state law at the time permitted such pensions for severely disabled workers but required a public vote if the requested amount was more than $25 a month.

The question was put to Douglas County voters in November 1930, and the pension was approved, 4,343 to 3,078.

But in January 1931, the commission, citing a county attorney's opinion that the referendum was not binding, still refused to grant the pension.

Carlin OKs utility tax removal

TOPEKA—Gov. John Carlin signed into law Tuesday the bill removing the state's 3 percent sales tax from residential utility bills, saying it moves Kansas "closer to addressing our energy problems in a meaningful and coherent fashion."

It will mean an estimated $22 million in tax relief to Kansans who pay their own electric, natural gas, water and telephone bills. The law goes into effect July 1.

If a person's total bill from the four utility services totals $100 a month, it will mean a $3 tax break. If those four bills total $200 a month, the tax relief will amount to $6.

Carlin said in a prepared statement read at his news conference, "This bill signifies an awareness by both the governor and the Legislature that our energy problems, specifically the high cost of energy, will be with us for a long time and that we must take whatever actions we can to alleviate the economic burden felt by energy consumers."

Libel—'state of mind' at issue

WASHINGTON—A report that may represent a major breach in the secret deliberations of the Supreme Court says the justices have decided against the news media in a ruling that could alter the nation's libel law.

In nationally televised reports Monday night and Tuesday morning, ABC News said the court soon will rule that public figures suing for libel may ask what a journalist's "state of mind" was while preparing the challenged news story.

The report said Justice John Paul Stevens argued during one of the court's closed conferences—attended only by the nine justices—that such a ruling would "chill" free press rights.

Such reports, leaking a decision or a particular vote before it is formally announced, are rare in the court's 190-year history.

The ABC report, on which court spokesman Barrett McGurn refused comment, centered on a case argued before the justices last Oct. 31.

It involves a still-pending $44.7 million lawsuit by former Army Lt. Col. Anthony Herbert against CBS, the network's "60 Minutes" news program, correspondent Mike Wallace, producer Barry Lando and the Atlantic Monthly.

Herbert, who gained national prominence in 1971 when he charged his superior officers with covering up war crimes in South Vietnam, charged that a "60 Minutes" telecast in 1973 "falsely and maliciously" depicted him as a liar.

Why worry about gays?

Dr. William Masters and Virginia Johnson, the famous husband-wife sex therapist team, are about to publish another book based on their sexual studies.

Their latest book is the result of a 15-year-study of homosexual men and women. What mind-bending findings did they come up with? What new sexual and social discoveries were made?

According to Masters and Johnson (Are you ready for this?), homosexuals are no different in their physical responses to sex than anyone else and deserve to be treated as normal human beings.

Thank you Masters and Johnson. At last you will put into print what people of understanding have known and have been trying to get across to others for years.

Thank you Masters and Johnson and good luck in convincing others, as you are convinced, homosexuality is neither a physical nor an emotional illness nor a genetic disorder but merely a form of learned behavior.

"Merely" is a good word for this discussion because it means "simply." Accepting homosexuals or homosexuality should be simple. That they have to be "accepted" at all is a reflection of the misunderstanding and intolerance surrounding gays.

There's that word again. Gays. Homosexuals prefer it to faggots but it's still a label. It's ridiculous to label somebody because of their sexual habits. If you have to categorize people there are plenty of other personality traits to pick on.

Homosexuals are picked on—some "normal" heterosexual males enjoy beating up or throwing bottles at "abnormal" homosexuals; some "normal" heterosexual Bible experts enjoy telling "abnormal" homosexuals they will surely go to hell.

What's really "queer" is to place so much importance on sex and how and with who people prefer to do it.

People make a big deal about homosexuality; so, homosexuals make a big deal about them making a big deal about homosexuality. Then everyone—heterosexual, homosexual or asexual—ends up confused, misunderstood or intolerant.

Worrying about someone else's sexual preferences is a waste of time.

Val Henson

Wichita will remember

EDITOR'S NOTE: Val Henson is a sophomore in journalism and mass communications who attended the concert in Wichita on Easter Sunday. This is her account of the riot.

"There were little kids in the park—why did you do it?"

"What in the hell do you think you guys were doing?"

"Kill the PIGS!!!"

Easter Sunday, 1979. It was a perfect, breezy day. Herman Hill Park was hosting 3,500 people for an outdoor rock concert. There were little children running about. There were babies sleeping in the shade. The music was good.

Of course, there were police there. In the middle of the concert they asked people to move illegally parked cars. There were some boos and complaining, but all but one car was moved.

As Wichita Police Chief Richard LaMunyon said: "There were a truck full of guys—six or seven—who apparently decided that there weren't enough police in the world to make them move."

The first inkling of trouble came during a break in the concert.

Apparently a policeman and a concert goer began exchanging words and then blows. Some onlookers heckled the policeman. It was about 5 p.m. A minute later the buzzing of the onlookers suddenly rose to a frightened shout. Panic slashed through the 2,000 men, women and children lazing around the park. Suddenly everyone was fleeing, many not even knowing why. A few seconds later they found out.

SUDDENLY THE air was poison. "It's tear gas"—someone yelled. I couldn't breathe, and my lungs were on fire. I was blinded by the unseen, awful thing. One small boy, about 4 or 5, fell. Someone grabbed him up and kept on running. One boy on crutches was knocked down. His brother lay on top of him to shelter him as much as he could.

From the main street, Pawnee, startled people suddenly saw 2,500 terror-stricken people converging on them. People ran into the busy four-lane in front of cars to get away from the tear gas.

"Safely" on the other side of the park there was a stunned silence broken by rasping coughs and children and people crying. A terrible, uncontrollable anger swept through the people. In an instant a group of people began running again, this time back toward the police. Someone screamed "those fuckers are gonna pay!"

As the mob swept down on the small line of police, the police stepped back in sudden fear.

"There were little kids—BABIES—in the park you stupid PIGS!" Someone cried and the riot began. Bottles and rocks flew. People went beserk. Police began shooting guns. A guy was suddenly screaming "My God! My leg, oh my leg! Oh my God!" He had been hit by a ricocheting bullet. And another guy was down, he had been shot in the knee. It infuriated the mob more. A cop went down. A police car was demolished. It was the '60s all over again.

BACK ON the "safe" side of the park, police radios were crackling with urgency. "Send more reinforcements. Emergency. The people are out of control. Hurry!"

A woman with a 2-year-old child in her arms was screaming at a cop directing traffic on Pawnee.

The scattered crowd gathered in the "safe" residential district across the street.

Gasping for breath, men were wandering about asking if anyone had seen their families.

By this time, about an hour after the first wave of tear gas, there were perhaps 200 police officers on the scene. By 7 p.m. there would be, by official count, 500 officers at Herman Hill Park.

I talked to one officer. All he knew was he was called in because of a riot. A man charged up to him screaming, "I can't find my wife and my baby girl, you son-of-a-bitch." He came close to hitting the officer—just because he was in uniform.

The poison was marching its way through the park, and it was getting close. There were still a thousand people who couldn't get to their cars. Most were on the sidewalk across the street.

A few diehards were still in the park. Everyone was infuriated and bottles began flying again. There was a blue unmarked police car parked on Pawnee and an angry group was tearing it apart. They jumped on the hood and roof. They busted the windows and they kicked in the doors.

A MAN, with blood all over him, was being helped down the sidewalk, supported by two of his friends.

One girl spoke for many: "I can't believe this is happening."

Reinforcements were still being called in.

Suddenly, someone screamed "GAS!" and the monster was right there. People turned and fled into the residential area. They ran into houses of people they didn't even know. People were pushing and scrambling to get in the comparative safety of the houses. One guy stumbled into a house and collapsed on the floor just inside the door. He was choking and foaming at the mouth from the gas. Now the residential area was being gassed!

As the gas cleared, people came out of hiding.

At about 6:30 things seemed calmer. I walked across the street. Suddenly, out of nowhere, a cop was in front of me and told us to "get the fuck out of here." He sounded so threatening and he looked so mean and mad that for a split second I froze, terrified, with my hands up. I had nowhere to go. He took his shotgun and with both hands bashed the butt of it against my shoulder. It hurled me against a car and to the ground. I scrambled to get around the car before he hit me again.

Just then someone else yelled "GAS!" I ran. Once inside a house I collapsed in shock and fear.

ONE MAN who lived on the corner came out of his house with water and wet wash cloths to give aid to the people who were half-conscious and lying in his front yard. According to his wife, 35-year-old Pat Hemmerich, the police beat him and arrested him for no reason "in his own front yard!" She was hit in the mouth by a cop. Neither one had even been in the park.

Another man I talked to said he also had been beaten by the cops. He had been "just walking out of the park" when a cop hit him with a billy club and "knocked me on my ass."

Finally, at about 8 p.m. the park was cleared except for about 400 police officers standing at the park's entrance. People all over the block, and many other blocks too, were out on their front porches with the kids they had taken into their homes. Every once in a while a bottle or two would be thrown, and the gas alarm would go off again.

As the night wore on, people began discussing the incident rationally. The majority said they felt the police had overreacted. As one person said:

"Man, they could have told us the park was closed down. Man, all those innocent people down there—half of 'em didn't even know anything was wrong. They should have warned us first!"

Sitting on Hemmerich's porch were about five persons. At 8:30, a television station cameraman came around. Right after that two policemen walked up to the porch. They were conducting an investigation. The first thing said to the cops was "you guys sure screwed up royal this time!" After a freezing reception, the cops walked away and someone yelled: "Man, we pay your damn salary—YOU'RE FIRED!"

Hemmerich summed up many people's feelings in a statement she made to the police and the press:

"Until just about an hour ago I backed you guys up 100 percent. Now, I would prefer you got the hell off of my property."

BUT WHO IS really to blame? At about 9 p.m., I hailed a young cop from across the street to ask if I could get my car. He was as sorry as I the whole thing ever happened. As we parted, we shook hands in a gesture of compromise—we gripped hard. The insanity, stupidity and sorrow of the day was reflected in his eyes as it was in mine. Two innocent human beings from each side of the war, one in raggedy jeans and one in uniform, met at the middle of the battle grounds and were friends because of their innocence.

But who were the ones who weren't innocent? Who or what could cause such hatred among people?

Sixty-seven people were injured—37 civilians and 30 officers. Thirteen Wichita police cars were put completely out of service, and 20 more were vandalized. Ten to 13 Sheriff's Patrol cars were vandalized, two were totaled. Damage was estimated at $80,000.

Wichita will not forget this Easter for a long, long time.

Ideas will save money, time, possibly Nichols

By LISA BEAM
Collegian Reporter

Protest was an avenue of student support that played a major role in getting a stay of execution for Nichols Gymnasium, and another avenue of support is now available via a contest of ideas for Nichols.

Students and faculty from the College of Architecture and Design are sponsoring a student competition to find the best plan or strategy for renovation of the Nichols ruin.

Tom Hollinberger, competition coordinator, said although the contest is sponsored by the College of Architecture and Design, students from other areas are encouraged to submit ideas.

"Usually in a feasibility study the group develops a handful of alternatives and examines cost and benefits of each. To save time and money, this competition will provide those alternatives," Hollinberger said.

Hollinberger said reasons for the competition are to get the most out of feasibliity study monies, to get student input and to give a feasibility committee a running start.

The deadline for entries is 5 p.m. May 4. An information meeting will be at noon today in room 206 of the K-State Union.

Hollinberger said an initial screening committee will be made up of faculty and students from the College of Architecture and Design.

"This group will narrow the entries down to a workable size and then a blue ribbon committee composed of a well-rounded group of professional and lay-people will judge them and pick the top ones in each of the categories outlined in the contest program.

"It's more than a design competition, it's an idea competition. A good written idea is just as valuable as a set of plans," he said.

THE TOP THREE entries will be awarded prize money May 8. First prize is $100.

"After the ideas are in and the winners are chosen, we'll take the top entries and develop them even further using student and faculty volunteers," Hollinberger said.

The outcome of the contest will be presented to a feasiblity study committee as a handful of completed and cost-estimated projects, he said.

"A couple of design instructors are talking about using the competition as a student option for a class project," Hollinberger said.

He said if the $2,500 tentatively appropriated for the study is approved the Kansas Legislature in its clean-up session beginning April 25, they hope the study would be completed within the next few months.

"By giving Nichols a stay of execution, they have, quite frankly, placed the burden of proof on us," Hollinberger said.

The tentative appropriation of state money for a study was made by the Legislature with the stipulation that students, alumni and-or the administration supply a matching $2,500.

The feasibility committee set up by the Legislature will consist of a state representative, a state senator, a faculty representative, a representative appointed by K-State President Duane Acker and a student representative.

High blood pressure? Fair offers information

Do you suffer from high blood pressure? Has the lack of liver in your diet made you anemic?

You may not know, but you can find out at Lafene's "Are You High?" health fair from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., April 25 in the K-State Union.

The fair is coordinated by Joyce Libra, director of health education at the Lafene Student Health Center.

Tests will be given for high blood pressure, anemia, diabetes, and glaucoma, as well as specific behaviors regarding weight, exercise, drinking, stress and other health risks, Libra said.

The Canadian Lifestyle Profile also will be offered at the fair, she said. The profile is a questionnaire to help an individual assess his health risks.

Libra said, in addition to the testing, the Center for Student Development will have biofeedback equipment at the fair.

The fair is sponsored by Lafene Student Health Center in cooperation with the Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation, the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, Phi Epsilon Kappa physical education interest group, and Delta Psi Kappa women's athletic honorary, Libra said.

'Patience is an eagerness to do nothing.'
—Dwight Nesmith

Birdman of Manhattan

By CAROL WRIGHT
Contributing Writer

Blue and yellow cans, matchbooks, nails and a nest clutter his work table. Dipping his fingers into the tiny mound of satin-textured seeds; he pauses, squints and then delicately strokes the bird's fragile wings.

Dwight Nesmith creates finches, warblers, sparrows, meadowlarks, baby robins and other birds from wood and more than 100 types of seeds.

An associate professor of engineering, Nesmith shapes, whittles and composes harmonious bird ensembles in his home's basement workshop.

Inside a glass cage, three blue jays ruffle their feathers, appearing to strike forth with their familiar high-pitch shrieks; an owl with a wing span of 24 inches keeps vigil in one dimly lit corner of Nesmith's basement. The owl's shadow cascades against a shelf where two hungry baby robins peer from their nest.

Nesmith has been creating birds for about 15 years. He enjoys the hobby because it is relaxing.

"You see, to me it isn't tense," Nesmith said. "The only times I get terribly frustrated is when the bird is almost finished, I'm holding it by those two little legs and I drop the darn thing."

DEVOTING four to five hours a night, and up to 15 to 16 hours on the weekends to his hobby, this mechanical engineer is determined not to neglect his birds.

"When I have nothing to do in the evenings, I sit down on the bench and that's how I spend my time," he said.

When he first started his craft, Nesmith would use seeds and "ad lib" the birds. "So I got some very pretty, very grotesque birds," he said, laughing. Because Nesmith doesn't consider himself a wood carver. His designing of certain birds, like owls and meadowlarks, was difficult in the beginning.

Later, he studied bird books more closely, picking out specific birds he could create with the seeds he had. As he accomplished that, the birds reached their height of distinction, he said.

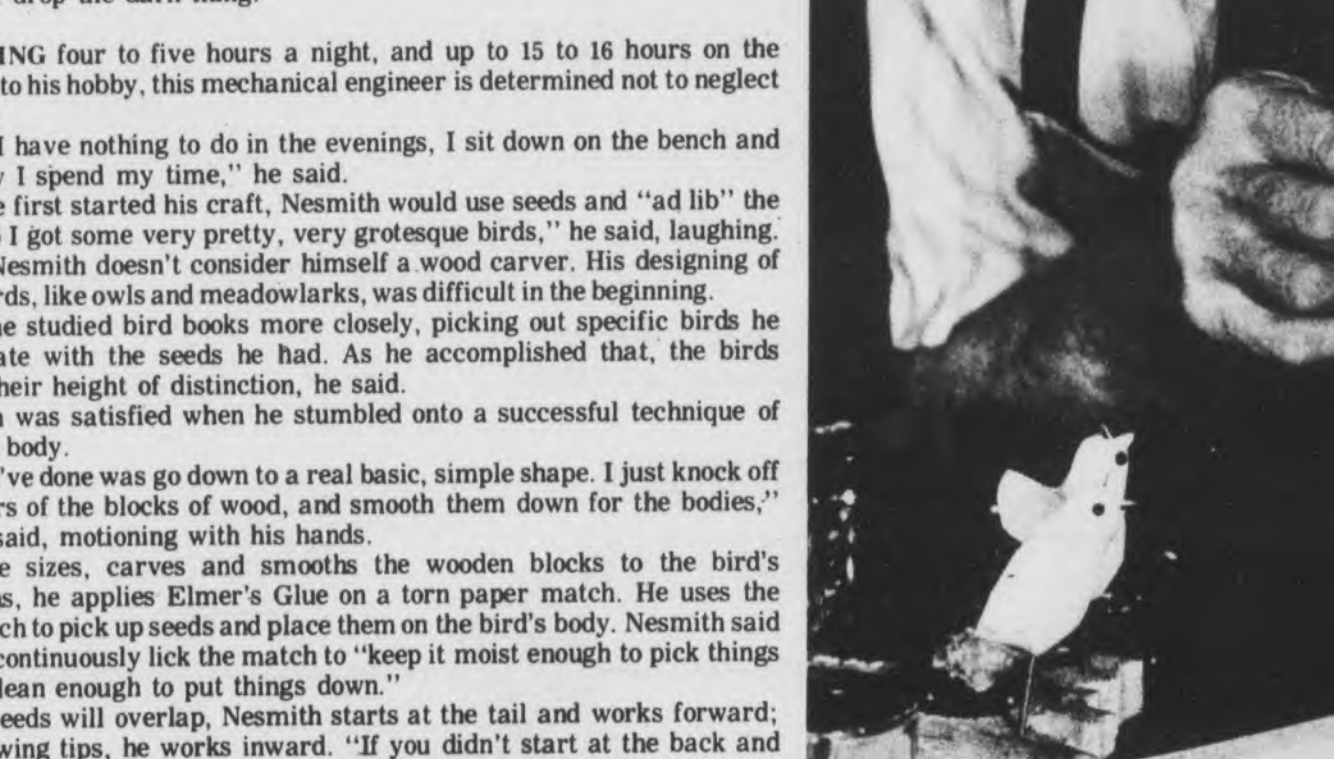
Nesmith was satisfied when he stumbled onto a successful technique of making a body.

"What I've done was go down to a real basic, simple shape. I just knock off the corners of the blocks of wood, and smooth them down for the bodies," Nesmith said, motioning with his hands.

After he sizes, carves and smooths the wooden blocks to the bird's dimensions, he applies Elmer's Glue on a torn paper match. He uses the glued match to pick up seeds and place them on the bird's body. Nesmith said he has to continuously lick the match to "keep it moist enough to pick things up, and clean enough to put things down."

So the seeds will overlap, Nesmith starts at the tail and works forward; from the wing tips, he works inward. "If you didn't start at the back and move forward, it would look as if the birds were flying backwards," he said.

OF THE 100 different kinds of seeds he uses, about two-thirds are wild. Nesmith prefers wild seeds because they are more obedient than "tame " seeds, and will lie down to achieve a feather effect.



"Almost all the birds use redbud pods for the primary wing and tail feathers. I've used rose of Sharon for the speckled breasts on the baby robins," he said. "I get the softness of the feathers on the breast for the baby robins, and also get the little dark spot in the middle."

Catalpa (or Indian bean), shepherd's-purse, dried lavender blossoms, velvet weed, hollyhock, cumin and wild parsnip are other seeds and herbs Nesmith uses. Sometimes he purchases smaller seeds—like sesame, mustard and poppy—at health foods stores.

HE ALSO LIKES to work with some grains, like millet and all kinds of rice. Nesmith uses tame sunflower seeds for the birds' beaks, and shapes their eyes with black beans.

Frequently, Nesmith scouts around Tuttle Creek to collect driftwood for bird scene perches. He drills a small hole in the wood body and another in the driftwood for the bird's legs. To give a more natural look to the legs, Nesmith uses finish nails instead of painted finish nails.

Nesmith started selling his birds in 1970. His first crude models cost between $8 and $9. Today, most of his birds sell from $30 to $70.

"I sold a mama hummingbird with three babies in a nest in a glass cage for $150," he said.

Some people who purchase Nesmith's birds are nature lovers; others buy them for gifts, and because they are unique decorations, according to Nesmith.

HE ALSO HAS been selling his birds at the National Crafts Festival in Silver Dollar City for the past four or five years. When he travels to the festival, he takes along a wooden plaque, inscribed "The Bird Man of Manhattan, Kan." He displays the plaque at his booth.

He said he enjoys "dressing like a hillbilly," and meeting the people who visit the festival. One of the high compliments he receives there comes from those who think he's doing taxidermy.

"And I'll ask them, 'Well, do I really look that mean, that even from a distance I would go around killing little birds?'" he said.

Compared to embroidery, which Nesmith has done, his bird hobby goes much faster. He scoffs at the need for patience with his art.

"Patience is an eagerness to do nothing," he said, fervently. "If there had been enough patient people in the world, we'd still be living in trees wishing there was some way to keep the rain off."

Rampaging waters deluge South; 'We're prepared for the worst'

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Hundreds of residents downstream of flooded Jackson fled their homes Tuesday as the surging Pearl River defied forecasts and edged higher. In Alabama, thousands were evacuated as new flooding threatened.

And to the south, the Army Corps of Engineers said Tuesday it would open the Bonnet Carre Spillway, hoping to slow the rising Mississippi River before it strains the levees protecting New Orleans.

Officials here have estimated that more than 17,000 people already have been flooded out in the metropolitan area. Sandbag levees designed to stem the rising Pearl were holding.

Evacuations were underway in the downstream cities of Georgetown, Monticello and Columbia, where officials said as many as 2,000 people might leave.

"We're prepared for the worst in case it happens," Monticello Mayor Tommy Jolly said. "We're moving people out of low areas now."

President Carter on Monday designated the state a disaster area, making thousands of flood victims eligible for federal assistance.

In Alabama, the number of people evacuated because of floods rose toward 5,000 Tuesday with as many as 3,000 people in and around Selma being evacuated.

K-State victory ends with classic singles duel

By KENT GASTON
Sports Editor

The outcome of the Emporia State-K-State tennis match was already decided, but a classic confrontation continued at the L.P. Washburn courts Tuesday afternoon.

Sports

The cool, slim, quiet Gary Titus of K-State vs. the powerful, bearded, explosive-tempered Les Stafford of Emporia.

Titus struggled past Stafford 7-6 in the first set, but Stafford countered by winning the second set 6-1. In the third set, Stafford threatened to run his opponent off the court, rolling up a 5-1 lead.

But, Titus scratched back to take the set into a tiebreaker.

"This is it," K-State Coach Steve Snodgrass said. "This is where we'll see how much confidence he has."

The duellists traded the first few points of the nine-point tiebreaker, in which each man tries to get five points first.

But then, Titus' "gutty comeback" failed, as Stafford pulled ahead 4-2 and prepared to serve.

"(Titus) is down 4-2 and (Stafford) is serving," Snodgrass said. "That's what you call having your back against the wall. He's got one of the best serves in the area."

THAT SERVE quickly put Titus on the defensive, and after a brief exchange, his lob soared past the end line. Stafford, whose act included yelling and scourging the wind with obscene gestures, had won.

Stafford won the battle, but K-State won the war, 5-4.

'Cats softball team eats up Lady Jayhawks' 'dessert'

After a close extra-inning loss to Kansas this weekend in the Big 8 tournament, the K-State softball team opened Tuesday's doubleheader with loud, determined chants of "Eat 'em up, eat 'em up, KSU." But seven innings and nine unanswered runs later, the KU team had dined on the 'Cats.

Before the doubleheader was over, though, K-State had deprived the Lady Jayhawks of their dessert with a 6-5 come-from-behind win.

KU's nine-run streak began in the second inning when Kelly Phipps knocked in three runs with a deep left field triple which landed inches from the foul line. Phipps then crossed the plate on a hit by Laura Frost, putting KU ahead 4-0.

The Jayhawks continued their dominance with two runs in the fifth, another in the sixth and two in the final inning to clinch their 16th victory against seven losses.

The 'Cats came back in the nightcap with a new lineup featuring several non-starters and an eventual 6-5 win.

K-State collected its first run in the first inning, but KU looked like it was ready for a repeat of the first game, scoring five runs on three K-State errors in the third inning.

The 'Cats left the KU runs unanswered until the fifth inning when Janelle Poppe was walked, moved to second on a perfectly executed bunt by Lisa Packard, and eventually brought home by a Margo Jones single, narrowing the score to 5-2.

After a short conference with Coach Mary Phyl Dwight, Laurie Lamb, who usually doesn't start, hit a triple deep in right field. As Lamb rounded third base, it looked as though she would be out at home, but the catcher fumbled the ball and allowed K-State to go ahead 6-5.

Tickets still on sale for basketball buffet

Today is the last day to buy tickets for a reception honoring the K-State women's basketball team which will be at 7 p.m. Friday, April 20 in the Flint Hills Room of the K-State Union.

Tickets for the cheese and dessert buffet are $3 and can be purchased in Room 110 of Ahearn Field House.

Tennis...

The doubles matches were played first, in an effort to take a 2-1 or 3-0 lead into the singles competition, Snodgrass said. Emporia boasted Stafford and Ken Hush, two very tough players, according to Snodgrass.

However, the plan backfired.

"I've been praising (the Wildcats) and telling them how great they are, but today it just got down to some basic stupidity in our doubles play," Snodgrass said.

Titus and Jeff Henderson lost to Stafford and Hush 6-3, 6-4, and Dave Krizman and Dave Nelson lost to Scott Enge and Mark Small 6-4, 6-1.

The No. 3 team of Steve Webb and Greg Last beat Emporia 7-5, 6-1.

In singles, K-State lost only the No. 1 match (Titus-Stafford) and the No. 6 match (Enge beat Nelson 6-3, 7-5).

IN THE ONLY match with which Snodgrass said he was pleased, Henderson beat Hush 7-6, 6-4. The other K-State victories were claimed by Last over Mike Hougland 6-3, 6-1; Webb over Small 6-2, 6-1 and Krizman over George Downing 6-2, 6-0.

"I'm pretty disappointed,," Snodgrass said."'We're lucky to win. This is the same team that took third at the Emporia tournament over the weekend, and we just beat them up and down the street there."

The Wildcats, now 8-7, must improve in doubles "Or we'll be in trouble in the Big 8," Snodgrass said.

"We're a solid fifth in the Big 8," he said. "For us to push on higher, we've got to win the key match, and to do that, we've got to win the key points."

The Titus-Stafford clash was an example of the team's problem, Snodgrass said.

"There's an example of playing good enough to play a good player close, but not being confident enough to go ahead and win it."

Carter's request 'no sweat' if Americans adapt

Beating the heat this summer can be a breeze

Just because President Carter has asked Americans to keep their thermostats turned up to 80 degrees this summer doesn't mean everyone will be wearing shorts and chugging iced tea to beat the heat.

"Keeping it up to 80 degrees won't be any problem at all," Frederick Rohles, director of K-State's Institute for Environmental Research, said.

The institute conducted research which shows that 78 degrees is the most comfortable temperature for people wearing light clothing while engaging in fairly sedentary activity. Rohles said this thermal comfort rating is based on seven factors: air temperature, relative humidity, the mean radiant temperature of walls and ceilings, air movement, what the person is doing, how long he's doing it and what he's wearing.

People will change their habits as these factors change and the temperature goes up, he said.

"Already we're seeing a tendency for men to go without ties," Rohles said. "Then, we may see people go to shorts. They do in Britain; maybe not in offices, but I've seen professors in classes. Then they'll go ahead with electric fans."

"With this light clothing and electric fans, people will tolerate 80 degrees," he said.

"You can come up with all kinds of ways to beat this (high temperature)," Rohles said.

"Cold drinks in the summer are good," he said. "And wearing sandals is important."

To keep the summer's cool evening air in a house, close drapes as soon as the sunlight starts shining in. Also open windows as soon as the temperature gets down to 80 degrees then keep the house closed all day to keep that air in, he said.

Rohles said part of a person's reaction to different temperatures is psychological.

"People walk into a motel and first check that the air conditioning is on then make sure there are blankets to cover up with," Rohles said.

Gays and straights: daydreams 'cross' over

BOSTON (AP)—In their most private daydreams, straight men and women often fantasize about homosexual encounters, while gays have arousing thoughts about trysts with the opposite sex, says a new Masters and Johnson study.

What the sex researchers called "cross-preference fantasies" were the third most common sexual daydreams among homosexual men and women. They ranked fourth among heterosexual men and fifth among straight women.

HOWEVER, they noted that people often visualize sex frolics that they have no desire to act out in real life.

"The fact that homosexual men and women had fantasies about heterosexual activity did not necessarily indicate the presence of a latent or unrealized commitment to heterosexuality," they wrote, "nor did cross-preference fantasies enjoyed by heterosexual men and women necessarily indicate a latent demand for overt homosexual experience."

The husband and wife team of William Masters and Virginia Johnson report on the sexual preferences of straights and gays in their new book, "Homosexuality in Perspective," which will be published Monday.

The researchers said most people were reluctant at first to admit their cross-preference fantasies and often detailed them only during their third indepth interview.

They said that in their clinic in St. Louis they are treating for the first time homosexual men who are impotent and lesbians who cannot reach climax.

POTEMKIN
DIRECTED BY SERGEI EISENSTEIN

The famous film about the mutiny of the sailors of the battleship "Prince Potemkin" and the massacre of the people who sympathized with them in pre-revolutionary Russia.

Potemkin has been called the greatest film of all time by the 1958 Brussels poll of film critics. Not only is it one of the most important films of the silent era, many believe it was Eisenstein's greatest work. "A supreme example of advanced cinematography—a combination of the emotional, the documentary and the absolute film with an awe inspiring quality."
—Paul Rotha

'Turn 'em loose Bruce'

'Bizarre' decisions spark furor

NEW YORK (AP)—Bruce Wright is one of 92 criminal court judges in the city, but controversy dogs his decisions and statements in a way it does no other. To some people he is a hero, to others a Hitler.

The issue is usually his low-bail policy, but beyond that there are uncomfortable questions of racism. And Wright, who is black, is outspoken to the point that he is accused of polarization.

Wright lit the latest uproar last Wednesday when he released without bail a black man accused of slashing a white decoy policeman disguised as a derelict. The judge fueled the fire by saying police "have a license to hunt down blacks and kill them with impunity."

Mayor Edward Koch termed Wright's bail decision "bizarre." The head of the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association called for his removal from the bench, saying the remark "has outdone Hitler."

IT WAS NOT the first time Wright has created a furor with his bail policy. The police association dubbed him several years ago "Turn 'em loose Bruce."

Wright does not back off from controversy. In a guest sermon Sunday at a black church in Brooklyn, he read the names of three blacks—ages 10, 15 and 22—killed by white police officers since 1974.

"When I refer to white cops as killers, I've read the indictments," he said. Two of the officers involved were tried and acquitted; the third was found not guilty by reason of insanity.

Wright also chided the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and the National Urban League as "gentle collaborators" for accepting "white money."

Despite the slap, an NAACP spokesman defended Wright: "Clearly in this city, bail has been the mechanism by which (the) presumption of innocence has been effectively denied to black and poor people."

Wright, 60, who is in the last year of a 10-year term and says he does not expect to be reappointed, maintains that bail should be set only to ensure a defendant's appearance in court.

IN THE current case, he lifted $10,000 bail on Jerome Singleton, 30, on grounds that he had no record, had not yet been indicted and had ties to the community.

Singleton, a college student who is married and has two children, surrendered the following day, after he was indicted. Another judge reinstituted the $10,000 bail on the indictment, but a relative posted it and Singleton again went free.

But the issue of racism raised by Wright remained. "You should never expect blacks to act the same way as whites until they're treated that way."

Underground newspaper raises faculty eyebrows

By DAVE HUGHES
Staff Writer

WAMEGO—An underground newspaper, called The Student Voice, surfaced in the small, tight-knit high school of Wamego, a busy little town 15 miles east of Manhattan, and caused a bit of a stir earlier this year.

Some people, including a few teachers, contemplated charges of libel against the publishers of The Student Voice because of the printed barbs which school principal Richard Roda called "derogatory toward several teachers."

But it may be difficult to find someone at whom to level those allegations. After four issues, dating from January to mid March, and a decline in the brouhaha over the sheet, no one yet knows, or at least is not telling, who is responsible for it.

AS FAR as Roda knows, the paper is not printed or distributed on the campus. The estimated three- to five-person staff prints the sheet off campus and mails it to students' homes, apparently at random. No subscriptions are available. No return address or signature appears on the newsletter. The publishers said in their first issue they were limited, by printing and mailing costs, to 30 copies.

Roda said he contacted the KBI and postal officials, and students approached Wamego City Attorney Richard Pugh, about the legality of sendng an unsigned and possible libelous newsletter through the mail. None of those agencies yet have investigated the paper.

Because of the talk of libel, the editors of The Student Voice went to the Civil Liberties Union of Kansas for advice on their rights, according to executive director Judy Davis. Davis said, although they are not clients of KCLU, they were "terrified" of recriminations by the school's administration and wanted legal advice.

RESPONDING TO rumors he would expel the students, Roda said he would have to determine the extent to which the law was violated, if it was at all. He refused to say if anyone would be expelled.

Tracy Stewart, student body president, said The Student Voice was not what it claimed to be, but "reflected a minority of students' opinions."

"People talk in the hall" (about the paper), Stewart said. "I don't think they believe it, but they talk."

"I bet if students really sit down and think about it, they won't agree" with what the paper contends, she said.

BUT SOME students do side with the paper. One student said the paper brought out that some of the teachers at the school were incompetent, an opinion she also holds.

The controversy has died down, Roda said, and is not likely to arise unless another issue of The Student Voice hits the mailboxes.

Adulterous contract voids Frampton suit

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP)—Ruling that a contract based on adultery is void, a judge has thrown out a lawsuit in which Peter Frampton's ex-girlfriend sought half of his fortune.

An alleged oral contract between the 28-year-old rock star and Penelope McCall, 30, included "the commission of adultery," since she was married to another man at the time, state Supreme Court Justice Joseph Gagliardi ruled Tuesday.

She claimed Frampton induced her to leave her husband and move in with him in 1973 and that he abandoned her last July.

TDK's new one-second, no-headache demagnetizer.

You don't need time or technical expertise to operate TDK's exclusive instant head demagnetizer. Just pop it into your deck and push "Play" to restore musical performance lost through inevitable head magnetization. Other demagnetizers can be less effective, take more time, or actually magnetize your heads and are more difficult to use. Because our HD-01's miniature battery powers sophisticated circuitry built into a standard cassette shell, it solves all of these problems. You will hear the performance improvement in your home, portable or auto system. TDK Electronics Corp., Garden City, NY 11530.

Third round of allocations

Drug Ed crisis climaxes tonight

By MARY JO PROCHAZKA
SGA Editor
and SUZANNE SCHLENDER
Collegian Reporter

The fate of Drug Education Center and five other budgets will be debated by Student Senate during tonight's third inning of the tentative allocations series.

Three groups will be fighting recommendations by Finance Committee to reduce their funding and two of these face non-funding.

One of these two, Drug Education Center, will return a second time for an allocation decision. Drug Ed received $3,873 this year and requested $4,896 for next year.

Drug Ed Director Dave Neuhaus said he hopes to prove to senators there is a need for services offered by the center.

In their recommendation to cut all funding to Drug Ed, lack of professionalism, possible legal problems and overstepping of original bounds were cited as reasons by Finance Committee members.

Committee member John Martin said Drug Ed was dropped by the Union Program Council (UPC) from helping with drug problems at concerts because it has no liability insurance, license or legal entity to fall back on if a mistake is made and a lawsuit filed.

UPC ADVISER Rob Cieslicki said he wrote Drug Ed after the Chicago concert last October, saying its staff would no longer be used at concerts unless they acquired liability insurance.

Dr. William Tiemann, Red Cross adviser, said he advised UPC he thinks the Red Cross would be held liable for actions of Drug Ed staffers and "they don't fall under our liability umbrella." The Red Cross works at UPC concerts.

Neuhaus said he never received a letter from UPC. He said he first found out Drug Ed would not be used at concerts in January. His staff had met with Finance Committee to request money for T-shirts to identify them while working at concerts.

Martin said the committee was discussing the request when Cieslicki walked by and told the group Drug Ed staff would no longer be used.

Neuhaus said he assumed the decision was made because Red Cross staff "were there and were already covering it and very well."

Questions were raised Tuesday about the legality of a Drug Ed service in which callers are given an out-of-state address to send drug samples for analysis. An identifying number is used and analysis information is then sent to Drug Ed.

STUDENTS' ATTORNEY Nyles Davis said he met with Drug Ed and doesn't think the service is illegal because Drug Ed only gives out information and does not handle drugs.

"As far as I'm concerned, Drug Ed is simply supplying that information saying 'this is where you can get that drug analyzed,'" Davis said. "They don't even touch the drug and the people send it at their own risk."

Davis said people should know it's illegal to mail drugs because possession is illegal.

"I'm not saying Drug Ed is not really doing anything illegal because I don't know what exactly they're doing, but we did talk about the program and I didn't think it was aiding and abetting someone in committing a crime because they were just giving out information," Davis said.

Neuhaus said the service is used to keep track of what drugs are around Manhattan and warn people about potentially lethal drugs.

The outcome of the vote on Drug Ed will have a direct effect on how FONE's budget will be viewed tonight.

The committee recommended FONE take on a drug crisis dimension if Drug Ed is dropped. This would include a new FONE position of drug crisis coordinator.

"We don't feel like we can pick up the drug education function. We're not into education at all," Jim Bartlett, FONE director, said.

Isaac Turner, arts and sciences senator, asked Bartlett what services are provided by Drug Ed that would not be provided by FONE under Finance Committee's plan.

"The most important thing they do and that's education," Bartlett answered.

ARNOLD AIR SOCIETY (Air Force ROTC community service group) also faces a committee recommendation for no funding.

Scott Weber, Arnold Air representatve, said the $756 requested to attend area and national meetings would have to come out of each member's pocket if senate refuses to fund the group.

Committee member John Martin said the committee didn't want to set a precedent for groups funded by college councils, as Arnold

Between 115 and 128 U.S. Senators and Representatives are touring the globe during the 12-day Easter holiday break, according to news reports.

However, only two Kansas lawmakers will be globetrotting. After spending a few days in Kansas earlier this week, Sen. Bob Dole (R-Kan.) is scheduled to spend the rest of the break in Geneva and Rome. Dole will be in Geneva for the Strategic Arms Limitations Talks to speak with some of the leaders. He will talk to the Multi-National Trade Association about increasing exports of Kansas wheat, said a spokesman from his Topeka office.

While in Rome, Dole is scheduled to speak at a Food and Agriculture Organization meeting about increasing the use of Kansas products.

A meeting with Pope John Paul II is tentatively scheduled before Dole returns to Washington, D.C.

Third district representative, Larry Winn is scheduled to spend the entire holiday in Paris where he will appear at a NATO briefing. Winn is making the trip as part of his International Relations Committee membership in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum (R-Kan.) and state representatives Keith Sebelius, Jim Jefferies and Dan Glickman are currently traveling around their districts conducting "listening tours" and speaking before groups.

Fifth district Rep. Bob Whittaker is vacationing in Florida with his family over the Easter break.

A spokesman from Whittaker's Pittsburg office said he had co-sponsored a bill that would limit junkets by congressmen and their staffs. The bill would require any congressman or staff member to report the estimated cost of any government-sponsored trip to the House. In order for the money to be approved, three-fourths of the House would have to vote in favor.

Whittaker's spokesman said he was co-sponsoring the bill to protest the rising cost of the trips. In 1977, foreign trips cost $2.7 million and are expected to cost $3 million this year.

Lebanese militia shell U.N. forces; rightist Christians proclaim self-rule

TYRE, Lebanon (AP)—The Israeli-backed Christian military in southern Lebanon on Wednesday declared itself under "self-rule" and proclaimed a new "Free Lebanon" state, the Israeli radio said. The declaration came hours after the Christians shelled a Lebanese army unit as it joined U.N. peacekeepers in the area.

"Our intention will be to liberate all Lebanon from all the invaders and all who are foreigners and who have bad intentions against Lebanon," said a militia leader, Maj. Saad Haddad.

The Christian militia contends the Lebanese forces are heavily influenced by Syria, seen by the Christians as rivals for control of Lebanon. The Israelis and Christians share the view that a Lebanese army aided by Syria will allow Palestinian guerrilla infiltration of the Israeli border and heighten tension in the area.

Israeli radio said Haddad announced the birth of "Free Lebanon" at a news conference in the northern Israeli town of Metulla.

Lebanon's state radio called Haddad's statement "Israeli-inspired secession." Pierre Gemayel, leader of the rightist Christian Phalange Party, also condemned the declaration, saying "enough of states within a state."

THERE WAS NO immediate response from Israeli officials to Haddad's declaration. Diplomatic sources reported the United States had asked Israel to be a moderating influence on its Christian allies and allow the Lebanese army deployment in the area to proceed.

Haddad's artillery shelled the 560-man Lebanese contingent as it moved into the village of Dirdghayya, the battalion headquarters about seven miles east of Tyre.

Haddad commands a force of about 1,500 rightist Christian soldiers who were given control of a six-mile-wide strip of Lebanon's 59-mile border with Israel when the Israelis withdrew from the south after they moved against Palestinian guerrillas in a March 1978 invasion.

Berkeley burns enforcers; funds cut from pot busters

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP)—Voters in this university town have cut off funds that support the enforcement of state and federal laws against marijuana.

The voters also passed measures Tuesday to stop the city from using local funds to support South Africa's apartheid government.

The city, home of the University of California's largest campus and the scene of often violent activism in the 1960s, also elected a slate of so-called "progressive" candidates over moderate Democrats.

The marijuana measure would prohibit spending city money to enforce state and federal laws against marijuana smoking. It also directed police and other city officials to lobby for repeal of marijuana laws. The final count of all 118 precincts showed the measure passed 17,507 to 9,681.

The two anti-apartheid initiatives would ban the deposit of city money in banks with ties to South Africa. The main issue passed 17,718 to 9,314, and an enabling measure passed 16,519 to 8,454.

Senate...

Air is, to seek additional funds from senate.

Students for Handicapped Concerns' budget would be decreased $10 from this year's budget $8,300 from the $9,432 requested.

Most of the requested increase would pay the driver's salary and state car rental to shuttle handicapped students. Committee members recommended funding the shuttle system during winter months, but said the University should fund the system the rest of the year.

RECREATIONAL SERVICES wants part-time students to pay $1.25 for the Rec Services they can presently use without charge. The committee recommended 75 cents per part-time student per semester be allocated.

Pregnancy Counseling would get all the funds requested except the director's salary, if committee recommendations are approved.

Ivri Messinger, Pregnancy Counseling director, requested a monthly director's salary of $300, but the committee recommended $275.

The committee recommended $275 to keep the salary consistent with those of all other social service directors.

Senate will meet at 6 tonight in the K-State Union Big 8 room.

'Egghead' professors pull accounts

COLUMBIA Mo.—A faculty organization and a parent-teacher association have closed their accounts at a Columbia bank after the bank president called a professor "an egghead" who "sucks at the public trough."

The Columbia chapter of the American Association of University Professors closed its $800 account at the First Bank of Commerce after its president, Hartley Banks, attacked mayoral candidate Clyde Wilson.

Wilson is chairman of the sociology department at the University of Missouri-Columbia. He defeated Harold Cox, an officer of Mid-America Savings and Loan, in the election.

The Parent-Teacher Association of West Junior High School in Columbia also closed its $1,300 account Wednesday because of Banks' comments.

When asked about the incident Wednesday, Banks responded angrily that he had "no comment."

In a newspaper interview published March 26, during the mayoral campaign, Banks characterized Wilson as "anti-business, ultra-liberal.

"He is an egghead...He's never had to make a living. All he's had to do is suck at the public trough, being an educator."

Vietnam pledges demilitarized zone

BANGKOK, Thailand—Vietnam's peace negotiations with China opened in Hanoi Wednesday with a Vietnamese proposal that a demilitarized zone be established on its border with China, according to Asian news agency reports received in Bangkok.

It was the first day of talks between the two Communist neighbors, who fought a border war in February.

Vietnamese negotiator Vice Foreign Minister Phan Hien said Chinese troops still occupied more than 10 areas in Vietnamese territory. He said the Chinese were continuing to strengthen their forces along the border and that the situation was "very tense."

He proposed that both armies withdraw two to three miles from the border recognized before the Chinese invasion Feb. 17, and that prisoners of war be exchanged soon, according to a Radio Hanoi broadcast.

Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, in Tokyo for a meeting, predicted the Vietnam-China talks would take a long time.

Kissinger, speaking on Japanese television, said, "I went through four excruciating years of negotiating with the Vietnamese, and it is a pleasure which I am glad to turn over to the Chinese."

Limited black rule? Rhodesians vote

SALISBURY, Rhodesia—Officials predict at least 60 percent of the electorate will vote in the five-day elections under way to bring limited black rule to Rhodesia.

Geoff Hedges, Rhodesia's assistant police commissioner, said "terrorist intimidation" was responsible for a low turnout Wednesday at Fort Victoria in the south, where guerrilla activity has been high.

Election Registrar Eric Pope-Simmonds told reporters 1,074,570 voters—or 38 percent of the electorate—voted from poll opening Tuesday morning to 2 p.m. Wednesday.

Hedges said that in some cases guerrillas were abducting blacks in rural villages to prevent them from voting. But he said overall guerrilla activity had been lower than expected.

Cheating, stealing—welcome to college?

BERKELEY, Calif.—Cheating, stealing, misuse of financial aid, grade-inflation and misleading advertising are creating a growing ethical crisis in American colleges and universities, the Carnegie Council on Policy Studies in Higher Education warned Wednesday.

"Most institutions of higher education, to a small or large degree, exhibit one or more of these destructive aspects," the council said in an 86-page report discussed Wednesday in Washington at the annual meeting of the American Association of Higher Education.

"We see certain signs of deterioration of important parts of academic life...We are concerned," the report said.

"Unless corrective actions are taken, this situation is likely to lead some students to take even greater advantage of the situation, and to make some colleges even more reluctant to insist on ethical conduct by students and even more likely to engage in improper conduct themselves," the report warns.

'Right to know' dying out

There is an unlisted endangered species in this country—our rights.

One endangered right is being demolished faster than a starving coyote rips into a fresh carcass.

That is the people's right to know.

Many refer to it as the "freedom of the press," but that's a misnomer. "Freedom of the press" makes people think it is a right belonging to a few publishers in this country.

It isn't. The First Amendment and laws protecting a free press weren't established for a few publishers. They exist because the founders of this country believed in democracy, and knew it was impossible for the people to govern if they didn't know what their government was doing.

Because many believe the "freedom of the press" to be unimportant to the average person, few pay attention when it is swallowed.

The Supreme Court decision allowing law enforcement officials to search the private papers of reporters and newspaper offices is one way the people's right to know is being gobbled up.

President Jimmy Carter has asked for legislation to reverse that decision, saying it "poses dangers to the effective functioning of our free press."

So far, the decision stands.

Now, the Supreme Court is invading the privacy of a reporter's mind to determine the "state of mind" he was in when he investigated a story. The current laws regarding reporting public figures requires the public figure to prove "actual malice" which the court has defined as "reckless disregard" of the truth.

If the "state of mind" decision stands, public figures can sue the press for stories where it can be proven the reporters were out to get them. This could cause the press to censor itself, cutting down on information the public receives.

If "state of mind" was used as a test when Watergate was being investigated, it wouldn't have been difficult to show the reporters were determined to prove the Committee to Re-elect the President was involved in illegal activities.

How is this different from policemen going out to get criminals when officials know of illegal activities but haven't been able to prove them?

The press receives information which is investigated to see if the it is true or not. It wouldn't take much for a clever lawyer to stretch the "state of mind" clause until it is proven the reporter was out to get somebody simply because he proved a "tip" to be true.

If this "state of mind" decision was in effect in 1972, Watergate might never have been exposed, and the public would never have known.

Kedzie windows— A pain in the pane

Old Kedzie's beauty is only pane deep.

Old Kedzie Hall took on a new, clean look recently with the installation of new windows. For this we Kedzie kids give thanks to the taxpayers, legislators, regents and University Facilities.

The installers from the window manufacturer did an excellent job with a minimum of muss and fuss. And the windows appear to be of excellent quality with energy-conserving features such as insulated tinted-glass.

But there's evidence of a Kedzie caper.

Those of us housed in old Kedzie depend on window air conditioners in most rooms to survive from spring until late fall—sometimes during the winter. Unless you happened to be in one of the few rooms where you could open a window, you had to turn on the window coolers to beat the heat. Uninsulated steam pipes in many of the first floor rooms keep temperatures too high for habitation even on below-freezing days.

WHEN THE NEW windows arrived, some of us thought we had the answer to year-around comfort. These windows had a lower section which could easily be opened for a breath of fresh air.

Then came the bad news. The new windows weren't made to accommodate the window cooling units. The installers said their firm wasn't told about the window units and would have made the windows with air conditioner inserts at the top, if they had been instructed to do so.

There are old axioms about spilt milk and stolen horses—the deed is done. University Facilities will install the window units by removing the lower portion of the new windows—which means we can have cooled air but most rooms won't be able to save energy by opening windows.

Calvin Hall is scheduled for the new windows, and the installers say the windows there will have the air conditioner inserts. Hooray for the Calvinites, whose lives obviously were preordained for eventual year-around comfort. We Kedzie sinners will look south with envy.

MEANWHILE, in old Kedzie we continue to trip over window cooling units on the floors of most rooms and exist in hope that the coolers can be installed before the Collegian's fearless forecaster calls for a cold spell (which actually means 100-degree heat).

One of the Collegian's computerized typesetting units capitulated Tuesday to the combination of an I-refuse-to-turn-off steam radiator and 80-degree weather. The back-up unit managed to spit out enough copy to get Wednesday's paper to the press but gave a few groans of warning that it won't continue to behave in the Kedzie sweat shop.

So don't judge old Kedzie by its more attractive cover. Outside of those windows it may be spring, but on the inside summer is simmering—along with the Collegian's editorial page editor who is hot about this column being late.

Palestine key to peace

Editor,

Re: "Arafat hurting peace game" April 13.

It is very important to recount the Palestinian problem in Palestine because it is the real issue. History will present the facts that the Israeli government and state now exists on the claim of their religious right to Palestine. So bringing the Palestinian history is an essential part in any peace treaty. (The geographic land now called Israel was Palestine until 1948.)

Sadat's and Begin peace treaty did not reflect the view of the Arabs, nor the Palestinian issue. It is a treaty of two men sharing American interest more than anything else.

In your letter you said Arafat said he wanted to drive the Israelis to the sea. I wish you would have given dates so I can judge Arafat whose own homeland was taken away from him, worse than that, he was kicked out of it.

Nobel prizes were awarded. It is ironic Begin was awarded a Nobel Prize while if we go back in history we would find out that Begin was a leader of the Dier-Yassien massacre in April 1948 where 150 pregnant women, old people and kids were stabbed and killed with no mercy. Interestingly, when Israelis kill and rape it is not reported or stated "They clean up the illness." So I wish we gave Nobel Prizes on moral basis not on a money-influenced peace.

Sadat and Begin will keep having difficulty in their peace treaty not because of the Organization of Arab Students ideas but because of the following:

1) On March 20, 1979, Begin spelled out his view of Palestinian "autonomy"during the debate over the peace treaty. He vowed never to withdraw from the occupied territories, (except from his obligations with Sadat to "withdraw from Sinai") never to give up control of Jerusalem, and never to allow the establishment of a Palestinian state. Hence, the treaty is designed to legalize Isreal's occupation of Palestine.

2) A just peace, a real peace, cannot be set on arm supplies to both Egypt and Isreal.

3) Moshe Dyan, Israeli foreign minister, said a few years ago "Borders are not set by markings on a map. Borders are determined by settlements." In their Kenesset, there is a map stating that "the promised land of Isreal is from the Euphrates River to the Nile." Do they plan to occupy these states, too, like Palestine?

Our morals, religon and political background as Arabs causes us to look for peace for all the Middle East, a permanent peace, not a one-sided peace.

Grade school tactics unfair

Editor,

"Concerning the john seats: Your floor funds will pay for 5 broken seats and 9 hours labor."

This is the approach the housing department and Goodnow Hall director Sharlene Mitchell use to control vandalism. Mitchell claims this approach is extra effective because the money, in this case $97, comes from floor funds—a fund students care more about as it provides such services as ping pong paddles, functions and cookie sheets.

Exactly what floor funds are to be used for has never been well defined, but Thomas Frith, director of housing, has established paying for vandalism repairs with floor funds is within the limits of uses.

Frith and Mitchell point out in the end, the students will pay. Mitchell claims taking the money from floor funds causes a greater concern among students (it could mean one less function) which deters future vandalism as well as appeals to the present vandal's sense of responsibility to "pay up" in order to keep the group from suffering.

Goodnow residents realize one way or another they will pay, but using floor funds creates several ethical problems.

As floor funds are set aside basically for social and recreational purposes, it seems wrong to allow vandalism to cut down on planned activities.

Giving the floor planning committees "X" amount of dollars and then taking away some of that money in the middle of the year, after the committee has evenly spaced activities throughout the year, leaves an imbalance that can make the planning committee's effort seem futile and disappoint students by the decrease in floor activities.

This disappointment may keep some vandalism from occuring, but this grade school tactic has little place in a college dorm.

Goodnow residents are not a united, controllable group like a fifth grade class who all know "who did it" and are waiting for someone to "snitch." They don't need to be manipulated into "caring more."

Those who committed, or who are thinking of committing crimes, in the dorm should not be deterred by the disappointment of, for example, a new ping pong table. The deterrent effect should be prison or a criminal record.

If necessary, floor budgets should originally be apportioned less money in order to pay for vandalism. Residents still lose their one function, but this way planning committees could evenly space events throughout the year to minimize the impact of the loss. By not using floor funds, Mitchell fears vandalism would rise. Maybe so, but at least by not using floor funds, all residents could feel as if they were in a democratic system that treats them as adults.

There's bad news for some Pontiac owners. According to the Environmental Protection Agency, five of Pontiac's models have been placed under a mandatory recall. All models between 1975 and 1978 of the Pontiac Firebird, Gran Prix, Le Mans, Catalina and Bonneville are being recalled in one of the larger involuntary recalls in history.

Apparently, a problem in the cars' exhaust system has prompted the recall, although Key Pontiac, Manhattan's dealership, was not yet aware of the recall. General Motors' Kansas City zone office had not yet received any information on the recall from their home office, either.

If you are the owner of any of the above mentioned Pontiac models, call the Consumer Relations Board (CRB) in the Union and give the model, year and vehicle identification number. This is a 13-digit number, beginning with the number 2, and is located on the dash board above the steering wheel. It is especially important to contact CRB if you are not the car's original owner.

EVER RISING costs of beef are causing some people to begin searching for alternative proteins in their diets. Some of the products which are becoming popular as protein alternatives are poultry, beans, legumes and fish.

For those who may be turning into fish freaks, here are some hints to insure a good buy:

—Look for the U.S. Grade A seal. It guarantees uniform size, fresh odor and fresh flavor, and insures that the product is defect-free. The Grade A product will assure the buyer that it is the best quality available and will be the best buy for the money.

—When buying frozen seafood, make sure the product is frozen solid and has no objectionable odor. Check to make sure the package isn't broken. If it is, the product could be dry or contaminated. If the frozen fish is partly thawed by the time you get home with it, plan to use it at once.

HAVE YOU been comforting yourself about inflation by saying "Well, at least air is still free"? Unfortunately, that may not be true much longer, either. Oil companies are already starting to use tire-airing as yet another way to grab up their customers' pocket change. The going price for putting air in tires is 25 cents for four minutes at some gas stations around the country.

Fortunately, air is still free in Manhattan, so it's a good idea to keep tires at their recommended pressure at all times. Check tires about once a week at a station a mile or two from home, while the tires are still cool. Keeping the proper amount of air in the tires can save from two to five gallons of every 100 gallons of gas you buy, and as the old saying goes, "Watch the pennies and the dollars take care of themselves."

THE SPRING semester is at last drawing to a close and, with summer thoughts and summer jobs close at hand, everything is really starting to look rosy. Maybe the only obstacle is the bucket of bolts you've been jockeying all winter has sprung a leak and is leaving parts and assorted nasties all over the roadways.

If, after painful deliberation, you decide it's more humane to put "ol' paint" out of its misery and look for another almost-new gas-goer, there are a few things to check on before you sign with the nice man at the friendly used car lot.

Although "everything is up to date" in Manhattan, as we all know, used car buying is still the closest thing to horse trading. Each used car in town undergoes the Kansas safety inspection prior to sale and each car on the lot is backed by the dealer's guarantee. But, to save yourself the pain and anguish of being the cause of the nice dealer's frown because the right front tire fell off "new paint" a block away from the lot, here are some things you need to watch for:

—Look at the body. All of the body. Under the bumpers, inside the wheel wells, under the doors and even the floor boards. That attractive brownish-red mottling may be called "earth tone" by salesmen but to the rest of the world it's rust. If this rust is deep enough into the metal, you may be embarrassed when a friend sits on the fender and gets tire tracks on his or her seat after the metal disintegrates.

—Tires: Kick them if you feel the need, but after the kick take a good look. If there are cracks in the sidewalls, they are dangerous because the rubber has oxidized to the point that the tire has lost much of its resiliency. A nice weave is important when picking out tweeds but it can be fatal when that's the best thing you can say about the tire treads on the car. The treads should be worn in a uniform manner, no chunks out of the tread, no bald spots.

—Suspension and wheel bearings: If while sitting still you can wiggle the steering wheel more than an inch before the wheels begin to turn, you have problems. If the steering wheel comes off in your hands, give it back to the nice man and consider the sale off. Remember, he can't make you buy the car in situations like that.

—Shock absorbers: Bounce all four corners of the car. If the corner keeps bouncing or fails to come back up, you need new shocks.

—Accidents clues: If there are ripples in the paint, the car may have been in an accident. If, during a test drive, you notice that in order to drive a straight line you have to keep the front right tire in the gutter and the rear left is just barely staying in your lane, you have the "new puppy syndrome" or the "running sideways blues." The frame is bent and no matter how little you pay for the car it will make up the difference in tire replacement costs, also they are tough to parallel park.

—The test drive: Listen for noises. As it is driven down the street, a '73 Plymouth should not sound like a gypsy wagon or a B-52 warming up. Don't fall for the old, "it gives it that distinctive character" line. You should not have to hold the turn signal to make it work nor should a magic word be required to get the bomb into reverse. Applying the brakes should not throw you into oncoming traffic or lead you into the corner hamburger shop. If they do, demand that the brakes be fixed and try to hit the salesman up for a free cheeseburger. If a glance in the rear-view mirror shows a cloud of blue smoke tailing you, it is because the engine is saying it feels ill. If the smoke is black, the carburetor is dying. Also, check the brake lights, turn signals, emergency flashers, windshield wipers and washers, air conditioning, heating and radio. If you feel antagonistic toward the dealership due to the condition of the car, you can wait until the salesman is in front of the car to check the horn.

—Under the hood: First, there should be something that looks like an engine under there. This is not an accessory. Don't be fooled. If the engine is there but looks like a lumpy glop of grease, find out if the dealer put the goo there on purpose or if it was originally inside the engine. If it has leaked out then you probably have engine problems.

Loose wires that lead from something but end in open air are generally to be considered suspect. Be suspicious. Ask embarrassing questions like, "What used to be hooked to that?" If it was the generator ask for a new one.

—The mechanical check: Take the car to a mechanic you trust and have it checked thoroughly.

POTEMKIN

DIRECTED BY SERGEI EISENSTEIN

The famous film about the mutiny of the sailors of the battleship "Prince Potemkin" and the massacre of the people who sympathized with them in pre-revolutionary Russia.

Potemkin has been called the greatest film of all time by the 1958 Brussels poll of film critics. Not only is it one of the most important films of the silent era, many believe it was Eisenstein's greatest work. "A supreme example of advanced cinematography—a combination of the emotional, the documentary and the absolute film with an awe inspiring quality."

Propaganda or not, 'Potemkin' is 'exciting'

By LUKE BROWN
Collegian Reviewer

Despite the fact it is a silent, foreign film and a piece of Soviet propaganda, "The Battleship Potemkin" is an excellent motion picture.

The film overcomes the handicaps brought about by its age and story with the exceptional direction of Sergei Eisenstein.

Collegian Review

The film deals with the sailors' mutiny of the "Prince Potemkin," a Russian battleship, in 1905. It also tells of the "massacre" of people who sympathized with the sailors.

The sailors, after being forced to eat old, rotten, maggoty meat, rise against the evil ship's captain and his corrupt staff, throwing them into the ocean.

During the mutiny, one of the organizers is killed. He is taken to shore and put in a tent on the dock. A candle is put in his cold, stiff hands and a sign on his stomach. Everyone in the town walks by the tent and cries.

The most exciting and memorable scene in the movie, involves the soldiers' attempt to thwart a possible riot. They were successful, but in the process many people were killed, most of them elderly or young mothers.

In the movie's most famous scene, a baby carriage with a young, innocent child inside, rolls down a long, treacherous staircase after soldiers have killed the child's mother.

The significance of the Potemkin mutiny is that, according to a quote from Lenin at the end, it proved the armed forces would support the revolution.

Well constructed scenes are set up and sophisticated and modern direction make this film stand out from most films, new or old.

The black and white photography also is excellent.

"Potemkin" is an interesting piece of propaganda. The good guys and bad guys are easily distinguishable. The good guys are the poor, downtrodden, honest, common folk and the bad guys, of course, are the evil, corrupt people in charge of the government.

Its historical accuracy is, to say the least, suspect.

An interesting character is the ship's priest. Somewhat like a stark-raving mad Moses, sneaking around and hiding behind his iron cross, he does not support the evil government or the good sailors. Perhaps a reason for his attitude is he doesn't have the courage to make a decision and neither group will accept him.

"Potemkin" is an idealistic film, as most propaganda films are, and is tainted with the beliefs of the Soviet government.

Were it made today, the film would be much more complex and probably shaped around the Iranian revolution.

"The Battleship Potemkin" is one of the more interesting, better produced foreign films I have seen.

Marvin vs. Marvin judgment called 'a victory for women'

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Michelle Triola Marvin, the unmarried woman who claimed Lee Marvin owed her $1.8 million, was awarded $104,000 Wednesday by a judge who said she needed help to rebuild her life after a long love affair with the actor.

Although the award was far less than the amount Miss Marvin had sought—which she claimed was half his income during the six years they lived together—she said she was "excited to get something" and viewed it as a victory for women.

But she said she is disillusioned about love affairs. "I think if a man wants to leave a toothbrush at my house, he can bloody well marry me," she said. "Enough is enough."

Marvin likewise saw the ruling as a victory. "I think it's sensational," the actor said at his home in Tucson, Ariz.

Superior Court Judge Arthur Marshall, in a decision which will serve as a guideline in similar cases, reached outside the rigid requirements of contract law to grant Miss Marvin what he called "an equitable remedy."

"The court in equity awards plaintiff $104,000 for rehabilitation purposes," Marshall said, "so that she may have the economic means to re-educate herself and to learn new, employable skills ... so that she may return from her status as companion of a motion picture star to a separate, independent, but perhaps more prosaic existence."

MARVIN'S ATTORNEY, A. David Kagon, said the judge's 33-page decision sustained Marvin's contention that he never had a contract with Miss Marvin, but Kagon admitted that Miss Marvin's lawyer, Marvin Mitchelson, had offered to settle the case earlier for $60,000.

Both Mitchelson and Kagon said appeals of Marshall's ruling are unlikely.

Mitchelson, who fought the case through many appeals for seven years, said he was pleased but called the outcome "a draw."

He said he believes this was the first instance in the United States where a judge had awarded the equivalent of alimony to a woman without a marriage license.

He noted the judge specified that Miss Marvin's $104,000 would be equivalent to the highest scale she ever earned as a singer—$1,000 a week—for two years.

BUT MARSHALL's ruling was also harsh on Miss Marvin, pointing out inconsistencies in her testimony and supporting Marvin's contention that he never promised lifetime support or a share of his millions.

"Such services as she has rendered would appear to have been compensated," Marshall said.

High court rules on media case; editorial thoughts factor in libel

WASHINGTON (AP)—Public figures who sue a journalist or news organization for libel may probe the "editorial process" which led to the allegedly libelous statement, the Supreme Court said Wednesday.

Voting 6-3, the justices ruled that reporters and editors are not constitutionally protected from being forced to explain how they prepared a challenged report—and may be asked questions about their "state of mind" during that preparation.

The court's closed deliberations and decision in a case altering the nation's libel law apparently were leaked earlier this week.

See related story, p. 13

The decision in the journalism case is a victory for former Army Lt. Col. Anthony Herbert, who is suing CBS and others for $44.7 million.

Herbert's 1973 suit named as defendants CBS, the network's "60 Minutes" news program, correspondent Mike Wallace, producer Barry Lando and the Atlantic Monthly magazine.

HERBERT, WHO was stripped of a battalion command, gained national prominence in the early 1970s when he formally charged his superior officers with war crimes and atrocities in South Vietnam.

Lando's investigation of Herbert's experience led to a Feb. 4, 1973 "60 Minutes" telecast called "The Selling of Colonel Herbert," in which the truth of Herbert's charges was called into question.

Fog lifts in Ford Hall

Non-smokers can wave goodbye to cloudy corridors in Ford Hall.

Ford residents' complaints about smoking in various corridors prompted the Ford Hall Governing Board (HGB) to take action Tuesday night.

HGB unanimously passed a proposal to set aside two non-smoking corridors in Ford Hall for the 1979-80 school session.

Becky Jones, Ford Hall director, said room placement decisions for smoking or non-smoking residents cannot always be justified by reading contracts.

"Many times mom is looking over the shoulder when students are filling their housing applications out," she said, "and students end up in a situation they shouldn't be in."

Students also are known to put on their contracts that they have asthma or some sort of allergy, Jones said.

"These are the people who particularly specify that they want a non-smoking corridor who will have first choice," Jones said.

Although most Ford Hall residents are non-smokers, problems arise in finding compatible roommates for the smokers, she said.

"It's more difficult to find roommates for the smokers rather than the non-smokers," Jones said.

"This first year with two non-smoking corridors will just be a trial run," she said. "It's something that had to be done, but I'm sure adjustments will have to be made."

Ford Hall is the only residence hall on campus to designate non-smoking corridors.

JUICELESS...A student leaves the lightless Veterinary Medicine Complex after classes were canceled Wednesday when a transformer broke down.

Workmen take to roof; library leaks may abate

As spring showers continue, workmen are starting to repair the roof of Farrell Library.

A Wichita-based roofing company started work Monday to repair a portion of the library roof, Joel McGill, University Facilities shops superintendent, said.

The contracted price of $82,699.64 includes repair of the roof's newest, largest and highest portion, McGill said.

The original roof in this section is flat and doesn't allow for proper drainage, Ray Lippenberger, University Facilities architect, said. When water is allowed to stand on this type roof, the roof eventually deteriorates.

Plans for the new roof, drawn by Lippenberger, include tapered insulation to allow water to run into the drains naturally, he said.

Some of the existing roof will have to be removed and the edges of the roof will have to be built up so water will run into interior drains, he said.

There should be no effect on library operations while repair work is being completed, Virginia Quiring, assistant director of the library, said.

Lippenberger said the work will only alleviate the leakage problems in the area being repaired. It will not include the front entry way or any of the older parts of the library, he said.

Vet Med in dark; blackout halts classes

Veterinary medicine students got an extension on their Easter vacation because of a power shortage at the veterinary medicine complex Tuesday.

Electricity in the teaching building went out at about 9 a.m. and was expected to be restored on a temporary basis last night with the help of a tranformer borrowed from Kansas Power and Light.

Primarily students in the freshman and sophomore classes were affected by the blackout, Donald Trotter, dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, said. Some classes have been meeting at other locations and others will be made up in early morning hours or on Saturday, he said.

Deface, alter, borrow

Kids 'fake out' bars

By GREG HENDERSON
Collegian Reporter

Many underage Manhattan residents will do almost anything to get a drink.

Some people deface or alter their Kansas driver's license, others try to use false identification, or borrow a friend's ID. But persons who use any of these methods are subjecting themselves to punishment under Kansas traffic laws.

Scott Martin, manager of Mr. K's, said fake IDs are confiscated at his establishment and turned in to police.

"We turn the matter over to the police, hoping that it will discourage the person from doing it again," Martin said.

When a call is received concerning a false ID, the police go to the scene and make a preliminary report. Then they confiscate the identification as evidence, said Inspector Steve French of the Riley County Police Department.

"Many times an underage person will borrow an ID from a friend. When they try to use it and get caught, the person who loaned the ID out is in more trouble than the person that tried to use it," French said.

HOWEVER, FRENCH said it is difficult to prove a person actually loaned his driver's license to another individual.

"All we can do," French said, "is take a report and turn the matter over to the prosecuting attorney. It's up to him from there but it's almost impossible to prove 'willful intent' by either party involved."

Most false ID users change their driver's licenses to make them illegible. Different methods include washing the license and scratching out the birth date, French said. Then they apply for a new license to use for driving purposes. This is a second offense because it is illegal to have two driver's licenses.

French said any attempt by a minor to purchase alcohol is a crime governed by Kansas traffic laws, and all traffic violations are lower grade misdemeanors.

ONE MANHATTAN liquor store owner, who wished to remain anonymous, said he's seen "just about every trick imaginable" by underage persons trying to make purchases at his store.

"Most of the time I can tell right off if a kid isn't old enough," he said. "Usually they are nervous, and as soon as I ask for their ID they start making excuses."

Common lines include "I lost my wallet," or "I left my purse at home" or "I just changed pants and I left my wallet in the other pair," he said.

"The best line I ever heard was about a year ago when this kid came in and went over to the cooler and picked out a bottle of wine," the store owner said. "When he brought it up to the counter, I asked him for some identification. He looked me right in the eye and said, 'Mister, I'm going to level with you. I'm not 21, but I have leukemia and I'm going to be dead before I turn 21.'

"I just told him I was sorry that he was going to die, but I still couldn't sell him a bottle of wine."

"I usually don't call the police," the liquor store owner said, "unless they try to cause some trouble. I think most kids try to see what they can get away with. I think trying to buy liquor before they're old enough is just part of growing up."

ANOTHER MANHATTAN liquor store owner said he doesn't call the police anymore when someone tries to pass a false ID because "they won't do anything. Sometimes they won't even answer the call."

"The police won't do anything to the kid, but if I sell to a minor they can close my store for as long as they want to.

"Sometimes the police will get someone who looks old for their age and send them in here to make a purchase," he said. "Then if we sell to them, the police will come in and charge us with selling to a minor. I call that entrapment."

Martin said sometimes the Alcoholic Beverage Commission (ABC) makes random checks on Aggieville bars.

"They (the ABC) might send someone in who isn't 18," he said. "That's why we station an employee at the door to check IDs. The ABC won't give a person a fake ID to use, so when we check for IDs the person they send in won't have one, and we won't let them in."

"If we let them in and sold them beer, that would not be entrapment because they didn't have an ID. The burden of proof is on us," Martin said.

Interest groups dip into till; money keys census counting

WASHINGTON (AP)—Back in the old days, census takers had one job: to count people. Nothing more.

The 1980 census, which will start April 1 and cost an estimated $1 billion, has become a pie that every American interest group wants its finger in.

Women want to be sure the government knows men are not the only ones to head households. So feminist groups persuaded the Census Bureau to drop the "head of household" question. Instead, "householder," the person who owns or rents the dwelling, will be named.

Joseph Califano Jr., secretary of health, education and welfare, won a battle to restore a question about disability. But there no longer is a question about religious affiliation. And Sar Levitan of the National Commission on Employment and Unemployment Statistics could not get inclusion of a question about people who abandon the search for a job and drop out of the labor market.

People will be asked not only whether they are married, but how many times.

EACH GROUP of Americans wants to be sure it is counted. The primary reason is simple: money. Big money.

The census once was used mainly to help draw congressional districts for the 435 members of the House of Representatives.

Nowadays, census statistics are used to measure the quality of American life—income, education level, employment status, age, housing quality, occupation, number of children and military service.

The federal government devises formulas from these figures to determine how to distribute $50 billion in federal funds to states and local communities for job programs, health services, civil rights enforcement and other social services.

Local officials know that if not everyone in their area is counted, they will not get as much federal money as they need. Atlanta Mayor Maynard Jackson says an undercounting of blacks in his city in the 1970 census meant a loss of $11.7 million in job aid funds to Atlanta over more than five years.

IN 1970, the bureau estimates it failed to tally 3.4 million whites, or about 2 percent of the entire white population. At the same time, it failed to count 7.7 percent of the black population, or 1.9 million people.

By law, the Census Bureau is forbidden to divulge any personal or private business information from the questionnaires to anyone without exception. At the same time, answering census questions—which are approved by Congress—is mandatory. Refusal could result in a maximum $100 fine.

Taylor: 'dry' campaign a waste

TOPEKA (AP)—The president of Kansans for Life at Its Best said Wednesday he considered it a waste of time, effort and money to launch a campaign to get Gov. John Carlin to veto a bill which will bring liquor by the drink to Kansas' private clubs if he signs it.

The Rev. Richard Taylor Jr., Topeka, said Carlin knows the state dry organization tried to kill the bill when it passed through the Legislature, and is aware the drys want him to veto the bill.

"But your record as a law-maker tells us you always voted to please those who want to make more money selling more of this dangerous recreational drug. Therefore, it seemed a waste of time, effort and money to launch a campaign to encourage a veto of Senate Bill 467," Taylor said in a letter to the governor which Taylor made public.

Carlin has said he will make known at a Friday afternoon news conference his decision on the bill allowing the state's nearly 1,000 private clubs to eliminate their liquor pools. He is expected to sign the measure.

The governor told a Tuesday news conference he is not aware of any effort by Taylor to encourage him to veto the bill.

Ruling 'incredibly thoughtless'; media fear high court's action

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Across the nation Wednesday, editors, publishers and broadcasters expressed fear that their freedom to investigate and criticize officials was eroded when the Supreme Court allowed public figures to inquire into a journalist's "state of mind" during libel suits.

Much of the reaction was strongly stated—in phrases such as "Orwellian invasion of the mind," and "incredibly thoughtless."

Many predicted a "chilling effect" on reporters writing stories involving controversial figures. A number wondered how a jury could make any intelligent judgment about what a reporter or editor had been thinking when a story was being prepared months or years before.

Many also said they felt:

—It is the latest in a string of Supreme Court decisions eroding the press' freedom to gather news.

—It will be easier for public figures to file frivolous libel suits and harass news organizations that criticize them.

—THE 'CHILLING EFFECT' will fall heaviest on small news organizations which lack the resources to fight long libel suits.

Allen Neuharth, chairman and president of Gannett Co., and president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association (ANPA), said the decision "is one more step by the current court to weaken, erode and diminish freedom of the press and, by extension, all First Amendment freedoms. The American people—not just the press—were the real losers today."

"Last spring," he said, "the Supreme Court ruled that police can rummage through newsrooms; today it has ruled lawyers can rummage through reporters' and editors' minds." He said that next week, at an ANPA convention in New York, "the publishers of 1,300 newspapers will devote their annual convention to finding ways to halt the chilling effects of this and other court decisions."

Bill Leonard, president of CBS News, said the court was "denying constitutional protection to the journalist's most precious possession—his mind, his thoughts, and his editorial judgment." CBS is a defendant in the libel suit which prompted the ruling.

JOHN FINNEGAN, executive editor of the St. Paul Pioneer Press-Dispatch in Minnesota, and chairman of the Freedom of Information Committee of the Associated Press Managing Editors, said "the media may well back away from doing stories on public figures where all the facts are not verifiable, and yet stories that should be published in the public interest."

James Goodale, executive vice president of the New York Times, said the ruling would "hamper the really big investigation stories" because reporters would know that if they got involved in libel suits, they "in effect, are going to have to stand naked in front of the courts with respect to all their thought processes."

Erwin Krasnow, senior vice president and general counsel for the National Association of Broadcasters, said news organizations would not be the only ones affected. "Citizens speaking out at public meetings must now weigh any increased risk of suit and accompanying demands that they account for their disagreements with public officials."

Commuter copter crashes; plunge kills 3, injures 12

NEWARK, N.J. (AP)—A commuter helicopter plunged 100 feet onto a runway at Newark International Airport shortly after take off Wednesday night, and at least three persons were killed and 12 others injured, authorities said.

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) said 18 persons, including a crew of three, were aboard the 30-passenger New York Airways aircraft, which came down on its side on runway 22.

FAA spokesman Robert Fulton said the pilot of the Sikorsky S61 helicopter reported shortly after takeoff that he was experiencing control problems.

Officials said the aircraft was at about 1,000 feet when the pilot reported the trouble.

"He was trying to return to land," said FAA controller Gordon Wilkes, a witness. "It looked like he was going to make it, but about 100 feet from the ground it nosed off."

Flight 972 was en route to LaGuardia and Kennedy International airports in New York, Port Authority Police Sgt. William Olsen said.

CRASH VICTIMS were taken to five area hospitals, where four persons were listed in guarded condition and five were in fair condition, authorities said.

The three crew members were reported in critical condition at Martland Medical Center. They were identified as the pilot, Capt. Leslie Carter of Rockville Center, N.Y., co-pilot Capt. Lee Richmond of Northport, N.Y., and stewardess Lannie Chevalieri of Jamaica, N.Y.

Ben Kosivar, spokesman for the commuter airline, said Richmond and Chevalieri were among the crew of a New York Airways helicopter that crashed in New York City in 1977, killing five persons.

The FAA said the helicopter crashed at 6:23 p.m., coming to rest about 200 yards away from the New Jersey Turnpike.

Despite quiet Topeka settlement, girl says schools discriminate

TOPEKA (AP)—When a federal judge ordered Marlene Miller and her niece to keep quiet about the $19,500 settlement they received in their lawsuit against the Topeka Board of Education, they took him seriously.

Even the mother of the student involved didn't find out about the settlement until the news accounts broke over the weekend.

"I wasn't even able to tell her about the money," Miller said.

Miller, the legal guardian for Evelyn Rene Johnson, 16, claimed in a 1973 suit that the girl was cheated out of a good education because she attended a predominantly black school.

Last December, the school board's insurance company paid them $19,500 rather than allow the case to go to trial. But U.S. District Judge George Templar issued an order prohibiting them from telling anyone about the payment.

"It's really embarrassing," Miller said. "People were always asking whatever happened to that lawsuit and I couldn't tell them."

BUT THE JUDGE ordered the records in the case made public Tuesday. Now, the long-withheld news of the settlement confronts Miller and her niece daily, and they still have not become accustomed to being in the public eye.

Johnson, a "B" and "C" student who hopes to go to college and become a dietician, is enduring the ribbing of ninth-grade classmates.

"They say to me, 'What was you doing on TV? You a TV star?'" she said.

Despite the settlement, of which $8,907 was placed in a trust for Johnson, the young woman still believes the predominantly white schools on Topeka's west side are better than the mostly black schools on the east side of town.

"They have too much luxury over there on the west side to come over here and go to school with us," she said.

She said even a new program called open enrollment, allowing students to transfer to any school in the district, has helped little.

"They're still discriminating," she said. "They say you can go to any school you want, but you have to provide your own transportation. I don't have my own transportation."

Academic sport offers 'unlimited' opportunity

At least one K-State team can claim a lofty national ranking this year—the speech team, rated third nationally.

"Speech Unlimited is the academic equivalent to the football or basketball team here at K-State," said Craig Brown, freshman in history and member of Speech Unlimited. "Our team is ranked third in the nation for the second year in a row.

Speech Unlimited is an organization for students to compete individually in public speaking and oral interpretation, according to Harold Nichols, associate professor of speech.

"The team provides an opportunity for students to become interested in forensics on a collegiate level," Brown said.

A variety of events are available for student competition, including informative speaking, persuasive speaking, impromptu speaking, duet acting, and interpretation of prose, poetry and dramas, Nichols said.

Students are judged on topic, content, voice and delivery, depending on the criteria of the event.

ONCE A STUDENT is judged, he knows the areas where he might need to improve or where he needs to focus and strengthen, Brown said. Speeches and presentations are often changed because of judges' comments.

"The speech I wrote at the beginning of the year looks nothing like the speech I am working with now," Brown said.

Students in Speech Unlimited find their own topics and research them, Nichols said. Sometimes preparation takes months.

"I can easily spend four hours a day looking for material," said Robin Reese, junior in speech education. "I am always thinking in terms of material I can use for a speech."

Speech Unlimited is funded through the department, the Arts and Sciences Council and student fund-raising events, said Lynne Ross, instructor of speech and member of the American Forsensic Association.

Speech Unlimited is attending 13 tournaments this academic year, as well as two national tournaments, Nichols said.

The organization, which has approximately 20 active members, has been competing the last three years, Ross said.

SPEECH UNLIMITED is open to any interested student, but they follow some recruiting methods, she said.

"We send letters to interested high school students and inform them of our program," she said. "Part of our recruiting program will be to sponsor the State High School Speech and Drama Festival, April 21 (Saturday). This will give us a chance to see what talent is available."

"We want to get students here interested in us. Being third in the nation can be intimidating to some people who think they might not do well in competition, but that isn't necessarily true."

Speech Unlimited is recognized outside the community as well, Brown said. "We have gone to tournaments and people will come up to us and say, 'Oh, we've heard about you guys.'"

U.S. monitoring of SALT assured

WASHINGTON (AP)—Defense Secretary Harold Brown said Wednesday night he is convinced that "we're going to be able to verify a SALT agreement from the moment it is signed and ratified."

Brown's comments were seen as a continuing administration effort to overcome concerns about U.S. ability to verify Soviet compliance with the terms of a new strategic arms limitation agreement which is nearing completion.

The verification issue will be a critical one when the treaty comes before the Senate for ratification, which will require a two-thirds vote.

Published reports that CIA chief Stansfield Turner had told senators in secret that it will take five years to replace missile monitoring capability lost as a result of the overthrow of the Iranian government aroused new concerns about verification.

Botany students hike to find Kansas grass

By VINCE WHEELER
Collegian Reporter

Whoever said he would walk a mile for a Camel wasn't as serious about the weeds he smoked as Jesse Baker Norton was about the weeds he collected.

In 1898, Norton walked not one mile but 193 to collect grass specimens from eight counties across Kansas.

For all 193 miles, he pushed a device known as a "collecting wheelbarrow," an implement much like the modern wheelbarrow. He placed his specimens in the wheelbarrow before pressing them and sending them back to Manhattan.

Norton chronicled his adventures and observations in a report that is now kept in Bushnell Hall. His journey began in Manhattan Aug. 15 and ended in Rush Center Aug. 31, 1898. His travels took him through parts of Riley, Geary, Morris, Dickinson, Marion, McPherson, Rice, Barton and Rush counties.

HOWEVER, NORTON wasn't the only person to ever make such a trip.

He was a student under A.S. Hitchcock, who was eventually known throughout the world for his knowledge on grasses. Hitchcock came to K-State in the early 1890s. Many of his students made trips such as Norton's, pushing wheelbarrows and gathering samples.

"Hitchcock was a spellbinding teacher," said Ted Barkley, professor of botany and curator of the herbarium at K-State. "He had people walking in off the streets to take his botany class. It was hot stuff."

Hitchcock was later called to the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) and the Smithsonian Institution, where he assembled the finest grass collection in the world and became the foremost agrostologist of his time.

"To this day, his 'Manual of the Grasses of the U.S.' is the finest book on grasses in the world," Barkley said.

HITCHCOCK NURTURED many students around the turn of the century. One was David Fairchild, whose father George was president of K-State at the time. Fairchild traveled the world working for the USDA. He gained fame through his book "The World is My Garden," which dealt with his reminiscences in agricultural work.

Walter Swingle, another one of Hitchcock's students, became famous for citrus breeding and is responsible for finding many modern varieties.

Norton came to Kansas Agricultural College in 1893. He was 16 at the time. He received his bachelor of science degree in 1897 and worked as a graduate student and assistant until he received a master of science degree in 1901.

He was employed by the Bureau of Plant Industry of the USDA. He later worked for the Pedigreed Seed Company in Hartsville, S.C.

STUDENTS GATHERING specimens, such as Norton, eventually covered all of the Kansas prairie. Some students made longer journeys than his, but only Norton's 27-page manuscript remains. The manuscript was published in 1965 in Transactions of the Kansas Academy of Science. No specimens remain that can be directly attributed to Norton's trip, but he and his colleagues did collect a wealth of specimens on their various hikes across the prairie.

"Norton, and those like him, carried along two canvas bags," Barkley said. "He slept in one and put his specimens in the other.

"He didn't carry a plant press with him all of the time. Hitchcock had made arrangements with the railroad stations for plant presses. He would stop at the depot, put his plants in the press and ship the press back to Manhattan on the express," Barkley said.

In order to stay close to railroad stations, Norton chiefly followed the rail lines, passing through Junction City, White City, McPherson, Lyons, Great Bend and finishing in Rush Center. It seems he was tired of walking by this time because he took the train back.

Flood drives out families, 'gators

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Thousands of Mississippians downstream from their stunned capital city of Jackson packed bags and fled Wednesday to escape record flooding of the Pearl River that already has cost half a billion dollars and displaced more than 17,000 people.

In neighboring Alabama, hundreds more joined 5,000 families in the Black Belt region who have abandoned their homes to rising water. Officials warned of the added peril of snakes and alligators driven from their river lairs.

While the Deep South bore the brunt of this week's floods, which have been blamed for at least five deaths, the 2,000 residents of the northwestern Minnesota town of Warren awoke to find streets inundated by the overflowing Snake River which runs through the center of town.

Mary Irby and her 10 children of Selma, Ala., a city of about 28,000 on the Alabama River, were among hundreds plucked from the floods by boat.

"This man came up in a boat to try to get us out to feed the hogs," she said. "But the hogs had all come up on our front porch. That's when I knew it was time to leave."

THE WATER was inching down in Jackson, but it still lapped at the rooftops of some houses and officials warned of record high water advancing on communities to the south.

"We're not out of the woods yet, but things do seem to be getting better," said Viva Polk, a spokesman for the city of Jackson.

In Georgetown, about 40 miles downriver, Mayor Beal Allbritton said 80 percent of his town's 420 residents had moved out. "All we can do now is hope we can ride this thing out," he said.

Civil defense officials in Columbia, south of Georgetown, said about 2,000 people had left their homes in advance of the river's crest expected this weekend.

THE PEARL dropped to 42.5 feet in Jackson after cresting at 43.2 feet on Tuesday, more than 25 feet above flood stage.

Police and National Guardsmen continued to patrol the flooded downtown area, permitting only authorized people and convoys of dump trucks with sandbagging dirt past roadblocks.

Jackson authorities estimated the damage so far at $500 million.

Jayhawks sign Wichita star Ross

WICHITA (AP)—Kansas Coach Ted Owens dipped into Wichita's fertile high school basketball program Wednesday for the second time in three years to nudge out North Carolina and land a star prep guard.

But he got a big assist from geography in signing Ricky Ross of Wichita South to a national letter-of-intent. Ross was one of the few blue-chip players in the nation who had not made a decision on college plans.

The 6-foot-4 Ross said the presence of former Wichita Heights star Darnell Valentine at Lawrence was a major factor in his decision. Valentine signed with the Jayhawks following the 1976-77 season.

But if the University of North Carolina were closer to Wichita than Lawrence, he said, then the Tar Heels would have been his first choice.

"If North Carolina would have been closer to home," Ross said, "I would have signed a national letter-of-intent with them. I really liked Coach (Dean) Smith."

Ross said he ruled out Arkansas because he "didn't like the atmosphere that much" at Fayetteville and decided against Wichita State because he wanted to get away from home.

"I think there were several factors in our favor with Ricky," Owens said. "First, he knew we needed him. Our perimeter shooting was very limited last year. He knew we get good support with our attendance at games. And few people mention this, but we have a good study and tutoring program. We'll be genuinely concerned with him getting his degree."

The 17-year-old Ross said he wanted to attend Kansas since his junior year, but admitted that pressure exerted on him to sign with KU almost reached the point of making him change his mind. Ross visited the Oregon, Kansas, North Carolina and Arkansas campuses.

Cincinnati high school star signs K-State letter-of-intent

K-State signed its second big man in three days to a basketball letter-of-intent with the announcement of John Marx of Mt. Healthy, Ohio, Wednesday.

Marx, a 6-10, 210-pound center, was the high school teammate of earlier Wildcat signee Billy Lewis.

Marx and Lewis propelled Mt. Healthy to a 21-1 mark during 1978-79.

"John is an outstanding center-forward prospect," Coach Jack Hartman said. "He is an excellent rebounder and has good scoring potential. He definitely has the tools to be a fine college player."

During his senior season Marx averaged 15 points and 14 rebounds per game on the balanced Mt. Healthy team. Plus, he shot 62 percent from the field and let the team in blocked shots.

He was an all-conference performer during his junior and senior seasons and was honorable mention all-city in this season.

Marx also considered scholarship offers from Miami (Ohio), Bowling Green, Xavier, Texas Christian and Cincinnati before choosing K-State.

Tennis team goes west to meet Big 8 competition

The K-State men's tennis team is headin' for the hills this weekend.

"We play Colorado University Friday, Iowa State Saturday morning, Northern Colorado Saturday afternoon and on our way back we're stopping at Pueblo to play Southern Colorado," Coach Steve Snodgrass said.

Snodgrass said he was happy with the recent performances of the singles but the doubles teams needed to improve.

"We're going to mix up our doubles teams against Northern and Southern to try something different," he said.

Snodgrass said the 'Cats were looking to knock off Iowa State and play Colorado close.

"We are looking for some key wins so we'll have good seeds in the Big 8 tournament," he said.

The Big 8 tournament is May 18 in Oklahoma City. Snodgrass said his team now stands about fifth in the Big 8.

Skidding 'Cats still alive in Big 8

The K-State baseball team's loss column is quickly catching up with its win column, but the 'Cats are still alive in the Big 8 Western Division race.

The 'Cats are 2-7 in the conference, while Western Division leader Oklahoma State is 4-4, Oklahoma is 2-6 and Colorado is 1-7. Every team in the Eastern Divison has a better record than the West leader. Nebraska is 7-1, Iowa State is 6-2, Missouri is 5-2 and Kansas is 5-3.

The lack of hitting for the Wildcats has led to a six-game losing streak, after doubleheader losses to Nebraska, Iowa State and Missouri on the road. Coach Dave Baker's team record is now 17-14-1 for the season.

Oklahoma is the next opponent for the 'Cats. The teams will play a four-game series in Norman Friday and Saturday. The Sooners are 19-21 overall and are led by Tommy Thompson's .372 average.

After the 'Cats were crushed by Iowa State 10-1 and 5-4 over the weekend, Baker summed up his team's problem—"Hitting. That's what we're lacking. We need to get some consistent bats up and down our lineup and to get the big hit now and then."

Sports Briefs

Football scrimmage ticket prices set

Ticket prices for K-State's two spring football games, the Purple-White intrasquad game Saturday and the Varsity-Alumni game on April 28 have been determined by Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds.

Prices for the Purple-White game, at 1:30 p.m. in KSU Stadium, will be $2 for general public and $1 for students (with I.D.) and under. For the Varsity-Alumni game they are $3 for general public and $1 for students.

Dodds said $1 from each $3 ticket to the Varsity-Alumni game will be donated to the U.S. Olympic Committee for team travel to the 1980 Olympics in Moscow.

Golfers to play in Shocker Invitational

Three top K-State men's golfers face a field of about 20 teams today and tomorrow in the WSU Shocker Classic before returning to Manhattan Saturday to host their first home meet.

Playing 36 holes today and 18 holes Friday in Wichita are returning seniors Scott Bunker and Brian Linn and junior Jeff Kruse. Linn finished 10th in K-State's opening tournament, the Shawnee Oklahoma Invitational March 30.

The 'Cats will host Iowa State, Kansas, Missouri and possibly Wichita State Saturday at the Manhattan Country Club. Play begins at 9 a.m.

Lemons sours K-State recruiting effort

One of the most heavily-recruited big men in the country, LaSalle Thompson of Cincinnati, Ohio, has signed a letter-of-intent to play basketball at the University of Texas next year.

Thompson had narrowed his choices to K-State, Hawaii and Texas before deciding Tuesday to play for Coach Abe Lemons' Longhorns.

Royals defeat KU in exhibition game

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Joe Zdeb's seventh-inning single scored Tom Poquette from second base to give the Kansas City Royals a 6-5 exhibition victory Wednesday over the University of Kansas.

KU, which has a 23-6-1 record, led the Royals twice—1-0 in the first inning and 5-4 in the fourth inning. But a four-run second inning by the Royals and single runs in the fourth and seventh innings sealed the victory.

The Royals fielded a team composed mostly of substitutes. Royals reliever Steve Mingori, who came in for starter Marty Pattin in the sixth inning, was credited with the victory.

Boulders threaten cliff-dwellers; but residents won't climb down

MALIBU, Calif. (AP)—A steady stream of rocks fell from the cliff overlooking the Pacific Coast Highway again Wednesday, but residents whose $500,000 homes are threatened by the sometimes automobile-size boulders insist they will not move out.

"I have 24 years of my life in this house," said 72-year-old Carmen Jaffe, who wept at the thought of abandoning her home. "I don't want to leave. I'm not going to give up 24 years of my life because of the negligence of Caltrans."

Mrs. Jaffe and her nephew, who rents the first floor of his aunt's home, contend the state Department of Transportation—Caltrans—failed to respond quickly enough when they and other residents first complained of slide danger weeks ago.

THE AGENCY began monitoring the two-lane highway along the scenic coast 30 miles northeast of Los Angeles 10 days ago when rocks smashed through the windshields of two cars and injured four people. All suffered minor injuries and have been released from the hospital.

Now, a 5½-mile section of the road is closed indefinitely and dents and holes scar the front of Mrs. Jaffe's expensive beachfront home. More than 30,000 tons of rocks and other debris have fallen since Friday and still clutter the normally congested highway.

Geologists monitoring the cliffs say fissures in the mountainside have nearly doubled in depth and width since Sunday and hundreds of small, new cracks have been discovered. The slide shows no signs of stopping, and geologists do not have a solution.

Students to form NAACP chapter to end prejudice

By CAROLE SPEER
Collegian Reporter

Calling for the "elimination of prejudice between minority and white students" a youth group of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) is being formed at K-State.

NAACP is a nationally sponsored group concerned with minority rights. Groups for youth and adults are chartered throughout the United States. K-State will be one of the few universities to charter the organization.

has 100 people registered for membership and will become a nationally chartered organization during the fall 1979 semester.

"NAACP is being formed to establish a better relationship between the faculty and students concerning minority problems," said Dale Blanchard, sophomore in pre-design professions and acting president for the group.

According to Ezell Blanchard, senior in landscape architecture, some of the problems minority students want to correct include the lack of concerts and activities on the campus relating to all students.

"Most concerts and activities on campus are related only to white students," Ezell Blanchard said. "We want campus activities that all students can enjoy and relate to."

THE NAACP youth group also will be working with the Black Student Union (BSU) on minority problems.

"I don't see any competition between the two groups," Allen McCormick, BSU adviser, said. "I feel they will work together to address themselves to the different needs of the minority students."

Ezell Blanchard said one of the important concerns of minority students is the low number of minority athletes receiving degrees from K-State.

"Some of the black athletes are here just for the promotion of K-State and not to earn a degree," he said. "I feel this problem could be solved by letting these students know what is required of them by providing more minority counselors."

OTHER ISSUES being considered by the group include increasing the rate of minority enrollment at K-State, decreasing the dropout and flunkout rate of minority students, and increasing minority representation in administration.

According to Ezell Blanchard, the group also is concerned with the ignorance of students about ethnic cultures.

"To break down the social and racial barriers on this campus, we feel all students should be required to take classes exposing them to ethnic cultures," he said.

"The black community is becoming complacent," Patricia Lucas, junior in social work, said. "They are accepting things they wouldn't have several years ago."

The group also will be working with minority youth of the community encouraging them to seek more education and become more involved in the community, Ezell Blanchard said.

"I feel the NAACP group can help the youth understand the dynamics of community affairs, programs, problems, as well as national affairs and politics," Veryl Switzer, director of minority affairs, said.

Allocations a 'downer' for service

Drug Ed funding busted by senate

By THE SGA STAFF

Drug Education Center was taken off student funding cold turkey last night.

Student Senate stood by Finance Committee's recommendation to cut all funding to the center by a vote of 28-6, with two abstentions.

Former Drug Ed Director Dave Neuhaus opened the budget discussion by withdrawing claims made to senators Tuesday about the number of Drug Ed's contacts.

Neuhaus said he failed to keep adequate records this year and that funding should be based on "do we need drug education at K-State," not statistics.

Drug education versus handling drug crises, and how both could be provided, dominated much of the two-hour discussion.

FINANCE COMMITTEE originally recommended no funding for Drug Ed and increased FONE (crisis center) funding to add a specific drug crisis dimension, but later recommended the FONE position not be funded after the Drug Ed allocation was decided.

"It seems to me, if you wish to preserve only the crisis function, it could be done with this (recommendation)," said Dr. Robert Sinnett, director of mental health at Lafene Student Health Center and Drug Ed adviser.

"It seems to me a decision has been made on a fiscal basis and that's certainly necessary, but I don't think much thought has been given to preserving the educational function," Sinnett said.

FONE Director Jim Bartlett said FONE services do not include education.

"I think by OK'ing this, you'd be denying us consideration and getting rid of Drug Ed," Bartlett said.

Craig Cole, business senator, said FONE and Lafene could pick up Drug Ed's education programs and FONE could handle drug crises.

"Drug Ed has been active going out to people, but Lafene has been passive, waiting for people to come to them," Neuhaus said.

DUPLICATION of services was a reason Finance Committee members cited for their recommendation not to fund the service.

Neuhaus said services are not duplicated because the Lafene health educator has not made any drug presentations and the North Central Kansas Guidance Center (NCKGC) will have an added load when Manhattan's Community Drug Center closes June 1. NCKGC already serves five counties and its services are not free, Neuhaus said.

Committee member Mark Skinner said NCKGC will not force clients to pay, and has a 24-hour crisis line. A new alcohol-abuse program through the Center for Student Development will duplicate the "major thrust" of Drug Ed services which is alcohol-related cases, Skinner said.

"I think sometimes drug education

Pie in the eye

Patrick Miller should have stayed home. Miller (in wheelchair), sophomore in sociology, was racing along just fine in the second annual Wheelchair Race sponsored by Students for Handicapped Concerns in front of the Union. And out of the blue came Melanie Stockdell (left), graduate in consumer economics, with a fresh coconut cream pie and Miller's day was complete.

coming from established sources is not used as much as from peers," Sinnett said, when asking if advertising would increase demand for programs from Lafene's health educator.

KIM JOHNSON, Drug Ed director, said she thinks students would feel uncomfortable approaching professionals instead of peers for help.

Johnson said she wants to improve the service that has had problems with accountability, records and communications with its adviser, she said.

"I can't justify the past," she said.

Allocations is the wrong time to make a major change such as merging FONE and Drug Ed, Dana Foster, junior in political science, said.

"I think this requires a long-term study," he said. Foster accused the Finance Committee of "slipshod handling" of the merger because neither FONE nor Drug Ed knew about the merger until after the decision was made.

"To me, that's just not enough consideration," Foster said.

AFTER THE Drug Ed non-budget was approved, Finance Committee withdrew its recommendation to add the dimension to FONE to handle drug crises.

The committee's original recommendation included funding a FONE drug crisis coordinator and additional advertising, equipment and subscriptions to make up the dimension.

A group will meet Monday to discuss alternatives for the future of drug education at K-State.

FONE received everything requested except salaries. Senate followed Finance Committee's suggestion to pay directors $275 monthly. Bartlett had requested a $300 monthly salary. A $50 monthly salary for a community fund-raising position was approved for five months, with FONE to request the rest of the salary next spring.

A new account for honorariums was recommended by Finance Committee. The lump sum would be allocated separately to individual groups upon request.

The honorarium money, requested by four groups, is used to fund speakers, and would be open to groups who don't receive SGA funds.

Reasoning for the decision was that the account has been abused in the past, Skinner said.

GROUPS CONTINUALLY have used their allocated honorarium money as an area for budget switches, Skinner said.

"This account would provide for an unlimited amount of resources in that area," he said.

The money will be spent for a specific purpose, Skinner said.

"We've tried not to give money if they (the groups) don't know exactly what they are using the money for," he said.

Patrick Miller, Finance Committee chairman, said when allocating for an honorarium, money is being given that is not necessarily needed.

"The groups never know exactly who they want for speakers," Miller said.

Money in the account should be divided as to how much each group will receive so the groups know where their boundaries are, Isaac Turner, arts and sciences senator, said.

"I think it is good to put the money into one account but I think we should decide later who decides (the distribution) on the account," Greg Musil, student body president, said.

Students for Handicapped Concerns (SHC) was allocated money for a driver's salary for a shuttle service, but no vehicle.

"If we are going to fund the shuttle car at all, let's fund it adequately so those riding will be as comfortable as possible," Turner said.

"It's not going to work if we provide a state car and not a driver," Marilyn Trotter, faculty representative to Student Senate, said.

Salaries for the driver and shuttle system coordinator were approved for the winter months in hopes the University would fund the rest of the system including rental of a vehicle.

"We didn't feel it was senate's responsibility to fund them (SHC), but rather the University's and the state's," Angela Scanlan, committee member, said.

Scanlan said the University is required by the 1973 Rehabilitation Act of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to provide handicapped students with accessibility to the campus. Many universities interpret this act to include transportation, she said, adding that universities' federal funds will be taken away if they are not in compliance by June 1980.

SHC requested $9,432—to include $5,152 for the driver's salary and $3,230 for state car rental. It was allocated $3,011, including $2,400 for the salary. The driver will be a state employee.

Senate will continue tentative allocations Tuesday at 6 p.m. in the K-State Union Big 8 Room.

HEW launches Topeka investigation

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—The Department of Health, Education and Welfare's (HEW) civil rights office has launched an investigation into a complaint that the Topeka Board of Education is violating the 1954 U.S. Supreme Court decision banning school segregation.

"We have a complaint which alleges that a certain school plan which includes some school closings (in Topeka) would increase segregation in schools," said Lois Carter, a branch chief in the office's elementary and secondary education division in Kansas City.

"We are in the process of notifying the district of the existence of such a complaint. Then we will get together with the district and arrange some time for an on-site investigation."

James Gray, Topeka school superintendent, declined comment until he and his attorneys could see the complaint.

Carter said the HEW probe would review the district's policies and procedures regarding pupil assignment "on the basis of race."

The complaint, filed Tuesday by Dr. Richard Gellar, a psychiatrist at Topeka Veterans Administration Medical Center, alleges the district is violating the landmark desegregation case that bears its name, Brown vs. Topeka Board of Education.

Teng 'unloads' on U.S.-Taiwan ties

PEKING—Deputy Premier Teng Hsiao-ping "came down very hard" on U.S. relations with Taiwan during an interview with a Senate Foreign Relations Committee delegation Thursday. "He unloaded both barrels," Chairman Frank Church said.

Teng said the United States-Taiwan bill undermines the political basis for normalized relations," the Idaho Democrat reported after a two-hour meeting with Teng.

"He came down very hard on us...He said the inference of the U.S. act was to negate the political basis of normalization...(and) the thrust of the act was support of Taiwan and inconsistent with the idea of one China," Church said.

'Golden Fleece' bites Bitely

BITELY, Mich.—Merrill Township, little more than a wide spot in the road, is wrapped in one of Sen. William Proxmire's awards for federal government waste, and the township supervisor blames it on a "darn fool" previous administration.

Proxmire (D-Wis.) gave his monthly "Golden Fleece" award to two federal agencies who financed a community center here that was so isolated that it collapsed without anyone immediately noticing.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) put up $100,000 for the 60-foot by 90-foot concrete and cinder block structure, and the Economic Development Administration gave $179,000 for a road to it.

Begun in 1976, it was completed in October 1977 but never occupied. A woodcutter discovered the building's rubble this past Feb. 22.

The center was supposed to house recreational activities, physician visits two or three times a week and the distribution of food stamps, said Township Supervisor James Ware.

Probe to investigate Wolf Creek

BURLINGTON—A probe of quality of construction at the Wolf Creek Nuclear Generating Plant has been launched by the Kansas State Building and Construction Trades Council.

And Council president Allen Thompson of Topeka said he expected the contractor building the plant to "spy" on workers who try to help the probe.

He said the council would hire a full-time person, to be assisted by business agents from the 12 locals represented at the $1.08 billion facility.

"From the information we're getting, there is faulty construction there," Thompson said.

The quality of some concrete work at the plant has been probed previously. In addition, Thompson said, there may be problems with ironwork and welding.

Thompson acknowledged that labor unions and Daniel International, the prime contractor at Wolf Creek, have not been "each other's favorite people."

He said about 10 percent of the workers at the plant are union members.

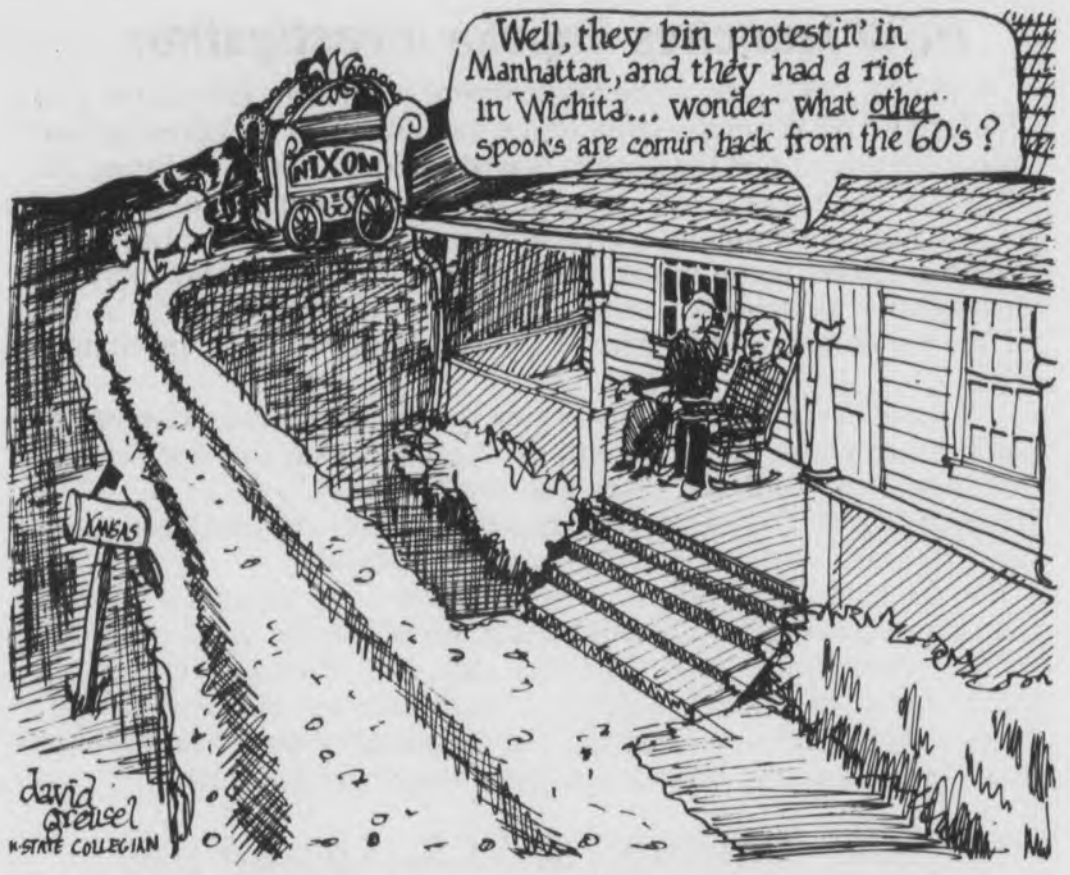
Opinions

It's bloomin' nice

Just when everyone was thinking winter would never end, the flowers came up on campus.

Complain as they will about poor planning, unsightly buildings and muddied cow paths, most people can't help but enjoy these bright spots of campus. In their delight, they might stoop for a sniff, pause for a peek or even give into the temptation to take a bloom.

People are always quick to blame someone for the blights on campus while taking the few pleasures for granted. (Until something pleasant is threatened or torn down.)



After all, it's not Santa's helpers or Mother Nature's children planting and producing those tulips and daffodils—not to mention the lilacs, peonies, irises and other assorted flowers yet to bloom.

The flowers around K-State are made possible through the work of University Facilities' grounds department and its florist Tamera Von Fange. The horticulture department deserves a share of thanks too.

The rest of the credit goes to mother earth, springtime rain and blessed sunshine.

The team work—and flowers—are appreciated.

Nuclear wastes the problem

Editor,

Now that the radiation leak at the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant near Harrisburg, Pa. has been eliminated, we can rest a little bit easier. Although the amount of radiation that was allowed to enter our atmosphere was minimal, it does not eliminate the possiblity of future failures and the potential for a nuclear disaster in any one of the nuclear reactors operating in the U.S. With the safety precautions these plants have incorporated, this risk is not very great.

The greatest problem we are faced with in our nuclear reactor plants is the storage of nuclear waste. Some of this unused material will be radioactive for half a million years. There have been several suggestions but none are foolproof.

Our nuclear plants have produced 600,000 tons of waste. This waste is waiting for the government to come around and find a storage place for it. If we found a feasible storage place for this spent fuel, it would require a minimum of 50 years to find out if it is safe, at least safe for our generation and the next.

This waste cannot go to the depths of the sea because we do not have a material that could withstand the corrosion for great lengths of time. This earth we live on is very unpredictable; earthquakes, erosion and even glaciers in our next ice age could expose buried waste.

Other ideas include sending this waste out into space. The cost of this would be astronomical.

One of the best ideas is to blend the waste with silicone, which would form glass. This glass would crack rather than melt under pressure. The glass would then be buried in huge steel vaults. However, we would still be uncertain of its destiny in thousands of years.

The problem exists: we have 600,000 tons of waste to expose of and more to come. We need a solution before any more nuclear plants are constructed.

PLO prevents true peace

Editor,

RE: "Palestine key to power" April 19.

Before you go accounting all the bad and terrible legends of the Israelis, open your own eyes. The PLO (Palestinian Liberation Organization) has not only gone by the age old prophecy of an eye for an eye, but has extended that to taking lives just for the hell of it.

The Jews in Israel are tired of getting the short end of the stick, they want peace for all the Middle East just as much as you. The only problem with that, is that when you start to trust someone you don't expect a knife in your back the minute you turn around.

It is a shame the rest of the Arab nations don't disown the PLO and what it stands for. This in itself would advance the steps for united peace 100 percent.

Send in the second team

This is a substitute column.

The sports editor—you know, the tall guy with blonde hair and glasses who thinks he's superman—was supposed to write it today, but he couldn't tear himself away from box scores and relay times, so the honor was passed on to me.

Actually, there's not much honor in being a substitute. The word obviously conotes second best. In sports jargon, subsitute is a substitute for the less kind terms "bench warmer" and "second stringer."

In basketball you have the starting five...and then you have the rest of the team. The "rest" of the team must console themselves with the hope that one of the starting five will be injured, get into foul trouble or miss three layups in a row.

A great fate to wish on anyone.

SO WHAT we're left with are a few first-rate players, a lot of struggling second-stringers, and a whole bunch of bench warmers who do nothing but sit on their duffs and watch the other guys play.

Yes, many of the second stringers are perfectly content to merely be a part of the team. They wouldn't take advantage of a break if one fell on them.

You've seen the type. They're not only on the bench but in front of televisions and in the stands.

Satisfied to let the "other guys" run the show, the second stringers watch from their seats, asking the rest of the team to provide the thrills of victory and agonies of defeat.

Not only are they substitutes, they lead a substitute existence. They rely on others for thrills, for laughs, for tears and, in general, entertainment. It's not that the players aren't capable of creating their own entertainment; it's just much easier to allow others to do the entertaining.

TROUBLE IS, it's not near as much fun. Take it from a quasi-athlete, playing the game beats watching from the sidelines everytime. Not only is it more fun, but you end up feeling good, not only about the team, but about yourself as well.

Substituting someone else's achievements for your own gives a false sense of success.

Don't allow yourself to become a substitute in anyone's game. Play your own game, and play to win.

'X' movies not helpful

Editor,

The basic reason we have all come to this fine university is to gain an occupation. This is an institution of higher learning where we form our future and also the future of those yet to come after us.

The showing of X-rated movies is not conducive to the academic atmosphere of a university. This is where we have come to build the foundation upon which to build our future. This is where we have come to put the finishing touches on our molds of character before we go out into the world to live.

After graduation we are to take our new found ideas and enthusiasm and put them to practice to make this world a better place to live. I dare say showing X-rated movies at an institution based upon such principles has quite the opposite effect as to uphold these principles.

May I ask—are X-rated movies something a public institution of higher learning should support? Does it help broaden our cultural horizon or add depth to our field of study or future occupation? Sure we are all free to do as we please, as long as it doesn't infringe upon the rights of others. If students want to indulge in such activities let them go elsewhere where it is not at the expense of the rest of us. I don't want to see my student fees used to support such a program.

Fling to 'spring' onto K-State; teeter-tottering to open events

Don't be surprised if you see two mature college students teeter-tottering in front of the Union Monday.

The ups and downs of this activity are part of the 14th Annual Spring Fling, April 22-28, hosted by K-State's residence halls.

Activities will officially get underway at 1 p.m. Sunday in front of the Union.

Thomas Frith, director of housing, will cut a ribbon marking the opening of the new association of residence hall office in the Derby Food Center.

Additional Sunday activities will include a road rally at 1:30 p.m. in front of the Union, a bike hike to Tuttle and a dance at Edwards Hall parking lot from 9 p.m. to midnight.

Larry Durant, senior in accounting and Spring Fling chairman, said the purpose of the fling is to "get residence hall people together to get to know each other better and open up better communication between halls."

Residence hall volunteers will begin a teeter-totter marathon at 6 a.m. Monday as activities resume.

Each hall will have five or six people who will teeter for one hour each, according to Durant.

The volunteers plan to stick out the marathon for 36 hours—regardless of the weather.

At 6 p.m. Monday, a scavenger hunt will begin at the Union and end at Kramer Food Center where a carnival will be staged from 8 p.m. until 11 p.m.

A scholarship banquet will be held Tuesday at Kramer Food Center, for residents with a 3.7 grade point average or above and a leadership banquet on Thursday at Boyd Hall.

"Sweet Sassafrass Night" will occur Wednesday from 7:30 to 10 p.m. at Derby Food Center with ice cream and a look alike contest. Hall residents will be attempting to imitate Lenny and Squiggy, LaVerne and Shirley, John Travolta and Dolly Parton.

Saturday's activities, which Durant termed "the most traditional," will include bed races through campus, a parade and a picnic.

The parade through Aggieville will start at 10 a.m. and the bed races will begin at 11 a.m. in front of the Union.

The picnic will be near the All Faiths Chapel starting at 11:45 a.m. The grand finale will be a dance from 8 p.m. to midnight on the Derby basketball courts.

Liquor cards abolished?

Carlin to decide fate of booze pools

A bill allowing private club members to purchase drinks, without having to buy liquor cards, may be signed into law by Gov. Carlin today.

Although the bill adds a 10 percent tax to drinks to help pay for alcohol and drug related rehabilitation programs, area club owners expect the new law to benefit owners and customers alike.

"The customers will benefit because he will not have to worry about keeping a card," Tom Pate, manager of Flanagan's, said. "It will save a lot of hassle."

"Secondly, the drinks will not be more expensive because of the law. In fact, even with the 10 percent tax, the customer will probably save money," Pate said. "There is a tax on liquor right now that the customer doesn't realize because of the cards. Now they will see exactly what they are charged for."

"Currently a club member must purchase a liquor card, the price ranging from $5 to $10," Pate said.

"After the drink is ordered the cost of the liquor is subtracted from the card. The price of alcohol for one drink usually runs about 40 cents, with our most expensive drink subtracting 95 cents from the card," Pate said.

Sam Gilman, owner of Gily's Landing, expects the bill to save his club money.

"It will cut my labor bill a good $150 a week," Gilman said. "I won't need to have girls pull the cards or do as much bookkeeping," he said. "Overall, it should make everything run smoother."

"I don't know exactly what effect it will have on the prices," Gilman said. "I'm sure it will probably make the drinks cheaper overall, but I don't know what effect the 10 percent sales tax will have on the cost.

"I am not sure exactly what effect it will have on us," Russ Kennedy, owner of Kennedy's Claim, said. "I know one thing—it will certainly eliminate a lot of paper work for us. It will also give us more versatility on what we can have for specials and such," Kennedy said.

"I don't know what will happen to the cost of drinks," he said. "The 10 percent tax may add something," he said. "We can't be expected to absorb that."

According to Kennedy, director of Alcoholic Beverage Control, licensed liquor retailers and private club owners were sent a memorandum explaining the bill.

"They were informed that the bill is awaiting the governor's signature and that if the bill is signed they will be sent details—including the phasing out of pools," Kennedy said.

"If the bill is signed, the current laws and regulations still remain the same until July 1," he said.

TOP LEFT...Pencils and drawing left for a moment, the artist takes a break. LEFT...Before class, Rosemary gets her hair up and out of the way.

Nude model takes job seriously

Finished posing for the day, Rosemary prepares to leave the studio.

She is a part-time student.

Like many part-time students, she works to meet expenses.

She is a model.

Not a high-paid fashion model, but a $4-per-hour model who poses for figure drawing classes in the nude.

"The first day I walked into that classroom full of people and took my clothes off I thought, 'What the hell am I doing here?'" Rosemary Deininger, junior in horticulture therapy said.

Deininger has been a model for only three weeks. She is new, but her lack of experience is not apparent.

DEININGER said she was nervous and a little uncomfortable at first, but now she said she feels at ease in her job.

"Nudity is very natural to me. I enjoy that sense of freedom.

"When I told my mom about the job she said it was nothing to be ashamed of because it's 'clean, honest work.'

"My parents are very open," Deininger said. "Nudity was never suppressed."

Deininger said she thinks many people, especially women, are not satisfied with how they look. It's largely a product of comparison to all those "perfect bodies in the magazines," she said.

'My fantasy is everyone is naked and they are all drawing me fully clothed.'

"Magazines that sell hard-core pornography objectify women as pieces of anatomy rather than as whole people. Modeling is art, it deals with the whole person," she said.

Deininger said she has never sensed any negative feelings from any of the students in the class.

"They accepted me as I was. And, that helped me accept myself. It's been therapeutic," she said.

MODELS ARE expected to hold a pose from one to 20 minutes without a break. Usually the longer the time, the simpler the pose. If she finds herself in a position which proves uncomfortable, she just has to stick it out. Sore muscles and numb limbs are everyday hazards.

"The worst hazard of all is itches. They're murder," she said.

At times she can block them out by thinking about something else. It works...sometimes. When it doesn't she said, "I just tell myself it's just a little longer. It won't be much longer."

"I knew I would get frustrated if I was trying to draw someone and they kept moving. So, I try to hold very still. I take this job very seriously," she said.

At first, Deininger said she tried to amuse herself by playing mind games to help pass the time. But, she found herself smiling and chuckling, which she said was distracting.

"Now I contemplate life instead. It's like meditation," she said.

"My fantasy is everyone is naked and they are all drawing me fully clothed."

'The Turning Point'

A touching look at dance decisions

By DAVID GREUSEL
Collegian Reviewer

Most of us are able to stumble through our lives without ever making any serious choices on our own—the choices that are not made for us by others we put off until they become irrelevant or we make feeble, tentative stabs at resolving them.

Dancers, however, are not permitted this luxury.

A person contemplating a career in dance soon is confronted with one clearly-defined choice, an issue as black and white as the print on this page, but not so easily smudged.

The choice is, simply, whether or not to dance.

The decision to dance means a life of excitement, glamour and recognition. It also means a life devoid of leisure, pastry and lasting relationships. And like the decision to become a nun, the decision to dance is not easily reversed.

"The Turning Point," this week's UPC Feature Film, looks at this indelible decision from three points of view: one who decided to dance, one who decided not to, and one who now has to decide.

ANNE BANCROFT plays Emma, an aging prima ballerina who forsook a chance for what we think of as a normal life to dance with a major ballet company. Like a professional athlete who shows signs of slowing down, Emma is faced with the realization that her dream world of opening nights and curtain calls is evaporating before her eyes.

The decision not to dance is represented by Shirley MacLaine as DeeDee, a frumpy housewife and ballet teacher who married another dancer for all the wrong reasons. Nevertheless, as the film nears its conclusion, DeeDee seems to be the more successful of the two middle-aged women. Rather than trying to attain immortality by herself, DeeDee has brought the world a new star, her daughter Emilia, who epitomizes every parent's dream of being surpassed by their children.

Emilia is played by Leslie Browne, and hers is the pivotal role in the film. Emilia has just been apprenticed to Emma's company, and in a very short time must decide whether to follow the example of her selfless mother or of her famous godmother, Emma.

To complicate her decision, the two older women are engaged in a tug-of-war over Emilia, and in a bitter battle of envy over each other's apparent happiness.

FURTHER COMPLICATING Emilia's choice is Mikhail Baryshnikov as Yuri. A randy Russian expatriate, he strongly tempts Emilia to consider the advantages of a serious relationship, the kind she knows committed dancers cannot have.

The love scene between Baryshnikov and Browne is surely one of the most passionate dialogues ever spoken through movement. In these two actors and dancers there is a certified heartthrob for every member of the audience.

What is especially enjoyable about "The Turning Point" is its good old-fashioned plot where the viewer is caught up in the progression of the story line and in the lives of the characters. All the major roles are multi-dimensional and easy to sympathize with. There is even a good old-fashioned happy ending for movie-goers who are tired of having their guts wrenched out and thrown about the room by films like "The Deer Hunter."

"The Turning Point" is a beautiful film, a thoughtful film about difficult choices, and a must for anyone who has ever pondered a career in a field which, like dance, can swallow you whole.

Lunchbag play to tour

By KATHY BINFORD
Collegian Reporter

The Lunch Bag Theatre production of "The Typist" is going on tour as an experiment. The performers will visit high schools, answering questions about the play and distributing information on K-State's theater program.

"The Typist" is about a man and woman who work in an office. Covering a time span of 40 years, the play includes their first meeting, their menial work of typing names and addresses on post cards and how time ages them.

Although the setting is in an office, there's a romantic twist to it.

"There's a love attachment between the two, although neither one does anything about it," said Janet Sunderland, graduate in speech and theater. She portrays the woman. John Rahe, graduate in speech and theater, plays the man.

BOTH CHARACTERS are insecure people who need love, and the office is the only place they feel they can receive this type of love, according to Sunderland.

"We all know people at home or at work, and can see they care a lot about each other," said Susan Neaderhiser, graduate in speech and theater, and director of the show. "But because of their differences (like marriage), they know they'll never be anything but fellow workers."

It's a different side of soap-operas where everybody runs away from their husbands, she said.

"Real life isn't like that. It leads to both sides being frustrated, but staying there simply because they can still see each other."

The group already has visited Concordia Junior College and high school and will perform in Chapman, Axtell, Bern and Onaga. The play also will be performed for K-State's theater appreciation class April 30.

Teacher writes musical piece

Hanley Jackson, K-State's resident composer and assistant professor of music, completed his latest selection for symphony and chorus, "Jubilate Deo."

He was commissioned in January by Frank Verro, conductor of the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale to write the piece.

"Varro wanted the piece for his April performance. Four months didn't give me a lot of time to work, but I accepted this offer," Jackson said.

"Jubilate Deo" is written for mixed chorus, brass and percussion, with the text based on Psalm 100.

He said Psalm 100 has been a popular text among composers, and was used as early as 1400.

"Traditionally, choral works fall in two sections, sacred and secular," Jackson said. "Personally, I prefer to work with secular texts."

With more than 25 years of experience, Jackson has 11 published works and has composed and conducted music for various stage productions.

Jackson also recently completed a commissioned work for K-State Concert Choir. "The Birds of Ogden," with a text taken from the poems of Ogden Nash, was performed last month by Concert Choir and previewed at the American Choral Directors Association convention.

Jackson is a graduate of California State University, and since coming to K-State 10 years ago he has received several awards and grants. In 1972 he was named "Kansas Composer of the Year," and in 1973 Jackson received the Kansas State University String Quartet Commission.

Saturday's scrimmage to feature backfield

For the first time in years, the K-State football team has an abundance of talent in the offensive backfield.

Four running backs—L.J. Brown, Keith Dearring, Roosevelt Duncan and Darryl Black—have been putting on a show during the spring football workouts.

All four have come close to breaking the 100-yard rushing mark in the first two scrimmages, and they'll have another chance at 1:30 Saturday when they line up for the Purple-White scrimmage in KSU Stadium.

"They all are running very well," Coach Jim Dickey said. "It's great to have such healty competition in our backfield."

Dickey said other players are also performing well, and the entire offense appears to be vastly improved.

"Those backs are providing us with good running. Sheldon Paris has been totally pleasing at quarterback. We know we have good receivers and our offensive line is an area which we feel the most comfortable about," Dickey said.

The admission price for the scrimmage Saturday is $2 for general public and $1 for students (with I.D.).

Knee surgery keeps Blackman from Pan Am Games tryout

If Rolando Blackman wouldn't have had a knee operation March 12, he wouldn't be at K-State today.

Instead, Blackman would be trying out for the U.S. Pan American Games basketball team at the University of Indiana, along with 69 of the best amateur basketball players in the country.

"My knee wouldn't be able to take the workout it takes to make this team," Blackman said.

He said his left knee is about 60 percent recovered from the minor surgery, which removed floating pieces of cartilage.

The 6-6 Wildcat guard has some ets about not being able to try out for the team, he said.

"It would have been a great experience," Blackman said, "and a good chance to compete with some real fine players."

A committee from the Amateur Basketball Association will select a 12-man team before competition gets underway in July at San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Along with Blackman, three other Big 8 players were invited to attend the elite tryouts: Dean Uthoff of Iowa State, Al Beal of Oklahoma and Darnell Valentine of Kansas.

"Al Beal has the best chance of all of them to make it," Blackman said.

The K-State standout may have another opportunity to quench his thirst for international amateur competition when next year's Olympics roll around, but he said he isn't looking that far ahead.

"We want to work toward the Big 8 Championship next year and then worry about the Olympics when the time comes," he said.

Softball mini-tourney to begin Saturday

The K-State softball team will host Northwest Missouri State and Nebraska in a mini-tournament Saturday at CiCo Park.

Round-robin play will begin at 11 a.m. with Nebraska against Missouri State, followed by K-State against Missouri State at 1 p.m. The final contest is scheduled for 2 p.m. with the 'Cats pitted against Nebraska.

Coach Mary Phyl Dwight said she is pleased with the progress her team, now 10-13, has made this season.

"The only thing holding us back is that we need to bear down and get a few more clutch hits."

K-State to host Big 8 in only home regatta

The Big 8 Rowing Regatta, K-State's lone home meet this season, will begin at 8 a.m. Sunday on the east side of Tuttle Creek Reservior north of the dam.

The regatta originally was scheduled to be hosted by Oklahoma State earlier this spring, but bad weather forced its cancellation.

The University of Kansas, University of Nebraska at Lincoln, OSU and K-State will compete.

'Competition will be rough' for Wildcats at KU Relays

With strong entries in both the men's and women's competition, the K-State track teams enter the second leg of the Midwest Relays Circuit this weekend with much more outdoor experience than they had at the Texas Relays.

Both teams head for stiff competition at the KU Relays fresh from impressive performances at the John Jacobs Invitational in Norman, Okla., last weekend.

"The competition will be rough, but since the Relays are so close to home, a lot of people will come to watch, which helps us," Barry Anderson, women's coach, said.

"Just the atmosphere of the whole meet makes it an important one to the athletes, and it also gives the high school participants a chance to look at us," Anderson said.

The men's entries include javelin throwers Frank Perbeck and Joe Bramlage; Ray Bradley in the discus and shot put; Kevin Sloan in the long and triple jumps and Tim Davis in the 1,500-meter run.

The women's relay section will feature Leesa Wallace, Wanda Trent, Lorraine Davidson and Renee Urish, while Beets Kolarik and Diane Moeller compete in the high jump. Several 'Cats are entered in field events, including shot putters Linda Long and Jeanne Daniels.

Fast-action 'Ultimate' to make Manhattan tournament debut

A new different sport played with an object familiar to many will make its Manhattan debut this weekend.

The City Park will be the site for the Tri-State Ultimate Championship Saturday and Sunday, hosted by the Aerial Wizards Frisbee Club.

Ultimate is a team sport played with a frisbee. Seven members per team match their abilities in a running and passing game.

The frisbee must be advanced by passing, not running. The game is played on a field 60 yards long and 40 yards wide with 30-yard end zones.

One point is scored by passing the frisbee into the end zone to a teammate. Ultimate is played in two 20-minute halves.

Teams from Oklahoma, Nebraska and Kansas are expected to compete in the sub-regional competition, sanctioned by the International Frisbee Association. The public is invited and admission is free.

First place winners will receive $100, a team trophy and plaques for individual members.

WINNERS of the Manhattan competition will qualify to compete in regional competition next month in Madison, Wisc.

Manhattan was selected as the site for the sub-regional by representatives of the three states at an International Frisbee Association meeting.

Nauseating mess on a hook

A brief word on fishing from a non-outdoorsman:

Fishing is a wonderful sport. You sit on the bank of the sparkling clear Kansas river or on a boat on the antiseptic water of Tuttle Creek. And you sit. And you sit. And you sit.

The pure challenge of fishing is intoxicating. You pull on your sleek, colorful uniform of green waders, suspenders and squirrely camouflage hat, hop into your car and you're ready for the day.

First, you're greeted by the exhilirating smell of chicken liver, shad sides, worm spleens, bat tongues, decayed whale tails, fly eyes, or whatever you use for bait.

Then, if you're trying for catfish, carp, drum, sucker, or other powerfully-built, shimmering beauties, you stand in leech-filled, scum-covered water up too your malleus, incus and stapes (that's up to your ears, for you non-anatomical types) until one of those wonders of nature goes for the nauseating mess on your hook.

Some of the problems can be avoided. You can miss the leeches by fishing from a boat.

It's simple. You pull the boat out to the lake. Your car overheats from the excess load. You open the radiator to add water and the boiling contents spew out and scald you. Your entire body consists of a huge blister.

By the time you get to the lake, darkness is closing in. You carefully back the trailer down the boat ramp, running over two picnic tables, one of those charcoal cookout thingy-bobs and your cousin Larry with the bad case of acne.

The boat hits the water and sinks. Forgot to put in the plug. Oh well, back to the leeches.

I haven't succeeded in promoting fishing, but how much can you really get from a sport in which one of your main goals is named crappie?

Snafu

Welcome back for another exciting episode of "Days of SNAFU." Yesterday's program ended with Veronica telling Jeff that the illegitimate baby she was about to have belonged to Harry and not George as she told Lisa in Tuesday's show. Jeff in return said it didn't matter and pledged to her his undying love and loyalty. Meanwhile, Gloria admitted to Dustin that she had previously had an affair with Doug before marrying Austin last month. Dustin, Austin's brother, did not take the news well and has threatened to tell all to his mother, and Veronica's sister-in-law, Carla. Now, on with the show.

Snafu

SNAFU,

Can the Nobel Peace Prize be taken back?

L.B.

Dear L.B.,

All I can tell you is that it has never been taken back. In fact, none of the five Nobel Prizes have been taken back.

I suppose it would be up to the committee who awarded the prize because the statues of the Nobel Foundation say that the prizes "are not subject to appeal; nor may they be contested."

The committee reserves the right to not award the prizes, and they have refused, in 1940, '41 and '42. There have been other years when at least one of the five prizes were withheld. The Nobel Peace Prize has not been awarded 20 times between the years 1901 and 1977.

Sixteen Americans have won the Nobel Peace Prize, including Theodore Roosevelt in 1906, Martin Luther King in 1964, Norman Borlaug in 1970 and Henry Kissinger in 1973. Le Duc Tho was supposed to share the prize with Kissinger but refused to accept the award.

If you someday have the chance to receive a Nobel Peace Prize, I suggest you think twice before refusing it; it could mean a dramatic income change. The going price for such a prize is about $160,000.

SNAFU,

In my experience in K-State residence halls, limited as it may seem because I'm a freshman, I have noticed that there are no urinals in any of the men's restrooms, just conventional toilets. Why is this so?

P.O.

Dear Post Office,

As I understand it, every hall in the Kansas State University Associaion of Residence Halls system was switched over to conventional toilets many years ago.

The halls in the Strong Complex used to have urinals, but Thomas Frith, housing director, who was then very young, saw the need for more housing for women. Hence, he housed women in Putnam and Boyd and made Vanzile coed. Obviously, the urinals presented a problem, and for 17 years, the residents had to walk over to Ford Hall to use its restrooms. A mass protest ensued, and the problem was eventually alleviated by uniform toiletage across campus. A slight inconvenience for the guys, a lifesaver for the gals. So, P.O. I guess you'll have to take them the way they are—sitting down.

Child drowns in rain-swollen bayou

Cloudbursts, floods, tornadoes thrash South

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Fresh cloudbursts Sunday brought more record flooding to southwest Texas and renewed peril along Mississippi's Pearl River, while the Air Force flew a million sandbags to the inundated Red River Valley in the upper Midwest.

And at least four tornadoes touched down in Louisiana, including a twister that demolished the site of the Crawfish Festival midway in Chalmette and injured two persons slightly.

LOUISIANA'S torrential weather over the weekend also claimed at least one life, a 6-year-old boy who drowned in a rain-swollen Baton Rouge bayou.

With towns such as Columbia, Miss., East Grand Forks, Minn., and Beaumont, Texas, still under serious threat, the toll in property damage from this spring's unusually heavy flooding continued to grow.

Mississippi Gov. Cliff Finch estimated the bill at between $900 million and $1 billion in his state. An estimated 23,000 residents along the Pearl River were forced to flee.

BURT BRATCHER of the Texas Civil Defense placed the damage from flooding since Wednesday at $100 million in Harris County and $50 million to $75 million in Conroe, about 50 miles north of Houston. The floods also have claimed at least four lives in Texas.

In the endangered Pearl River town of Columbia, where about half the 8,000 residents had already abandoned their homes, Mayor Robert Bourne ordered schools closed, told merchants to keep only a minimum numbers of clerks in their stores and asked residents to stay home.

THE NATIONAL Weather Service said torrential rains that soaked southwest Mississippi and south-central Louisiana with 5.6 inches of rain within 24 hours were expected in the Pearl River basin and could produce flash flooding.

To add to the area's woes, high winds or tornadoes felled trees across power lines in two other south Mississippi towns and a tornado watch was posted in the Columbia area.

Columbia was spared more severe damage Friday, when the roadbed of U.S. 98, the main east-west highway, was cut to let the water through. The Pearl dropped slightly.

The Houston-Beaumont-Conroe areas of southeast Texas have received a total of 12 inches of rain since Wednesday and the National Weather Service said most streams were well over flood stage Sunday, with the Neches River nearing a record crest at Beaumont.

HARRIS COUNTY Deputy Sheriff G.L. Moore said homes in the Forest Cove area north of Lake Houston and the Highland Shores area south of Lake Houston were still filled with water.

The National Weather Service said the river at East Grand Forks was at 48.48 feet and still rising Sunday, more than 20 feet over the flood stage of 28 feet. It is expected to crest Tuesday at 48.99 feet, but officials expect the reinforced dikes to hold back water below 51 feet.

The Louisiana twisters also touched at such scattered locations as Lafayette, Hammond and Belle Chasse. No major damage or serious injuries were reported.

K-State sophomore's death still under lab investigation

A 21-year-old K-State student was found dead Friday afternoon in his apartment at 519 Osage St.

The investigation into the cause of the death of Patrick Moriarity, sophomore in arts and sciences, has not yet been completed, said a spokesman for the lab performing the autopsy.

Local arrangements were handled by Parkview Funeral Home. The body has been transported to Colby, Moriarity's hometown, to the Harrison Chapel. A spokesman there said the funeral will be at 10 a.m. Tuesday at the Sacred Heart Catholic Church in Colby.

A memorial fund has been established at the Colby Community College where Moriarity attended school. Donations can be sent to the Moriarity Memorial Science Scholarship Fund at the college.

Firm unprepared for plant accident

READING, Pa. (AP)--The president of the company that operates the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant says the firm was neither prepared for the March 28 accident nor aware of its scope for two or three days.

But Walter Creitz, president of Metropolitan Edison Co., denied company spokesmen misled the public and said the utility handled the situation properly.

"Keep in mind, man was dealing with a problem he never experienced before," Crietz said in an interview with Wally Hudson, business editor of the Reading Eagle, published Sunday.

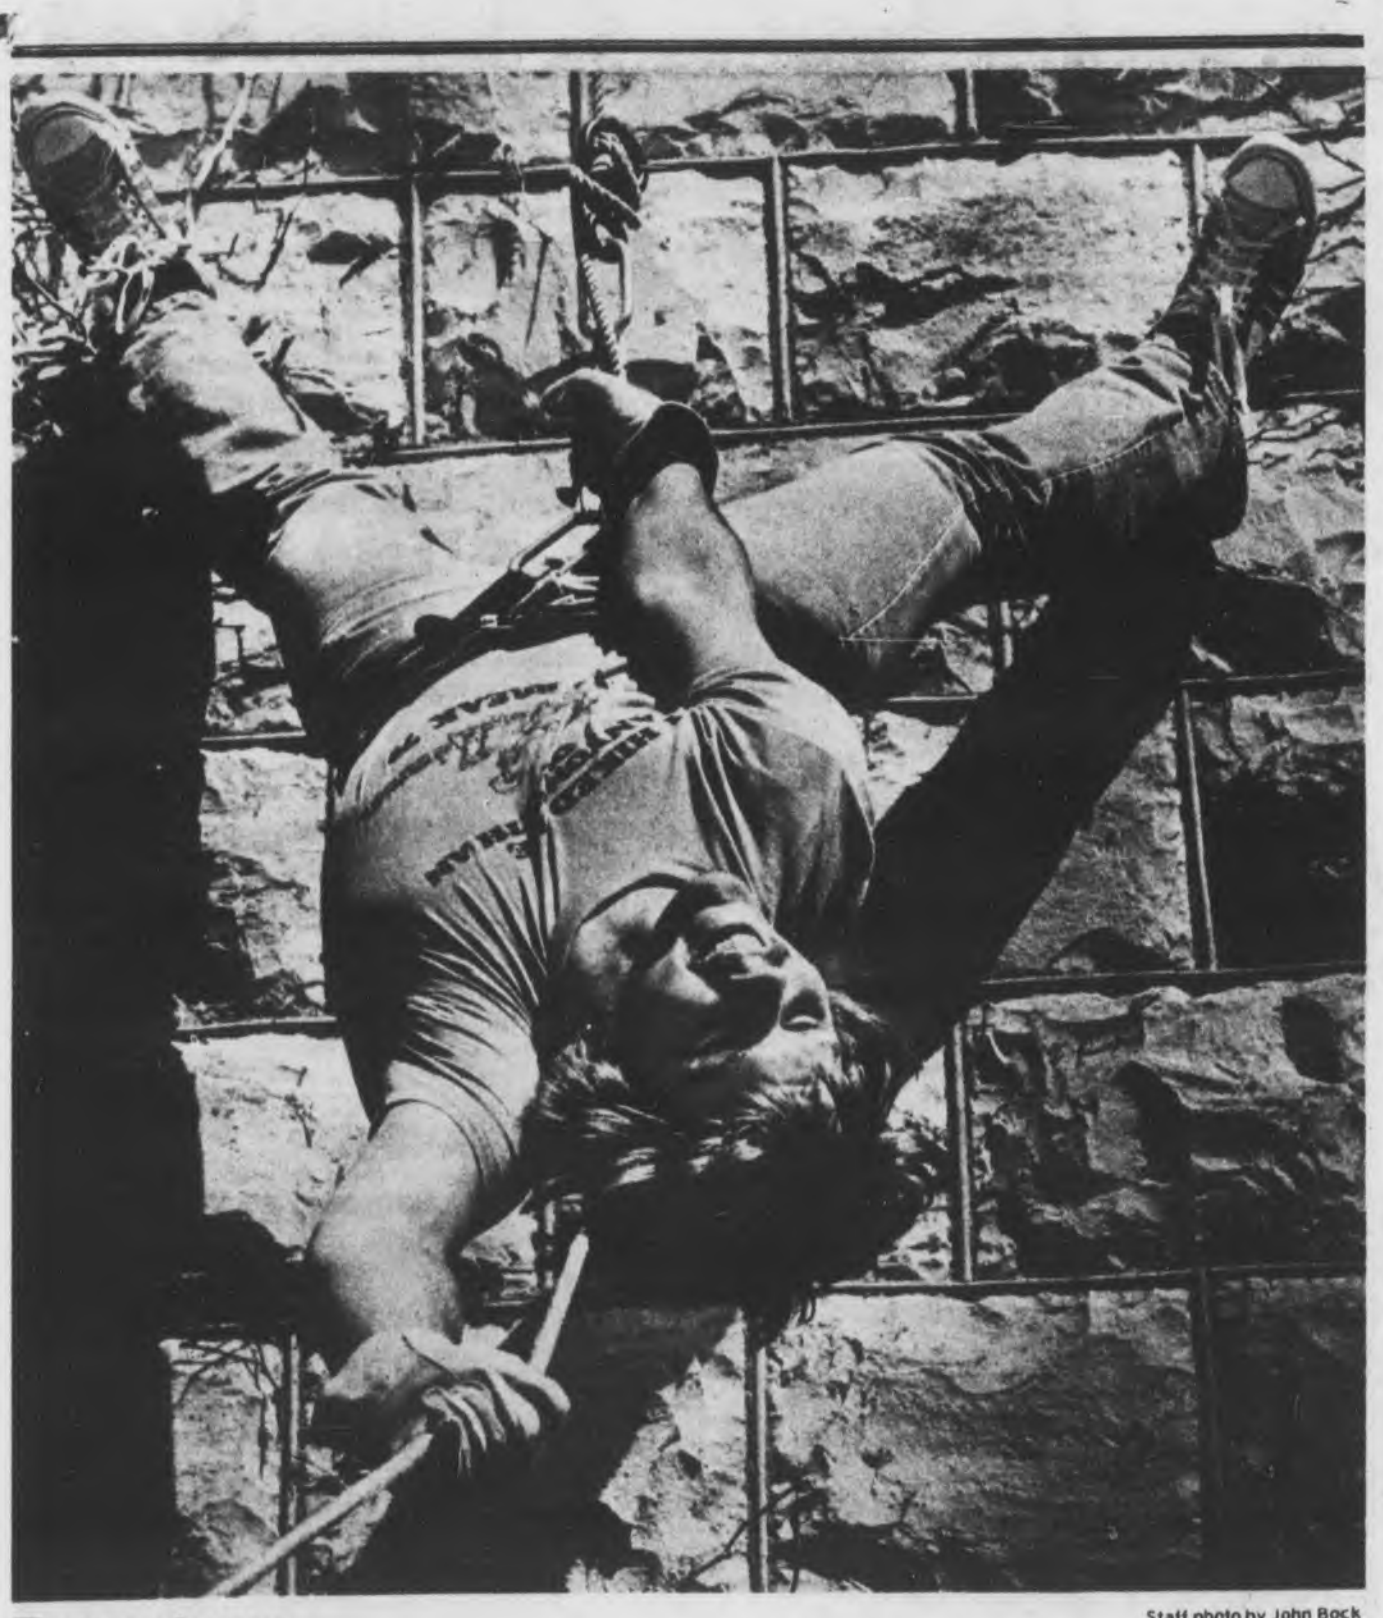
It was the first public statement by Creitz since April 1, when President Carter went to Middletown, Pa., for a tour of the crippled plant in an attempt to calm fears of a nuclear disaster.

Creitz is scheduled to appear Monday in Washington before a Senate Environment and Public Works subcommittee investigating the Three Mile Island accident.

THE STILL unexplained failure of a water purifying unit, followed by breakdowns of the reactor's emergency pumping system and several human errors, caused the reactor to heat up and begin emitting radiation within hours of the accident.

"When this thing occurred, none of us knew the extent of the accident at the very beginning," Creitz said.

"We weren't lying. Dammit, we tried at all times to tell the public as we saw it. The unfortunate thing is, we didn't know the total extent of the accident until several days later," he said.



"Here is something we didn't expect would happen, but it did happen. We didn't know what would happen next.

"From what I understood, the situation was completely under control. It wasn't until two or three days that we knew the scope of the accident."

UNEXPECTED emissions of radiation two days after the initial accident prompted the evaucation of pregnant women and preschool children from the immediate area surrounding the plant. The same day, a hydrogen bubble was discovered in the reactor core.

President Carter sent Harold Denton, director of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's office of reactor regulation, to assume control at the request of Pennsylvania Gov. Dick Thornburgh.

There were reports then that the utility had been ordered not to comment further on the accident, but Creitz denied that.

Amin's last stand broken

JINJA, Uganda (AP)—Tanzanian troops captured Jinja, Uganda's second city and the last stronghold for troops loyal to Idi Amim, before dawn Sunday. Thousands of residents threw flowers and shouted, "We are free, we are free."

There was only minor resistance by a few hundred of the deposed Amin's soldiers.

The Tanzanian force also took control of the vital Owen Falls hydroelectric dam, which supplies all of Uganda's electricity and 15 percent of the power used in neighboring Kenya.

Tanzanian Brig. Gen. Marwe Kambale, whose brigade led the attack on Jinga, toured the town wearing a pair of Western-style .45 caliber six-shooters strapped to his waist.

The Tanzanians, who along with Ugandan exiles captured the capital city of Kampala 13 days ago, are continuing their drive north and east to consolidate the power of provisional President Jusufu Lule's fledgling government.

The Tanzanian forces said there was no sign of Amin, who was last reported in northwestern Uganda near his hometown of Arua from where he could easily flee to neighboring Sudan or Zaire.

THE PROVISIONAL government had feared Amin's troops would make a bloody last stand at Jinja and attempt to destroy the dam.

The Uganda-Tanzania war began six months ago when Amin's troops invaded a 710-square-mile section of Tanzania. President Julius Nyerere's forces drove the Ugandans out within two weeks and forced them to retreat toward Kampala until the capital was taken.

Jinja, a city of 50,000, lies 50 miles east of Kampala and sits at the point where the Victoria Nile flows out of Lake Victoria. The town controls overland supply routes east toward Kenya and the port of Mombasa.

Jinja residents said the city was held in terror for the past two weeks as Amin's men went on a rampage of looting and indiscriminate murder. Some accounts said hundreds of civilians were shot.

The Rev. Henry Lugolobi, an Anglican clergyman, said Amin's forces at the Nile bridge had killed everyone who had tried to flee Jinja during the last week.

Amin's files show paranoia

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP)—Top secret documents scattered ankle-deep on the floor of deposed dictator Idi Amin's security building tell the tale of his regime's paranoia, its obsession for amassing records on suspected agents, spies, smugglers, drunkards, complainers, tourists and petty thieves.

In the ransacked building that once housed the dreaded State Research Bureau, rooms full of files show the all-pervasive nature of Amin's security service that kept "secret" and "top secret" dossiers on the smallest details of many Ugandans' private lives.

Similar papers, written in a semi-literate jargon, were found in Amin's looted residences, command posts and official homes.

MANY OF THE files would be ludicrous were it not for the torture and murder performed at the squat, pink stucco State Research Bureau headquarters building. Yoweri Museveni, No. 2 man in the new provisional government's defense ministry, estimates a half-million people disappeared and were presumed killed by Amin's agents.

The files show people were arrested on the slightest suspicion and thrown into research bureau dungeons. Rumor and innuendo often were sufficient to subject suspects to medieval torture and death.

Ugandans say they lived in perpetual fear during Amin's eight-year reign, never knowing who were their real friends. Individuals said they tried to appear stupid and to do nothing that would bring them to the attention of the authorities.

A "confidential" document dated Dec. 19, 1977, concerns "artificial hair." Case officer "Kejjo" wrote, "When the wig was banned under government laws, women have changed over to other artificial hair which I think is the worst under the grounds that certain bad women elements can easily hide grenades in this round type of hair without any suspicion."

Police investigating $10,000 burglary

Riley County police are investigating a burglary that occurred in the northeastern part of Manhattan Friday and in which about $10,000 worth of miscellaneous items were taken.

The home of Richard Kaldor, 1728 Thomas Circle, was entered sometime Friday afternoon while no one was at home. A color television set and a stereo, along with other items, were stolen.

Police as yet have no suspects in the case.

Palestinians kill 4 in pre-dawn raid

NAHARIYA, Israel—Four Israelis, including two little girls, were killed early Sunday when Palestinian guerrillas launched a pre-dawn raid from the sea and shot their way into an apartment building.

One of the four terrorists was shot and killed by a civilian as the attackers attempted to break into the apartments. A second was killed by Israeli security forces as the guerrillas attempted to flee on the beach and two others were wounded and captured, the army said.

Meanwhile, military officials announced that Israeli naval boats shelled a guerrilla training camp Sunday belonging to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine at Nahr ElBerd, north of Tripoli. Palestinian spokesmen in Beirut, however, said the Israelis shelled a refugee camp in the area. Informed sources in Beirut said three persons died in the shelling.

Divorcee seeks help in making baby

DENVER—When Carolyn Myer placed an ad in weekly newspapers here, she says she was not seeking her "dream man"—only a father for the child she wants to bear.

Myer, not her real name, said she decided to place the ad after ruling out other ways that single people can become parents.

Within two weeks after the ad appeared, she said, more than 200 men responded—85 percent of them "serious or genuinely curious."

She said she now is in the process of talking to those men, most of whom are in their 20s and 30s and single.

Myer, who was married while in her 20s and divorced, said she is not particularly interested in getting married again. Another marriage, she said, "is a possibility, but right now I really value my independence."

So last month she placed an ad that said: "Single professional woman, 34, interested in meeting intelligent, healthy male for purpose of becoming pregnant. No financial obligations, although open to discussing relationship if desired." A post office box number was included.

"I think this should be an option for women," Myer said, explaining why she was willing to talk about the ad although she insisted on using a pseudonym.

TV violence gives kids heebie-jeebies

PHILADELPHIA—Violence in network broadcast weekend television shows aimed at children rose to record levels on ABC and CBS and a near-record on NBC last fall, according to a study released Sunday.

The study also found that young people who are heavy television watchers display an exaggerated sense of fear and mistrust of the world they live in.

Researchers for the University of Pennsylvania's Annenberg School of Communications said they found that violence in late evening network programming also had increased.

However, overall violence depicted during the "family hour"—7 to 8 p.m. CST—decreased for the second year in a row, the researchers said.

"There is a consistent relationship between fear and the amount of television watched," said Nancy Signorielli, research coordinator for the study of network television. "They (heavy watchers) do perceive the world as much more violent and they are much more fearful."

Happy couple separated by liquor law

SEATTLE—Patricia and Lowen Clausen, happily married for almost 10 years, say liquor is the cause of their pending divorce.

Not drinking it, but wanting to sell it.

Mrs. Clausen says the divorce is a last-resort measure to get a liquor license for her new Danish restaurant in the Ballard neighborhood. The couple say they will continue to live together.

Mrs. Clausen has been denied a liquor license by the Washington state Liquor Control Board because of her husband's status as a Seattle police officer. The board has told her that liquor licenses are not issued to officers who enforce liquor laws.

The couple have argued in vain that Clausen will not be directly involved in the liquor business, and have signed a separate property agreement certifying that Mrs. Clausen alone will own and operate the restaurant.

The decision to get a divorce "was very difficult for both of us," Mrs. Clausen said. "Lowen was faced with having to quit his (9-year-old) job on the police force, or with us having to get a divorce."

Pool has drained

After suffering for years as the life and vigor slowly drained out of it, Liquor Pool has died.

Liquor Pool would have died years ago if it hadn't been for the intravenous feeding and constant nursing by the Kansas dry forces. Instead of letting the issue die with dignity, the anti-liquor groups kept their loved one around for years after its usefulness was over.

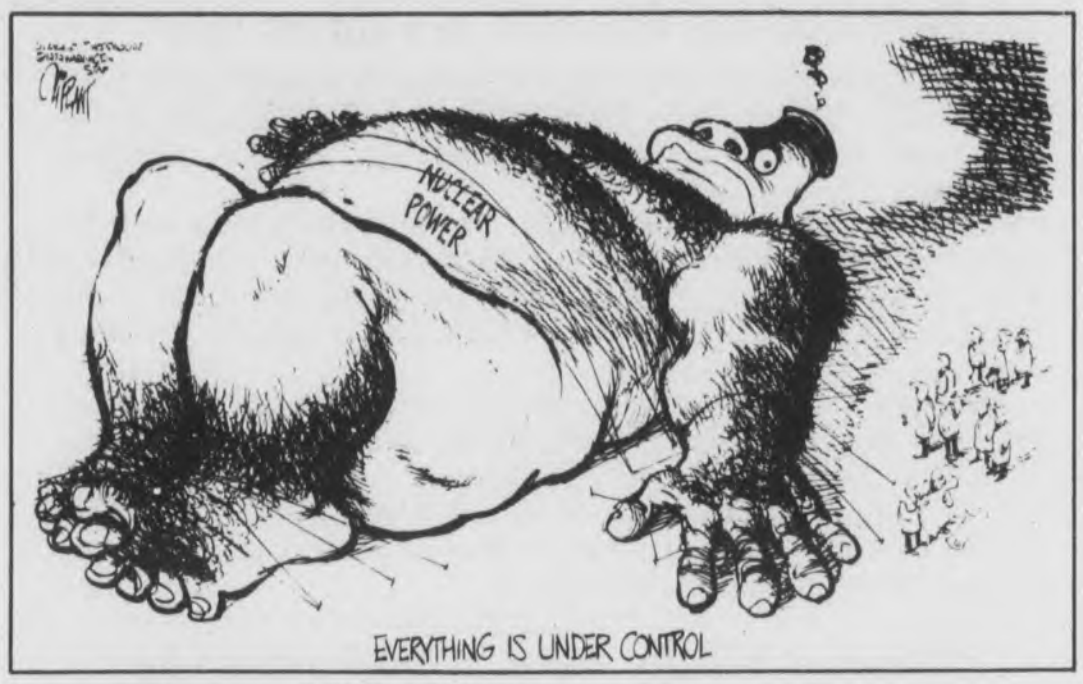
Despite the custom of not speaking ill of the dead, there is little good to say about the archaic Liquor Pool.

Credited by some with keeping alcoholism down, Liquor Pool only served to feed the hypocrisy of Kansas' liquor laws—making private club members pay twice for their drinks.

Liquor Pool didn't stop automobile accidents and didn't prevent people from drinking, despite claims to the contrary. Anyone who wanted a drink, had one, putting up with the requirement of paying once for the set-ups and again for the Liquor Pool.

The dry forces are grieving at the loss of their loved one, but the doctor, Gov. John Carlin, made the realistic decision when he pulled the tubes and let Liquor Pool die a natural death.

Even though the anti-liquor forces are mourning their loss, few Kansans will notice the demise of Liquor Pool.



A successor in hypocrisy has already been chosen who will carry on the cause, Paying-by-the-Drink, (after paying for club membership, of course).

Under new management of the liquor laws, members of private clubs will face the trauma of writing one check instead of two for their drinks.

In order to get used to this huge change and in memory of Liquor Pool, Paying-by-the-Drink will not take charge until after Liquor Pool's full dress funeral on July 1.

Although some mourn the passage of Liquor Pool, they may rest knowing Liquor Pool's grandfather, Private Club, still rules the state. Under that guidance, the tradition of hypocrisy is alive and well in Kansas.

Lessons in rehabilitation

Editor,

Over the past several years I have taken a number of distinguished persons visiting K-State from around the country to Nichols and have outlined the circumstances wnder which it is still derelict. The general reaction has been amazement that any major organization is still unaware of the great potential old buildings have for reuse. Thoughout the United States, thousands of projects have demonstrated the value of our built environment as a resource: the economic value of conserving materials and energy as well as creating labor-intensive work in rehabilitation, the cultural value of preserving elements in the landscape with which generations have identified, the aesthetic value of retainiing handsome buildings that cement the needs and aspirations of previous periods and the creative value of offering challenges for innovative design in adapting these buildings to new purposes. These lessons have been learned in communities of all sizes and in all regions. Lessons learned—but not, apparently by the administration of K-State.

The tragedy of this ignorance is it is so unnecessary. Last fall the architecture college inaugurated a graduate curriculum in preservation. Several members of the faculty have had considerable experience in the technical, economic and aesthetic aspects of preserving old buildings. Several of us in the Colleges of Architecture and Design and Home Economics now head or serve on national committees and boards of organizations playing a central role in the preservation movement. It is regrettable an academic institution supports certain activities in the classroom but acts in a contrary manner when conducting its own business.

If sensitively rehabilitated, Nichols could serve as a model for similar undertakings in the region. Setting examples should be a major function of a university. If demolished, the episode will attract national attention and be a public embarassment for both the university and the state. Such action would only reinforce the unwarranted stereotype some people in other regions have of Kansas as a backwater.

Finally, the appropriation of funds to study alternative uses for Nichols is to be applauded in principle; however, the amount allocated by the legislature (even if matched by outside sources) can, at best, fund a report on measures needed to stabilize and conserve the existing fabric. The $45,000 appropriated last year is a reasonable figure for a feasibility study that could explore ways in which a new facility could be incorporated into the existing shell.

Even if constructing a major new facility is years away from realization, steps must be taken now to ensure the shell is properly treated so it can be more fully utilized in the future.

Driving the Kansas Treeways

Kansas seems to have been through the school of hard knocks. It's taken a lot of bad mouthing over the years.

"It's too damn windy, too flat and boring; it has some idiotic laws such as not allowing liquor by the drink; no one wants to visit Kansas, there's nothing there."

Where's Kansas' silver lining? It's in the green. All the critics better take advantage of this time of the year—Kansas is truly green. Just a simple drive reveals the beauty that's been hiding throughout the winter months. The spring wheat is coming up, the trees are starting to show their multi-colored halos and flowers are blooming everywhere.

LET'S LOOK at the criticisms though. They may have silver linings too.

First and most prevalent, Kansas is too damn windy. Even Kansans make this claim, no matter how reluctant they would be to move to another state. But a question that should arise is—where is the pollution? Gone with the wind would be the reply. But then, the top soil might be gone with it too.

Without the wind, Kansas wouldn't have so many windmills that are a trademark of the countryside. Then what would Photo I students take pictures of?

We can definitely attribute much of Kansas' lack of air pollution to the brisk winds. We've never had pollution warnings in Kansas (only tornado warnings), not even in Wichita where air pollution is more prevalent than anywhere else in the state. But high (as in altitude) in the Rockies, pollution is thick in the air. Denver manages to alert the population not to breath too much on certain days. Beautiful Denver, choke to death in Denver.

KANSAS IS too flat and boring. This is obvious when driving from east to west, past Salina where extraterrestrials wouldn't want to visit. But without the flat terrain, travellers would get the same gas mileage as driving in the Rockies. On the other hand, travellers want to get out of the state faster so they may turn on their CB's and boogie. So much for energy conservation.

As for the idiotic laws in the state, the liquor by the drink issue (or lack of it) may be on the way out since Gov. John Carlin signed a law this past week abolishing liquor pools in private clubs. Let's all drink to Gov. Carlin.

For the criticism that nobody wants to visit Kansas, here's a suggestion. We can use our green beauty to establish tourist appeal. How about a Kansas Treeway? If we line the interstate highways with thousands of trees, what a sight it would be. Beautiful trees all along the long and lonely highway. At least tourists couldn't say there is no scenery.

THIS KIND of display might also help stimulate our economy in a couple of ways. First, an effort like this would employ hundreds of workers planting the trees, similar to the government programs of the 1930s to help get out of the Depression. They planted trees for shelter belts and soil conservation.

Second, some dollars might come into the state from the revenue created by tourist traps along the Treeway.

Even if it only attracted a small degree of tourism, it would be more than we have now. The Treeway might be a reason for tourists to travel through our state even if they don't want to travel to it.

On the other hand, in thirty years or so when the trees would be full grown, gasoline might be in such short supply tourism will be drastically curtailed or maybe automobiles will no longer be the primary means of transportation. Then the Treeway would only be a good idea that ends up in the red on the ledger.

Kansas isn't really so bad but some dissenters will always remain. For them, some words of wisdom from the great Al Sheets, famed hippy-dippy weatherman, who once said—"If you don't like the weather, move." So be it.

Soviets verify suspicions

Radiation leaks plague Russian power stations

MOSCOW (AP)—The Soviet Union's top power minister has admitted what Western analysts suspected for years—that there have been "several accidents" at Soviet nuclear power stations including an explosion and a radiation leak, a U.S. congressman said here Sunday.

Rep. Robert Michel (R-Ill.) told a news conference here that the disclosure was made in a private meeting on nuclear power safety with Pyotr Neporozhniy, Soviet minister of power and electrification.

But, Michel added, the Soviets do not plan to curtail construction of their nuclear power plants, which they feel are safer than those in use in the United States.

"The Soviets make no bones about the fact that they intend to press ahead with their nuclear power development," he said.

Experts here said that based on the information Neporozhniy provided, the accidents had been serious. The minister cited two accidents and a number of fires but did not say when or where they occurred.

AT THE TIME of one of the accidents, Neporozhniy went to the site "to make certain that the site was safe," Michel quoted the minister as saying.

"He likened that visit to our President and Mrs. Carter making the kind of visit they did to the Three Mile Island plant in Pennsylvania," Michel said.

He made no mention of any injuries, casualties or evacuations, Michel said.

Soviet officials had never publicly admitted to accidents at their nuclear plants, but U.S. intelligence reports have logged at least three since the 1950s.

DURING THE Three Mile Island crisis the Soviet press said their nuclear power plants have a safer cooling system and are run with a better view toward safety than are American plants.

According to Michel, Neporozhniy "did make mention of several accidents in the Soviet Union in the past" but "not as serious as would deter them from proceeding (with nuclear power development.)"

The congressman added: "They feel their safety provisions are such that they can proceed not only with the current model (of reactors) but with a fast breeder reactor."

NEPOROZHNIY SAID he plans to visit the United States in June to discuss energy issues with his American counterparts, Michel told reporters.

The subject of nuclear power safety also arose at a meeting between congressmen here on a 10-day visit and Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin on Friday.

Rep. John Brademas (D-Ind.) quoted Kosygin as saying that "in effect, the United States did the Soviet Union a favor by putting the Soviets on warning that they better go back and take a look at their safety precautions for nuclear power stations."

'The Indian is the minority of the minorities'

Indian sees change in attitudes of Kickapoos on the reservation

By RAYMOND QUINTON
Collegian Reporter

Chick Hale is a native American Indian with "pipe dreams."

"I've always had a pipe dream that motivates me when things get gloomy," Hale said. "I've dreamed of gaining experience in the urban world then going back to the reservation to help the people help themselves."

Hale, recreation director for the Kickapoo tribe of Kansas, spoke Saturday in Ahearn Field House to a small group gathered to see a powwow scheduled as part of Native

Chick Hale

American Indian Awareness Week, sponsored by K-State's Native American Indian Student Body (NAISB).

The powwow was cancelled, so Hale discussed the progress of the Kickapoo nation.

HALE SAID although the Kickapoo are obtaining more construction, office and government-sponsored jobs, some tribe members still reject modern ways.

Hale, who is both Kickapoo and Pottawatomie, grew up on the Kickapoo Reservation at Horton in northeast Kansas. The reservation is the home of about 1,000 Indians, he said.

Hale said the Kickapoo were originally from south of the Great Lakes in what is now Illinios and Indiana. The tribe was driven west of the Mississippi River in the early 1700s by the French.

When the reservation was established in the late 1800s, land was allotted in individual ownership. Many individuals under economic hardship sold their land, Hale said.

Now the reservation is "checkerboarded" with land not owned by the tribe, he said. Much of the land was purchased by whites.

Hale said he has seen a change in the attitudes of the Kickapoos on the reservations, but many are still troubled by modern concepts.

"The government wanted to teach them to become farmers," he said. "But Indians can't make it as farmers—even farmers can't make it as farmers anymore.

"People talk about minorities all the time, but the Indian is the minority of the minorities," Hale said. "We need to be more supportive of Indian students regardless of what tribe they are from.

"I know how it feels for students to be by themselves after leaving the reservation and going directly to a college campus," he said. "I think people need to reach out and help."

HALE SAID it is important for Indians to come to college, because education is a key factor in improving their community. He added, however, that the tribe's basic traditions, such as the powwow, should be maintained because they hold the tribe together.

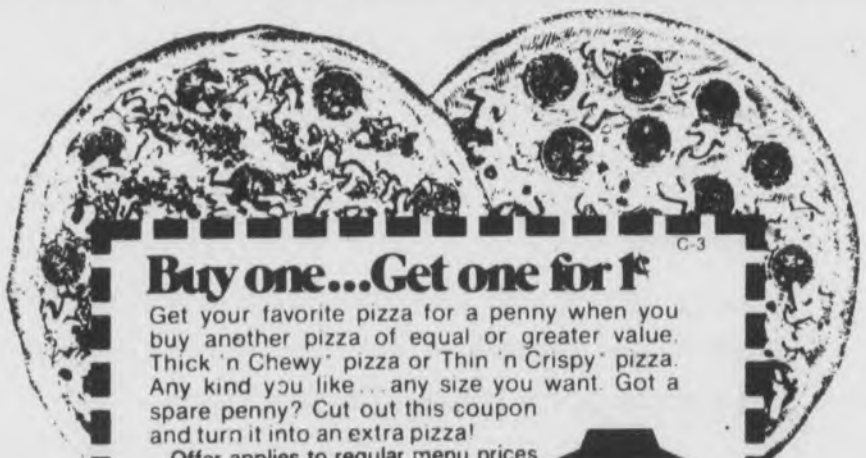
"Powwows are our way of celebrating and socializing with other tribes," Hale said. "We celebrate because of our development and progess, and we also share our singing, dance, crafts and ideas."

Hutchinson building destroyed by fire

HUTCHINSON (AP)—Fire destroyed a massive storage building on the old Hutchinson Naval Air Base Sunday afternoon. No injuries were reported in connection with the blaze.

Firefighters from a number of surrounding communities battled the fire for more than two hours, but the structure burned to the ground.

The building constituted the main office of Collins Industries and was one of 19 on the industrial tract rented by Collins.



Lew Editer, Collins general manager, said several chassis for school buses, major equipment of the firm and records were destroyed in the fire. Editer said the loss, which he estimated could run as high as $1.5 million, was covered by insurance.

The alarm was turned in by Hoppy Costa, an employee of the company. He said he noticed the fire and turned in the alarm before trying to save some of the vehicles, but was "blown out of the building" by the fire.

Myths, facts of alcohol explored in fall project

By BECKY VINING
Collegian Reporter

Now is the time to think about sensible drinking, not the morning after a party or while suffering from a hangover.

An alcohol abuse prevention project to teach students the myths and facts about alcohol will be offered by the Center for Student Development next fall.

"Our main emphasis will be on sensible drinking, not necessarily that alcohol is a negative drug," Linda Teener, project director, said. "We all use it, but there are positive ways of using it and negative ways of using it.

"We want to look at people's values and the resons why they use alcohol. We can teach people how to use alcohol responsibly," she said.

THE PROJECT is designed to increase student knowledge about alcohol, encourage discussion of the issues surrounding its use and promote responsible drinking habits.

"The project will provide information about what alcohol does and doesn't do to the body, laws that relate, what a hangover is and how to ease it, responsible party-hosting and generally how to enjoy alcohol without discomfort or risk to yourself or others," Teener said.

First aid for alcohol abuse, assertiveness and pressure to use alcohol, stress management as it relates, values clarification, alternative beverages and alcohol in a life plan will also be discussed, she said.

This is the project's second year of funding from the Kansas Social and Rehabilitation Services. Last year the emphasis was on research, program planning and media organization.

NEXT FALL'S project will provide information to FONE Crisis Center and University Learning Network to assist students; provide factual material about alcohol through information sheets, advertisements, brochures, posters, films and public service announcements; and give programs in the K-State Union and to living groups.

The videotape "DWI: Drinking With Intelligence," produced on campus last year, is available to groups as part of the project.

"I thing we can do some neat things with the project as long as we stay away from the idea that alcohol is all bad and everyone should feel guilty," Teener said.

ULTIMATE WIZARDS

The "Ultimate" in Frisbee was achieved Saturday and Sunday in Manhattan.

The Aerial Wizards of Manhattan captured first place in the Tri-State Gold Cup Ultimate tournament at City Park.

Ultimate is a non-contact sport played with a Frisbee. It's non-contact in the sense that players don't intentionally tackle or physically block other players.

The game is played by seven members per team on a field 60 yards long, 40 yards wide with 20 yard end zones. The object is to score by passing the disc to a teammate in the end zone. Running with the disc is not allowed. The fast-moving game requires good field sense and superior throwing and catching abilities.

Six teams competed in the sub-regional tournament, sanctioned by the International Frisbee Assoication. The region includes Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska. Teams from Oklahoma and Nebraska were contacted and invited, but declined the invitation because of lack of players.

TEAMS FROM Topeka, Lawrence, Emporia, Hillsboro and Manhattan competed in the two-day event. The tourney was highlighted by the final round on Sunday afternoon matching the Heart of America Disc Club from Topeka against the Aerial Wizards.

The Wizards, undefeated in two days of competition, won 18-10 in Sunday's 40-minute match of Ultimate.

Winning the Ultimate competition qualfies the Aerial Wizards to compete in regional competition May 10-11 in Madison, Wis.

The winners received a team trophy, individual plaques and $100 to help defray expenses for the trip to Wisconsin.

The Wizards were 1978 state champions in Ultimate and are the oldest organized Frisbee club in the state.

The club was founded by Gordon Plank, senior in psychology, in 1976.

Canada is home now for resisters

TORONTO (AP)—Six years after U.S. guns fell silent in Vietnam, a lost battalion of American draft dodgers grows older, more Canadian and perhaps wiser in Toronto, their existence largely forgotten by the country they fled.

The men who jumped across the border a decade ago can go "home" again anytime under President Carter's 1977 amnesty. But many won't, either because home is here now, for better or worse, or because they feel that the injustices they found in the America of the 1960s are there still.

"Canadians are a more peaceful people," Thomas Hanes said. "I really love this country."

Said Harry Willcox, "I didn't think then that the United States was going to become any less militaristic and I don't think it has."

THEY ARE TWO of several thousand U.S. draft resisters and deserters believed still in Canada, vestiges of a time whose troubles are fading fast from the American memory. The numbers have never been firm.

Some 100,000 Americans refused military induction or deserted the armed forces during the Vietnam era, according to the U.S. government. Tens of thousands of these, perhaps most, ended up in Canada.

John Landau of the Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors in Philadelphia estimates that one in three remain in Canada.

Toronto was the focus of the exodus of American war protesters, and in the late 1960s and early 1970s many of them fraternized in a small expatriate community here. But they have long since gone their separate ways, teaching school, driving taxis, selling insurance.

Both Hanes and Willcox—not his real name, which he asked not be used—said fleeing the draft was not the only reason they came to Canada.

"I was totally fed up with the whole situation surrounding people's right to air their political and social grievances and the attitude toward it," said Hanes.

Hanes, a red-haired, clean-shaven Chicago native, received and rejected his draft notice in 1969 while doing graduate work in East Asian studies at the University of Toronto.

HE HAS REVISITED Chicago several times in the past two years and finds America changed from those turbulent years.

"Attitudes have changed...people were less antagonistic toward each other," Hanes said, talking over wine in his book-lined apartment. "I had remembered a great deal of tension between individuals of different age groups, between the races, in the United States when I left, and I did not see it at all when I revisited."

"The U.S. is more willing to look at persuasion rather than force to solve its international problems...and it doesn't necessarily always think of itself as morally correct anymore."

But Hanes says he remains "suspicious" of what the United States is capable of doing. He said this distrust is rooted in police repression he witnessed as an anti-war activist in Chicago in the late 1960s.

The soft-spoken Willcox shakes his head when asked whether he perceives the United States as a land transformed by the Vietnam War and other chastening experiences.

"The regimentation and the censorship of the whole range of ideas is still going on," he said. "There is repression of ideas in the schools, for example. There is a lot less underground press, alternative press."

Aging: memories resurface enriching growth, development

By KLEILA CARLSON
Collegian Reporter

Like a river of time, life's memories resurface as one ages to enrich growth and development.

"The present has always in it elements of the past. They are built-in dimensions of thought that blend with the present to create reality," said Bernice Neugarten, specialist in human development from the University of Chicago.

Neugarten spoke on "Aging and the Life Course: Myths and Realities" Thursday night in the K-State Union Little Theatre. Neugarten was the final speaker in a series sponsored by K-State's family and child development department.

"If one looks nowadays at the life course, we see the society in which we live becoming an aging society," Neugarten said. "The trend is to attain maturity rather than retain youthfulness."

ACCUMULATED research makes available a more realistic view of what aging is, she said. However, many myths are still present.

"The mass media have discovered adulthood just as they discovered old age," she said. "Journalists have distorted adulthood by treating it like a trauma—"middlescence."

As a result, people think there must be something wrong with them if they don't have a mid-life crisis, Neugarten said.

The timing of major life events—marriage, career, family—is changing drastically, she said. Marriages are breaking up more today than they did in the 1940s and '50s.

An increasing number of men and women are re-entering the educational system, which accounts for later-life career decisions. Because of these changes, people's expectations also are changing.

ADULTS HAVE an internalized set of expectations about what should happen and when; they tend to compare their expectations to those around them, Neugarten said.

"Life is not a staircase," she said. "An individual creates and recreates his life. The so-called stages of life—relating, responsibility, stock-taking and re-evaluation—are recurrent forms of adulthood."

Changes are a part of life, "there are internal changes that continue throughout adulthood, but no change is triggered by one single event," she said. "They are not measureable and they occur slowly."

Regardless of whether one is 20 years old, 40 or 60, people must use change for developing adult resources with no age links, she said.

'Cats unleash offense in scrimmage

By JIM BOEH
Collegian Reporter

K-State football coach Jim Dickey had several reasons to be pleased with Saturday's Purple-White intrasquad scrimmage at KSU Stadium.

Sheldon Paris, the No. 1 quarterback all spring, solidified his standing with the strong performance. He completed 13 of 24 passes for 186 yards for the White team, which lost 22-18.

Sports

"Sheldon continues to do well every time we practice," Dickey said.

The K-State running backs were also praised by Dickey.

"All of the backs have been running well," he said.

L.J. Brown scrambled for 115 yards on 13 carries, including a 25-yard touchdown run.

Roosevelt Duncan, Brown's running mate on the White squad, added 55 yards and a touchdown.

Purple squad runners Keith Dearring and Darryl Black were equally effective.

Dearring, a freshman with 4.4 speed in the 40-yard dash, picked up 97 yards while Black had 74 yards.

BLACK scored the first touchdown of the game on a 35-yard run and Dearring scored the last touchdown of the game to give the Purple squad the victory.

Receivers John Liebe and Phil Pickard of the White team combined for 10 catches and more than 200 yards.

The duo also combined for a 68-yard touchdown pass on a flea flicker play. Pickard came around on what appeared to be a reverse, but pulled up and threw the bomb to Liebe.

Dickey praised the entire K-Stae receiver corps.

"We are rich in receivers," he said. "I don't think anyone in the country has any better group than ours."

Purple squad quarterbacks Bob Daniels, Darrell Dickey and Paul Hobbs also impressed Dickey.

"They've all come out on different days and looked good," Dickey said.

Defensively, Dickey said he was a little more concerned, but was pleased wih the play of the linebackers.

TIM COLE, Tyrone Crews, Mark Mackey, Vic Koenning, and Tom Faerber all had five or more tackles.

Dickey said "I feel good, but you're never totally satisfied, because we're continually moving players from position to position," he said. "This was an excellent practice for us, we needed it very badly."

Spring drills end this week, culminated by the annual Varsity-Alumni game Saturday.

Oklahoma smashes K-State to sweep four-game series

The Wildcat baseball team continued its recent skid Saturday and Sunday by losing four games to the University of Oklahoma in Norman.

Friday night, the 'Cats took an early 1-0 lead, but then fell victim to the pitching of Sooner Tom Kohl, who limited K-State to four singles.

Oklahoma scored three runs in the third inning and three in the fourth for a 6-1 victory.

The Big 8 Western Division opponents battled to a 3-3 tie for 13 innings in the second game, which was finally called due to darkness.

The game was finished Sunday afternoon, and Oklahoma rode the strong pitching of Scott Gardner to win 4-3 in the 14th inning.

Gardner continued his dominance of the 'Cats in the first game of Sunday's doubleheader, which the Sooners won 15-1. Gardner ended the day with two wins to his credit, while K-State's Tom Harvey lost twice.

The Sooners completed their sweep with a 7-0 win in the nightcap.

Oklahoma sent 10 men to the plate in the first inning and scored four runs after the inning should have ended.

What looked like a third out backfired when designated hitter Phil Barringer of Oklahoma grounded to second baseman Jeff Scherrer, who bobbled the ball, allowing a run to score and runners to advance. Then Sooner Brian Stafford sent a Don Waller pitch over the right field wall for a three-run home run.

Meanwhile, Sooner pitcher Jim Friday gave up only two hits.

The wins raised the Sooner record to 6-6 in conference play, one game behind division-leading Oklahoma State. K-State is now 1-11 in the division conference and 17-19-1 overall.

Phoenix rips Kings; takes 2-1 series lead

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP)—The Phoenix Suns got 22 points from forward Walter Davis and a total of 51 from the bench, including 16 from guard Mike Bratz, to defeat the Kansas City Kings, 108-93, in their NBA Western Conference semi-final playoff game Sunday afternoon.

Phoenix leads the best of seven series, 2-1, going into game No. 4 Wednesday at Kansas City. The fifth game is set for Friday in Phoenix.

The Suns built their biggest lead of the game in the third quarter as Bratz hit a 20-footer at the buzzer to put the Suns up by 21 points, 90-69.

The Kings shot only 29 perent in the third quarter, hitting on seven of 24 shots from the field.

In the final quarter, the Kings could cut the Suns margin to only 13 points en route to their fourth loss out of four tries this season on the Phoenix home court.

The Kings, who were led by Otis Birdsong and Scott Wedman, both with 22 points, had built a 20-10 lead with 5:04 left in the opening quarter.

However, the Kings then went cold and the Suns came on to outscore them, 17-4, to take a 27-24 lead going into the second quarter.

The last time Kansas City had the lead in the game was with 1:32 left in the first quarter.

Congratulations
Darren

Kansas Relays damp, disappointing

By CINDY FRIESEN
Asst. Sports Editor

LAWRENCE—It's nearing 1 p.m. Saturday afternoon. The last six hours of the 54th Kansas Relays are about to begin.

Sunny skies and 70-degree temperatures have replaced the wet, northerly winds that plagued the performances of athletes Friday.

The familiar voice of Max Faulkenstein booms from the public address system:

"Ladies and gentlemen, the winners of the KU intramural 440-yard relay are the Daisy Hill Striders...We have a few items that were left on the field last night: a set of keys, a stick pen, a baton and some medals."

As little as five years ago, medal winners would clutch their awards, knowing they shared something with Relay greats such as Jim Ryun and Bruce Jenner.

But Saturday, some athletes left their medals lying on the artificial turf infield, only to be publicly reminded to claim them before beginning the journey home.

"We came here thinking this would be like past KU Relays," K-State men's track coach Mike Ross said. "Mercy, some of these relays have been very cheap.

"We're going to have to take a strong look at the KU Relays before coming here next year," he said.

ALTHOUGH KU is in the heart of the Big 8, three conference schools, including Big 8 Indoor Champion Missouri, were absent from the roster of competitors, opting instead for newer Texas invitational meets.

Relay officials might like to blame the weather for the absence of these and other teams, but coaches who contemplate staying away next year won't allow it.

True, the wet track and infield have narrowed chances for record-breaking performances, but with events such as junior high and grade school relays, clutter has overshadowed the world class caliber displayed in some of the famous races.

"I remember it used to be they had quality event after quality event and you could sit here and watch two hours of quality track on Saturday afternoon," Ross said.

K-State women's coach Barry Anderson agreed with Ross' evaluation of the Relays, but performances by several of his relay teams and Jeanne Daniels first place 48-6¼ shot put made the trip worthwhile, he said.

"This is the best one we've had this year," Anderson said.

"I'm very impressed with Jeanne. This is an indication of how good she can be. She could be one of the outstanding shot putters in the country," he said. Anderson also was pleased with Linda Long's fifth place shot put.

IN ONE of the closer races of the day, the women's mile relay, Wanda Trent began her anchor leg trailing Iowa State by 15 yards. But Trent, in an outstanding 54.8 split, kicked down the home stretch to finish eight hundredths of a second short of the Cyclones' record-breaking 3:44.57 time.

Earlier in the afternoon, Trent, Pat Osborn, Lorraine Davidson and Freda Hancock combined to win the 440-yard relay in 47.73. K-State also took third in the sprint medley relay.

In the high jump, Diane Moeller tied for seventh, while Janice Stuckey took third in the discus.

The name Perbeck appeared twice in the javelin results with Deb taking eighth and her brother Frank winning in the men's division.

Frank, a senior who hadn't won at the Relays since he was in high school, made a 237-11 toss in the rain, while teammate Joe Bramlage's 228-8 throw took second place.

Also on Friday, Pat Blackburn and Mark Sageser took second and fifth in the Larry Winn 3,000 meter steeplechase. Doug Knauss went 16-0¼ in the pole vault for a fifth place and Ray Bradley threw a fifth place 55-6½ shot put.

Sports Briefs

Softball team goes 1-1 in tourney

Determining which team was No. 1 in K-State's softball mini-tournament Saturday was rather difficult. All three teams went 1-1 in the tourney's round-robin format.

In their first action, the 'Cats lost 2-1 to Northwest Missouri State, after Nebraska defeated Northwest Missouri in the day's first game.

K-State's only run came in sixth inning when Lisa Packard singled, stole second, was sacrificed to third by Terri Mah and driven home by Paula Todd.

The Wildcats' victory came in the last game of the tournament, as they defeated Nebraska 11-10. Eva Schmitt and Packard each had home runs.

Women's tennis team loses twice

The K-State women's tennis team again failed to get its first victory of the season, losing 9-0 to Missouri and 7-2 to Stephens College Saturday in Columbia, Mo.

"It wasn't as close as the 9-0 score indicates," Coach David Hacker said about the Missouri defeat. "We won only 11 games out of nine matches."

The two K-State winners against Stephens were Laurie Friesenborg and Nancy Duffin in singles competition.

The team's last action of the season will begin Thursday at the Missouri Valley Tournament in Columbia.

Bunker finishes third in golf tourney

The University of Kansas men's golf team took first place in K-State quadrangular tournament Saturday at the Manhattan Country Club.

Iowa State finished just one stroke behind, while K-State and the KU B-team tied for third.

K-State's Scott Bunker shot a 73 to finish as third medalist.

Boston completes sweep of Royals

BOSTON (AP)—George Scott drove in four runs with a pair of singles and Mike Torrez settled down after a shaky start for a four-hitter Sunday as the Boston Red Sox completed a three-game series sweep with a 6-0 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

The Royals are now 5-8 on the season.

complishment Saturday was Kevin Sloan's second place 25-2½ leap in the long jump.

Injuries continued to jinx the men's relay teams, as Willie Major pulled a hamstring three-fourths the way through the men's 100-meter run.

With Major out, K-State had to scratch in both the 440 and mile relays.

Ross was upset that K-State's Big 8 Indoor champion Tim Davis, who took third in the 1,500-meter run, wasn't allowed to run in the special mile event.

"Those small irritations add up. You find yourself thinking, if they (KU) had Tim Davis here, he'd be in the mile," Ross said. "Maybe as a professional, they shouldn't get to you, but since it's at KU, they do."

Talk To SGA

SGA ★ NEWS from Greg Musil, Student Body President

NICHOLS GYM—We need to keep the momentum going for preserving Nichols. ONCE AGAIN, programs will be held each Wednesday at 12:30 p.m. in front of Nichols. These will include the "Not Ready For K-State Players" and some musical groups. If you would like to help, call Tom Hollinberger.

SUMMER—If you want to help K-State become a better university there are several activities which could be done over the summer. Visit with students in your hometown and tell them about KSU. Also, write your home legislators and encourage them to review KSU's budget for possible funding shortages. Especially important is to emphasize the under-funding of our library system.

OFF-CAMPUS—If your apartment complex or any group would like to help organize a town meeting to talk to SGA about their needs and concerns, call us (532-6541).

INTERVIEWS—Interviews will be concluded within the next two weeks. Committees which are still being interviewed include:

Jeffries: draft needed; just not sure of form

By LUKE BROWN
Staff Writer

Even though he is convinced the United States needs the return of the draft, Jim Jefffries, Republican 2nd District Congressman, is not sure which form he favors.

In remarks made during a speech Thursday at Wamego, Jeffries said the volunteer army has failed.

Jeffries said the number of recruits is down and the U.S. has only enough personnel to last for 90 days in an emergency.

He said he did not support the proposal for compulsory registration until a national emergency when the draft would be reinstated.

"With that form, where do you get your training?" he said.

When asked about the draft form that would require everyone to give a year of national service, Jeffries said "that might be a possibility." However, he stressd he had still not made up his mind.

Jeffries said he was in favor of the decontrol of oil prices because it would offer an incentive to search for more oil, especially offshore.

HOWEVER, he said he is not in favor of the windfall profits tax on oil companies proposed by President Carter.

"The windfall profits tax would be counterproductive in Kansas because there are no major oil companies in Kansas," Jeffries said.

Jeffries also said he was in favor of the Amtrak route changes that would give Manhattan passenger rail service on a line stretching between Kansas City and Denver. The changes would, if passed by Congress, take Amtrak from southern Kansas.

While answering questions, Jeffries said he was in favor of a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget and had co-sponsored a bill to that effect; he favors limiting the time a U.S. representative could serve to six terms; and he is against the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty II.

Write your legislator; Keys needs the mail

WASHINGTON (AP)—Jim Jeffries has been a freshman Kansas congressman for more than three months, but he says a post office in his district still doesn't believe he won the election.

Jeffries says mail sent to his Topeka legislative office is being forwarded to Martha Keys, whom Jeffries unseated in the November general election. She forwards the mail to Jeffries' Washington office, which forwards it back to Topeka where the cycle starts all over again.

PERSONAL

SUSAN BROWN—Our afferent neurons have fired. Our vasilar membrane is tired. When we heard of your birth, we all thought of your worth, and want you to know you're admired. Happy birthday—(How does that tickle your tympanic membrane?) Sister Cochlea and her hair cells. (140)

M.L. OCT. 20th, Homecoming, Friday 13th—Champagne breakfast, the cave, football games, fireside, Riunite, Backgammon, Vail, Feb. 28th, Lincoln (times 3). "Just the way you are", etc. We've come a long way since that night at Mel's! I love you. Little Girl. P.S. Thanks A.G. & B.B.! (140)

JOHN BRIAN—Hope you had a good one! Mary Beth. (140)

MOM, JUDY Wudy and P.C.—Here's to let ya know what a great time I had last week. I can hardly wait for next year! Thanks for putting up with me and all my garbage. Four pack rats in one room is just too many. Mom—remember Mr. Blue, Happy and Shirley. Judy Mudy—Let's go for another Guiness World Record! P.C.—Here's to "California Dreamin" and flyin' high in the sky. Love to y'all. Hig. (144)

I'M LOOKING for an attractive, affectionate woman to complete a two couple group going to the Doobie's concert on the 27th. She must like to "smoke" but must not smoke. Think about it! Fitting females should come to 329 Moore Hall to converse. Paul. (140-142)

SIG EP, sorry I missed our wedding. You know how things go when you're busy. Let's try again. Our kids will still look like angels. Future Clark. (140)

KATHY R.—Harold is coming in town for the wedding. Meet him at Kite's this Wednesday at 5:15. (140)

TO THE men of P.K.A.: Thank you so much for the wonderful breakfast. You make us very proud to be your sweethearts! Love, your Little Sisters. (140)

KEV: THREE years today and a lifetime to go. Thanks for everything. Love you forever. J A G (140)
